The World's Crisis

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY BELIEVERS IN THE Immediate Coming of Jesus Christ!

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

JOSEPH H. TURNER, PRINTER.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For e Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

Ordinances of the Church.

BY B. MATHEWSON.

BRO. GRANT:—I was much gratified to see "A Lover of Order" in a late number of the Crisis, endeavoring to "stir up" the "pure mind" of the church to "keep the ordinances as" they were "delivered" to her. 1 Cor. 11: 2.

When the church becomes lax, relative to the Ordinances the Savior was pleased to set in his house—attended with a specific caution as to their perpetuity until He "come" to receive them to his immediate presence—they evince a loss of that "savor" that preserves and restrains a corrupt and lawless generation! Where this is the case, depend upon it, there is a great screw loose either in the head or heart.

I am aware, however, that many will continue to pass this over as a trivial matter, making use of the hackneyed expressions—"O it's no matter if the heart is only right"—"it savors too much of the tithing of mint, anise, and cummin"—"straining at a gnat," &c., as if attention to minor duties was condemned or repudiated by the Savior, when His word assures us the opposite is true.

Hear Him. "These ought ye to have done," that is, judgment, mercy, and faith, and not to leave the other undone;" that is, the tithing of mint, &c.

When (what some please to term) the "lesser" duties of christianity are performed with exact faithfulness, we may set it down, that those of larger moment are executed in the same manner.

But when small matters are done at the halves, look for larger ones to be discharged in the same manner. Listen to the Savior's words, and see if this is not in harmony with his teaching; "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much."

But some will say, "it is not convenient to have a table set with unleavened cakes, and come around it after the ordinary manner of taking a meal." Well, let us make it convenient then. Every church has the power thus to do. What if we subject ourselves to some *in*convenience to obey Him who submitted to the inconvenience of leaving glory ineffable, to groan in Gethsemane, to expire on Calvary to expiate our guilt, and to raise us to the dignity and companionship of angels and of Himself?

Did Christ evince any solicitude in preparing a proper place, when he instituted his supper? Ans. He sent two men (whose time, we may conclude, was as valuable as any in modern times,) to a good man, who had a room properly furnished for the occasion, "to make ready."

We do not find Peter and John dallying about "trouble" and "inconvenience!" No. They never demurred when Jesus commanded. They knew their imperative obligations were, the denying of self and bearing the cross daily—cost what it would—if indeed they would inherit "eternal life."

Those who consider the ordinances of God of small moment would do well to consider, whether an all-wise and benevolent Parent enjoins anything unnecessary upon His children. Does he not know what outward acts are best calculated to revive and stimulate their love for Himself? And shall we poor erring mortals attempt an amendment of what God has immutably established?

Under the old dispensation, the most minute particularity must be observed relative to their ordinances. When God said—"Take a lamb without blemish," one with any blemish would not subserve; tho' there were some who presumed to do it, and in so doing brought upon themselves the malediction of Heaven. Mal. 1: 13, 19.

When God showed Moses a pattern for a Tabernacle, He admonished him to "make all things according to the pattern"—no deviation whatever. Turn to Mal. 3: 7, and read the complaints of the Most High against His professed people for going away from His "Ordinances." Then bethink yourself of Zachariah and Elizabeth," who "walked in all His commandments and Ordinances blameless." Then ruminate, if you please, upon the eulogy bestowed on the Corinthian church for having kept the "Ordinances" as they were given them by the apostle.

Why will some argue that the command relative to the Lord's supper is not imperative, because not connected with a threat? Remember, Jesus was speaking to His "friends," and His test of friendship was the following—"Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." Does not that benevolent parent consider his command as authoritative when he says,—"Do this piece of work," as if he added,—"I'll punish you if you do it not?"—Would not a child, accustomed to obedience, consider it just as binding? And would not that parent's affection be increased towards the child, when he saw him performing it just according to the pattern he had set for him, instead of professing to make amendment when the true cause of alteration was indolence, selfwill, or to gain the applause of the bystanders? I know some are so organized, that "order," to them, is esteemed of little consequence. We see this developed in all their works both temporal and spiritual. But, beloved, I trust this class is small with us, and that there are enough in the church of God to see that "everything is done decently and in order."

We must conclude that the law-book of the church decides in favor of unleavened cakes, and coming around the table, after the ordinary manner of taking a meal.

And then, again, what disorder has prevailed in the world relative to the ordinance of baptism! How many have tried to evade this ordinance on account of "inconvenience." They could not brook the inconvenience of being "buried with Christ in baptism!" It was so unpleasant to be laid beneath the yielding wave—wet clothes, and the appearing in this dcshabille before certain spectators, &c., caused them to inquire, "will not some other way do, if my heart is only right?" If your heart were right, if you had submitted to implicit obedience, I trust you would never have propounded that question. When we see a plain "thus saith the Lord," and try to evade it, or make some alteration to suit our convenience, we may rest assured we are in a by-path, and shall never get into the strait one, only by retracing our steps as far as where we promised implicit obedience, and profound submission to the God of the Bible!

Let us remember that the performance of certain duties, our particular organization may render agreeable, will not make us christians; but obeying "every word" that God hath spoken, makes us Christ-like.

Those commands that appear the more repugnant to our nature, are the very ones above all others to be complied with immediately. Nothing will so soon subdue the carnal propensities, and impart a docile, child like spirit, as submitting to those commands you most dreaded. Try it!

And let us not treat God's ordinances contemptuously, by neglecting to observe them just according to the pattern! How can we expect His smile and approbation in thus doing?

The Necessity of Afflictions.

BY J. HOWELL.

It is not unfrequently the case, that objects which receive our undivided attention come to embrace our supreme affection, and hence steal our hearts from God. Thus is it with the miser. His undivided attention to devise the best means to secure the greatest amount of gold, makes it very evident that gold is his god.

So also is it with him who is determined to secure the honor of this world. It is the object of his supreme affection, and everything must become subservient to it.

Said one, after failing in several projects—"I will be in congress or in hell within five years." And although previously very pious, everything was made to subserve this one purpose. He went to Congress, for a distant State. Returning from thence to his home with his health very much impaired, he suddenly fell to the tomb, the victim of consumption. He secured the honor he sought, and the sequel will be developed in the judgment scenes. How many scenes like these might be depicted, affording a sad history of the shipwrecks of faith. And had we nothing to check us in our course, the annals of faith would be really appalling. But Divine Providence has wisely arranged the affairs of this dispensation. Pain and pleasure, joy and sorrow, peace and trouble, shame and glory go hand in hand, and hence lead us to reflection.

I am rejoiced that trials are here. Were it not so, how our hearts would become wedded to this state of things. Trial is natural to this life, and hence, no attainment of piety can exempt us from it. Indeed, it is essential to the proper formation of christian character, and to our discovery of the fact, that the God of redemption is alone worthy of our supreme affections. See the man of pleasure as he presses forward to attain that, which, to him, is the acme of all happiness. How earnest is the expression of his countenance. He leaps to the goal—is pierced with a thorn, and upbraids himself for his folly.

Note that man of business, as he precipitantly rushes through the marts of commerce. What anxiety is depicted in his countenance. His eye flashing with intense interest. He heeds no one. He has but one thought—one feeling—one object of pursuit. His eye, tinged with its color, is riveted. His energies are all engrossed in its attainment. It has his whole heart. His hand is extended to grasp it, and in it bursts a bubble filled with bitter disappointment. Now he has time for reflection.

See that dear boy—the rejoicing of his parents. At first they do not perceive any undue affection conferred him. But from the hiding-place of infancy emerges the talent and genius, until then undiscovered. Their affections twine around him, gathering strength every hour, until their piety is in jeopardy. The right of God is disputed—his claim forgotten. The supreme affection of the parents has passed from the Creator to the creation of his hand; but He is full of mercy. He would save the parents,—yea, and child too. Disease invades its frame. Now behold the devotion of the parents; but it is too late.—Death plucks thy little one from thee, directed by a wise Providence. God has won thy heart by teaching thee a lesson of human frailty.

The above thoughts were suggested to my mind by the following "beautiful figure," from which all may learn a valuable lesson:—

"BEAUTIFUL FIGURE.—Two painters were employed to fresco the walls of a magnificent cathedral; both stood on a rude scaffold, constructed for the purpose some forty feet from the floor. One of them was so intent upon his work that he became wholly absorbed in admiration, and stood off from the picture, gazing with intense delight.

Forgetting where he was, he moved backwards slowly, surveying critically the work of his pencil, until he had neared the very edge of the plank upon which he stood.

At this critical moment his companion turned suddenly, and, almost frozen with horror, beheld his imminent peril; another instant and the enthusiast would be precipitated upon the pavement beneath; if he spoke to him it was certain death—if he held his peace it was equally sure.

Suddenly he regained his presence of mind and seizing a wet brush, flung it against the wall, splattering the beautiful picture with unsightly blotches of coloring. The painter flew forward, and turning upon his friend with fierce imprecations, but, startled at his ghastly face he listened to the recital of his danger, looked shudderingly over the dread space below and with tears of gratitude blessed the hand that saved him.

So, said a preacher, we sometimes get absorbed in looking upon the pictures of the world, and in contemplating them, step backwards, unconscious of our peril, when the Almighty dashes out the images and we spring forward to lament their destruction—into the outstretched arms of mercy, and are saved."

The New Year.

G. W. G.

BELOVED BRN.:—Another year has passed and our Savior has not come. We are still in this vale of tears, subject to trials, disappointments, sickness and death.—Many of us hoped to have been in the kingdom before this time, enjoying the presence of our God and king, wearing the immortal crows, shouting praises and hallelujahs to Jehovah; but alas, here we are, groaning for deliverance, while many are wishing each other a long and "happy new year."

To us, who sigh for "better things," "The New Year" is not hailed with joy, except that we are permitted to live, and are not within the icy arms of death! No, dear brethren and sisters, we do not hail another long, tedious year of trials and sorrows, but we would welcome the jubilee year, the King of kings, the glorious crown, and the better land. But we are not left without consolation and hope, for our "redemption draweth nigh." Then let us not be weary in well doing, nor faint by the way.

Let us all be faithful, praying for one another to endure a little longer, finishing the race that we have begun, and hoping for speedy deliverance.

God Loves Us.

EDWIN BURNHAM.

Yes, he loves us. What blessed proofs has he given us of his love! All our life long has he been continually commanding the blessings of his goodness upon us. No mark of favor calculated to advance our highest interests, has been withheld from us. In our going out and coming in, our lying down and rising up, in all our ways has his tender care been upholding our feeble frame, and preserving our uncertain life. And at the present moment, he makes our bed, sets our table, provides our home, surrounds us with friends, and scatters the expressions of his infinite benevolence all around us. What acceptable promises has he made to us in relation to the future! He has declared, that if we put our trust in him, we "shall want no good thing"—that he will provide food, and raiment, and all the comforts of life for us as we may need them. But how great are the proofs of his love to us in the moral and spiritual provision he has made for us!

He has given his Son to die for us, and with him freely offers us all things, desirable for us to possess, here and in the world to come. What sweet promises does his word contain for our consolation! How blessedly does his spirit help our weaknesses and our infirmities, and cheer and comfort our hearts. And he will, according to his faithful promise, prepare for us, if we submit ourselves to him, an eternal kingdom of changeless glory. O amazing goodness! And what return shall we make for all this exhibition of infinite favor? Shall not our hearts melt in contrition for all our sins? Shall we not cast ourselves down in the dust at his feet, virtually, and wash them with tears of deep penitence for all that we have ever thought, said or done to grieve his holy Spirit? Shall we not yield up all the powers and faculties of soul and body to his reasonable service eternally? O loving God, seal me forever thine!

The Human Will.

BY Z. CAMPBELL.

"I seek not mine own will, hut the will of my Father which hath sent me." John 5: 30.

We have shown in a former article that every living creature has an organized body, and every living body has a living head. The head contains the brain, the sensorium of the creature man, from whence spring all his thoughts and actions; hence the power that moves the body.

Now concerning the church of God, it is one body, having many members, organized under one living Head who presides over and governs all the members of the body. This great living Head has said—"I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me." It is evident, therefore, that as the head has no will of its own, the body should also have no will of its own. This brings us to the grand difficulty; almost every member has a will of its own. This is the insuperable barrier to the smooth course of true christianity. The human will, the anti-christian monster, the enemy of God, and Satan's most successful engine.

It was to gratify the human will that our first parents sinned in Eden, and brought death into the world, with all the ills that flesh is heir to; and it is still the gratification of this will that keeps us from God.

But, says the christian, my will is to do the will of God.

Right; but the will of God you can never know until your own will is nailed to the cross and taken out of the way. Here lies the difficulty; you are willing to do the will of God, but determined to make his will harmonize with your own. This should not be; we should mould our own wills into the will of God, and try to make ourselves more like God, and not to make God like ourselves.

The devil has drawn so thick a veil over our eyes that but few can see the strength of the human will. Some professors do not believe in the second personal coming of Christ, and contend the scriptures do not teach it. True, the scripture does not teach it to them, and the only reason is, their will is that he should not so come in like manner as he went up. Others cannot read the unconscious state of the dead in the Bible, because their will is to live while they are dead. It is not until we are as willing that a thing should be one way as the other, that we are capable of judging between truth and error.

Take heed, and beware of the human will. Never make up your mind that a thing is true or false until you are sure you have no will about it. The principal reason why the Bible is so differently understood, is because men have different opinions, and this is unavoidable in this state of things; but he is a liar; the human will is at the bottom of all these differences.

Many who read this, will recollect they once opposed truths which they now believe, and are blessed in believing; and they will recollect too that while opposing what they now believe, they had a will that these things should not be so; but as soon as their own were removed, they saw the truth clearly.

Now such may have a further will which remains uncrucified; if so, there may be further truths which they do not believe. The Jews did not believe that Christ was the Messiah, even when he rose from the dead, and the reason was, they would not have it so. It was not for want of evidence that they did not believe, it was the want of a will to believe. Now if our will shut our eyes to truth, are we not as guilty as they?

In all our religious exercises we cannot be too careful to keep under the human will. Many advocate even the truth in a wilful manner; we have nothing to do but to advocate the truth in righteousness, and leave God to bless it according to his own will. Many pray with a will of their own, without a grain of faith as big as a mustard-seed. They pray as though they thought God was bound to execute their wills irrespective of his own. Some pray for a blessing and are careful to tell the Almighty through what vehicle, and at what time, place and manner to send it. We are only commanded to ask in faith; we should leave the manner, the way and means with God.

The human will is opposed to God, and must be taken out of the way before the church can be one with Christ, as he and the Father are one. When this is done, the church will be all of one mind and one will, even the will of the Father which will be done on earth as it is in heaven. And although this perfect state is not until the kingdom comes, yet the true Christian is so by sinking into the will of God in all things; having for his motto—I am the clay, and thou art the potter. He that subdues his own will does more than he who subdues empires. Alexander, the great, subdued kingdoms, but had not power to subdue his own will. And we have no power to do it in and of ourselves, but help is laid on One who is mighty to save, and by his grace assisting us, we can overcome all things.

The will is a stubborn thing; we all see it has kept us from believing truth, and we ought to be careful that it does not keep us from believing it still. None of us dare say we have all the truth, we never can know until our own will is lost in the will of God.

I do not write this to induce any one to believe as I do; God forbid: nevertheless, let every one first examine themselves, and see if they are just as willing things should be as they believe. If they are, and I am also, we shall all agree, for I should come to their opinion, or they would to mine; for aside from our own wills, the Bible teaches all alike, and the spirit all alike, but to drink into the Holy Spirit, is to sink into the will of God.

This is indeed a happy state, a state of perfect resignation; in which if it rains or shines, we are equally happy, and if the angry waves of trouble roll, they break harmlessly at our feet; if there are impassable mountains on either hand, a sea before us, and an angry foe behind, we have nothing to do, but to "stand still and see the salvation of God."

Little children, you know not how much you may enjoy when you get your own will securely nailed to the cross. Just think of it; the Son of God, the Savior of lost man, no will of his own! No; not my will, but Thine be done.

Had you not rather it would be a fair day when a good brother comes among you to preach, than to be stormy?

"Yes."

Then you have a will, and if it storms, God has crossed your will, and he is to blame for sending the storm, or else you are to blame for having a will about it.

And how is it with you, fellow-laborer in the vineyard, had you not a little rather your appointments would fall on pleasant weather, in which you get a full audience, and full collection?

Then you have a will, and [illegible]

that God takes care of the sparrows without the aid of a contribution-box, and you account yourself of less value than a sparrow. True, the laborer is worthy of his hire; but we do wrong when we plan out the way for God to give us our hire. Leave it all with the Lord, and trust Him in a storm, with empty pockets as well as in the sunshine of affluence, for he doeth all things well, and will not bend his will to ours, but we must bend ours to His.

I am satisfied that we should enjoy more; be better christians, and have less strife among us, if we had less will of our own, and more of the will of God.

I hope some of the little flock, who have more time and talents, will take up this subject and enlarge upon it, and spread it before the children in its true light. There has been, to my knowledge, but little said on it, and therefore but little attention paid to it.

I believe we are soon coming to a time in which we shall need a more perfect resignation to the Divine will. And, brethren, let us rally on this point; resign ourselves implicitly to the will of God in all things.

I admit that it is but a late thing that I have learned, in a measure, the art of resignation; and what I have been too foolish to learn in prosperity, I have learned in adversity, in the dear school of experience, having lived three years in the fire of afflictions, the last resort of the chemist to purge off the dross, and bring out the pure metal. How far I have been refined in the crucible is best known to God; but I have learned that I had a stubborn will to be subdued, which for a long time I did not know I possessed. And now I think this is the case with many others; for when we see our own faults we see the faults of others; for we are all of one piece of fallen nature. And in proportion as we know ourselves, we know our brethren; and by analyzing one drop of the ocean, we ascertain of what the whole is composed.

Many are ready to thank God for prosperity, and a few ready to thank him for adversity. I have more reason to thank him for afflictions than for prosperity, for the former has led me to resign my will in a measure, and to trust in God. This I believe is the design of God in afflicting his people, to bring them to a resignation to his will.

May grace, peace, and mercy abide with the little flock until the kingdom comes.

From sister S. M. Dudley.

Bro. Grant:—While engaged this evening perusing the epistles of those of like precious faith, through the columns of the Crisis, my soul has been strengthened and encouraged.

I never felt more like sacrificing all for Christ than I do at the present time. If we love our Savior, we shall delight in keeping his sayings, and obeying his commands. I feel to praise the Lord for the way in which he has hitherto led me, although he has often chastened me, yet I trust it has served to wean me from earth and enabled me to set my affections on things above. What a blessed privilege, to be an heir of God, and joint heir with Jesus Christ, to an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for the pure in heart. Let us be careful lest we grieve the spirit of God and thereby fall into condemnation. It is of great importance that we strive to cultivate a spirit of prayer and watchfulness, lest our minds be drawn away from God, and partake in a measure of the evil influences to which we are all exposed.

The enemy is endeavoring in every possible way to distract and destroy the humble child of God, but if our minds are staid on him, we shall be kept in perfect peace. Let us seek to know and do the will of God, and not cast away our confidence in him, considering he is faithful in the performance of all his promises, and in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

Although we have expected and hoped ere this to have seen our loved ones who sleep in Jesus, come forth from their dusty beds clothed with immortality and eternal life, yet, if faithful a little longer, we shall yet behold them bursting the confines of the grave, and shouting victory over death. O what a blessed thought! the dead in Christ shall live again no more to die! My prayer is,—"O Lord, hasten the time."

Beloved brethren and sisters, let us gird up the loins of our minds and examine ourselves in the light of God's truth, seeking the aid of the spirit to enlighten us, that we may be enabled to overcome, and have an inheritance among the sanctified when our blessed Savior appears, which cannot be far in the future.

From your sister longing for immortality and eternal life.

Susan M. Dudley.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 7, 1857.

The New Year.

We wish all our readers a happy New Year. We earnestly desire and pray that the peace of God may rule in your hearts, for "great peace have they that love thy law and nothing shall offend them." May such peace be yours forever.

We doubt not that a large number of our patrons have resolved to live better the coming year, if spent on this earth, than during the past; but be assured that the opposer of all righteousness will not suffer you to progress in divine life without an earnest struggle; he will dispute every inch, but if you put on the whole armor of the Lord, trusting in him, you are sure of success, and a final triumph in the everlasting kingdom now emphatically near.

If we would grow up into Christ, we must guard every avenue by which our arch foe may gain admittance to destroy our hope. His wiles are various and numerous. No effort will be spared on his part to drown us in perdition. When we are not praying we need to be watching. This is truly an age of apostasy, but may you and I, dear reader, be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation.

Let us be christians in the fullest sense, that we may by our lives show Christ to the world. It is not doctrine and theory that is needed so much as holy living. May the Lord help us to make our entire consecration of time, talents and property to his service, and enable us to remember that we are not our own, but bought with a price; and how thankful we should be that the purchase was made by our best friend, the Prince of peace.

Brethren and sisters, can it be that we shall knowingly grieve such a friend? My Lord forbid it. Let us begin anew with the year, and from this time have but one object in view, and that the glory of God.

I do feel resolved in the strength of Jesus to be good, and avoid all evil speaking, backbiting, jesting, idle words, vain and wicked imaginations, which are an abomination to the Lord, and to keep myself unspotted from the world. Praise the Lord for the narrow way of peace that leads directly to our Eden-home. My prospect for glory was never better than now, my hope never brighter nor witness clearer. Jesus is mine and I am his. We shall see him soon. O hallelujah, we are almost home.

Chickopee Falls.

We are happy to say that our late meetings at this place were among the best we ever enjoyed. We commenced Wednesday evening, Dec. 24th, and closed the following Lord's day evening.

Some thirteen years since, the religious interest in this place was very great, and a large number were happily converted to the Lord. Since that time, many changes have introduced some discouraging circumstances which have caused the weak to stumble, and the strong to faint by the way; but thank the good Lord there is a happy change. Would that more of Jesus' friends could have shared this feast with us. Our beginning was small, but the end glorious.

Our first meeting was at Bro. Smith's in company with a few of the Lord's dear children, several of whom came from Springfield, a distance of five miles, to join in the worship of our blessed Redeemer. While the giddy throng were merry in the sportive dance and festival glee, we felt sure that our joy in the Lord was sweeter far than all that can be found in palace halls, or sportive pastime of the proud and gay. We feasted on the heavenly manna, and parted for the night with a rejoicing hope.

Thursday, P. M., and evening, and Friday evening, we had interesting meetings at the public house of Mr. Goodrich, who kindly entertained us and gave us the free use of his hall. The audience listened with the best of attention while we endeavored to show them that the doctrine of the world's conversion is a fable, and that the Savior is to come personally to this world again, to raise the dead and set up his everlasting kingdom, and also, that the signs indicate the great event very near, "even at the doors."

Saturday evening we commenced meetings at Market Hall, where they were continued to the close. Much interest was awakened on the last mentioned evening, while examining the account of the creation of man. We endeavored to show that man is mortal, and was driven from the tree of life in the garden of Eden, lest he should "eat and live forever;" and that immortality is not received until the Lord comes the second time, and raises the dead, and changes the righteous living. The Congregational minister and some spiritualists were present and offered objections to our position, and we think the examination of the subject will result in the spread of the truth.

We met Lord's day morning at 9 1-2 o'clock for a love-feast, and had a blessed season conversing with Jesus. Some 28 came from Springfield, strong in the Lord.

Our meetings continued to increase in interest to the close of the evening meeting, when a large number of the congregational church were present in company with their minister, besides many from other churches. The hall was very much crowded, and quite a number were unable to find seats. During the meeting we felt the approving smiles of our Father in heaven.

At the close of the evening discourse we sat down to the table to commemorate the death and sufferings of our dear Savior. The scene will not soon be forgotten by those present. It was a solemn and heavenly interview, when saints were comforted and sinners wept at the sight. We parted with a full determination to live nearer to the Lord than ever.

Bro. Ladd, the pastor of the Church at Springfield, was present at most of our meetings, and, by the help of the Lord, rendered efficient aid. The church in Springfield are in a very prosperous condition. The candle of the Lord shines in that place.

We left Chickopee Falls early Monday morning in company with Bro. Levi Allen, who carried us to the cars at Indian Orchard; and as we went on our way, we made the hills and valleys echo with the praises of the Lord. Our hearts were full of joy and peace in the Holy Ghost.

The brethren and sisters at Chickopee Falls spared no pains in providing temporal comforts for those who attended the meetings. We have just heard from them, and learn that the truths presented have taken strong hold on many minds, and that the people are anxious to hear more.

May the Lord continue the work there begun, and scatter the light and truth in every direction.

For the Crisis.

Missionary Notice.

Dear Brethren:—I am making arrangements to go more extensively into the gospel field as a missionary for God. My Master has not yet seen fit to send me any information about "that farm," and I begin to think He does not want me to have one; and so I have made up my mind to go to work more extensively for Him, as he shall open my way. I intend, in the course of the coming year, to travel North, South, East, and West, if time continues, as far and as fast as I get the means to go with, and according to my ability and strength, as God shall help me, proclaiming the glad tidings of the kingdom of heaven to all of the flock of Christ that I can come at, and to all others who will hear. Now I desire all our friends, in every place, whether few or many in any given place, who may wish my feeble efforts among them, to write to me, and tell me where they are, how they are, and on whom to call when I come. Do not let the thought of fewness of numbers or poverty keep you from writing: for "the poor have the gospel preached unto them." Do what you can without burdening yourselves, and I will trust in God. I am not after money. Besides providing for the wants of my family, I spend every cent I get in the service of God. Please write immediately. Let us be up and doing; for "we are almost there!"

There are many who waste affection by careless neglect. It is not a plant to grow unnurtured: the rude touch may destroy its delicate texture forever; the subtle cords of love are chilled and snapped asunder by neglect.

For the Crisis.

Resolutions for the New Year.

Resolved, that while we tithe mint and cummin, abstain from foolish talking and jesting, we will remember the weightier matters of the law—judgment, mercy and faith, and not see our brother have need, and shut up our bowels of compassion from him, thereby giving him reason to question whether the love of God dwells in us.

Resolved, that since none but those who do his commandments are to "have right to the tree of life," and since we really desire to obtain such right, therefore, we will give to him that asketh, and "take no thought for the morrow," (that is, not lay up that which he needs for fear we shall want it on the morrow, or at some future time,) but we will keep his commandments and trust him, that he will surely keep his word, as it is written, "He that giveth unto the poor, shall not lack," but if we hide our eyes from our brother's wants, he will as surely keep the remainder of the text, and we shall "have many a curse." No matter how happy we may get in meeting, or how fervently we may pray, or how loudly we may shout, or sing praises, it will surely be said unto us, "Inasmuch as ye have not done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have not done it unto me."

Resolved, that we, ladies, will abstain from all articles of dress, which are mentioned with disapprobation in the scriptures, such as gold, pearls, and costly array, endeavoring to adorn ourselves as become "women professing godliness," and to deserve the scriptural title of devout and honorable women.

Resolved, that we will pray much to Almighty God, that he will bestow upon us grace, and strength to keep these resolutions, and enlighten our understandings, that we may know him and may love him with all our hearts.

For the Crisis.

From Bro. E. Crowell.

Bro. Grant:—I have long wanted to write something to you—but what shall I say, that can be of any possible benefit to any one? Could I sit down by you, we would talk fast and long,—but what would be our theme? would it be the weather, crops, the market? would it be of lands in the west, politics, or business in general? would it be of the faults of this man or that? would we complain to each other of injuries and wrongs, and threaten not to do any more work in the field of our Master till Bro. Somebody made confession, and we were placed in a more commanding position? Would we start some theological question, upon which we knew at the outset, that we differed, and thus try to find all the fault we could with each other, and each show how ignorant the other was, and how injurious each other's position was, until we both got into a passion; and part with ill feeling toward each other, and our spirits so soured as to incapacitate us for promoting peace and good will in the earth, and imparting comfort to the afflicted?

No, no, say you, we would not talk upon these matters unless it was to condemn the custom; so I will not say a word upon this subject.

But what would we talk of? O, ask the man who is far away from home, what he would talk of should he meet another in like circumstances. Ask the way-worn pilgrim; ask the Hebrew captives what was the theme of their talk, when circumstances brought them in communication. "Zion, Zion is our theme," say they. "The beautiful house which our Father built, is in ruins. Judah's hearths are desolate and Israel's sons are captive. O when will this night be gone and the days of our mourning be ended." O, yes, "they shall talk of thy kingdom and speak of thy power."

Well, Bro. Pilgrim, for the last twelve years, earth has had no charms for me, equal to those of the kingdom of God. A belief in the nearness of the kingdom of God, keeps me what I am—an Adventist. Some seem to think this doctrine has lost its power, and we ought to resort to something else for our distinguishing sentiment, such as the nature of future punishment, &c.; but I feel our distinguishing sentiment is the nature, location, nearness and subjects of the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. All other subjects are subordinate to this, and we ought to resist every temptation to suppress the simple doctrine of the Advent, for the sake of making prominent our ideas of the end of the wicked, state of the dead, future condition of the Jews, age to come, or any of that sort of thing. Adventists have always differed upon these questions, and always will, and I am willing they should. I have my opinion upon these questions, and when I have occasion to say anything about them shall say what I think the scriptures teach. If any differ from me in these matters, let them differ, they have a right to differ, and I will not interfere with it. I will never yield the right of private judgment to any people, nor will I ask any one to yield it to me. But, my Bro. let us resist every effort to divert the minds of our people from the Hope of the gospel—the second advent of Jesus—the reign of Shiloh. This should be cherished by the church, not as a sentiment merely, but as a HOPE; and while it is a hope to us, it will not become stale nor powerless.

I hope the Crisis may prosper, and be a means of comfort and strength to the flock of God, and of prosperity to our holy and blessed cause.

Very truly yours, in hope of the glory of God,
E. Crowell.

From Bro. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—Let me through the Crisis give you and the brethren generally a brief history of my travels and labors in the East. It is about four weeks since I left the Islands, where I had been the most part of the time for fifteen months, sowing the seeds of Bible truth, which, I trust, will spring up and bear fruit unto eternal life.

I have been traveling up the Penobscot river, and am now seventy-five miles above Bangor, in a new country. Here I am well received, generally, kindly and hospitably treated. I don't lack for any good thing. I find minds candid, open to hear Bible truth explained and enforced. Have good congregations, attentive hearers, and enjoy my labor much. It is easier holding forth the truths of the Bible here, to a people who are not sectarian, than it is in places, where they have ministers and churches.

I have a chance now, to see the fruit of my last tour in Aroostook County. This has been a field neglected by the Advent preachers. Here, let me say to the brethren, preachers will be well received, and kindly treated. But the country is new, and people generally poor, can't give very much. But when you can find a spirit of kindness and hospitality, it will be accepted, according to what a man has, and not according to what he hath not. O Brethren, when I look upon this large field, and see how much needs to be done, and how few there are to labor in it, I am led to pray, that the Lord of the harvest would send forth more laborers into his harvest. O how many there are, who might enter this new field with hopes of success; all it wants, is the love of God and mankind in the heart, a zeal and devotion for his cause, a sense of the worth of souls, and of the importance of Bible truth; a good common education, a sound mind, and good judgment, and with these qualifications, he might, with a Bible in his pocket and a staff in his hand, travel this new country through, and lack for nothing. In every place he would hear such sayings as these—'Such as we have, give we to thee." "If you can put up with such accommodations as we have, you are perfectly welcome to stay." And what more can any one ask? The best can do no better.

O that there was more zeal, more devotedness to the cause of God, more activity and energy.

I can have a meeting in any school-house here, and frequently in private families. I get three or four families together, and give them instruction almost every evening. I visit the families during the day time. Thus I keep at work.

And again, I say, I had rather be a servant of the church, than a king on a throne.

I find the same traditions and doctrines of men here, which are to be found in the cities and villages of Mass., though they are not wedded to sectarianism, as the people are there; therefore, their prejudices are more easily removed.

The first, the greatest, and most difficult obstacle, which lies in the way of the reception of Bible truth is, that people go to heaven when they die, and receive their reward or punishment, before their cases are tried and decided at the judgment.—Let this error be removed, and the person see that dead men don't know anything; that their thoughts have perished, their hatred, love, and envy perished; that men must be alive to praise God, and unless they have a resurrection, they are gone forever. I say, let them see this, and they are prepared to see the importance of the resurrection, and of the coming of Jesus, for unless Jesus comes, there will be no resurrection. Then, when they see that death means death, and not life eternal in torment, they will be prepared to see that the wicked are to be burned up, "root and branch"—die the "second death," from which there will be no resurrection. I have scattered most of the books and pamphlets which were sent me from the Office. I don't know to whom I am indebted for them, but one thing I do know, I have enjoyed a great deal of pleasure in circulating them. They are scattered in more than a hundred families, where they will be like missionaries going from house to house. The donors would have rejoiced to have seen the pleasure with which they were received. The future only can tell the amount of good they will do.

Dear brethren, pray for me. O, how much wisdom, strength of body and of mind I need; how much of the spirit of discernment, that I may judge of truth and error, and know how to divide the word of truth; also, whom to comfort, whom to reprove, whom to exhort, and whom to instruct.

Now, brethren, be faithful, and may the God of peace be with you. Amen and Amen.

Your Brother,
Benjamin Spaulding.

For the Crisis.

To the Sisters.

Dear Sisters:—Our Heavenly Father has given us His holy Word for our guide "for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." We are to follow its precepts, and obey its commands. Will we obey it? is the question. We read it and hear it. Now will we obey it? God tells us in his word—"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." "Do we obey that? Let us look into our hearts and see.

The Apostle tells us,—"In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." What does the word of God say? Not wear gold, or pearls, or costly array Will you obey that command, or will you not? I have seen some of the sisters wearing a gold breast-pin and other costly array. They say "it is but a little gold that I wear, and that did not cost me anything; it was given to me." Does that make any difference with the word of God? Not at all. The word says, wear it not. It does not say you may wear a little. It does not qualify. It makes no exceptions.

Now, will you obey, cheerfully and willingly? "The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land." But you say you have got it, and it will be no worse for you to wear it, than it would be to lay it up and keep it.

That is true, it is no worse; for the Word also says, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." "But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." "For where your treasure is there will your heart be also." But you may ask, "what shall I do with it?" The word of God tells you what to do with it. Luke 12: 33. "Sell that ye have, and give alms." Matt. 19: 21. "Sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me."

Dear sisters, do you profess to love, serve, obey, and follow Christ? Then give heed to his word, and not only say, but do Make the sacrifice, no matter what it is. Think of these things. Will the Lord hold you guiltless in the disobedience of such plain commands? Perhaps you have some earthly friend you feel very anxious to please in this matter. What! Shall we displease our heavenly Father who has done so much for us, and who has the best right to us, for the sake of pleasing an earthly friend? God forbid. O, how my heart is pained when I think of some who are doing these things. May their eyes be opened to see their danger, and repent and forsake it before it is too late. When you believed in the time of the coming of the Lord, and thought He was just upon you, you could see these things; then, you stripped off your costly array; and are not the commands of the Lord the same now that they were then? Certainly they are. Then do not, I pray you, begin again to follow the world, its vanities and trifles, but continue on in the way of truth and obedience; "for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

Cost what it will, be determined in the strength of the Lord, to serve and obey Him, even if it is like cutting off a right hand, or plucking out a right eye. Do not deceive yourselves, and begin to make excuses. They will not avail you anything at the judgment.

It is just as necessary for us to obey one command as another. Some will obey those that suit their own ease and convenience and let the rest go. O let us look into these things, and see if it is not so.—Search the word of God with an earnest desire to know truth and duty, and a determination to do and suffer all God's holy will. What we do, must be done quickly. No time to lose. Some will ask the Lord in their prayers, to help them to obey Him in all things. He will help you if you will try to obey. Now, will you obey these plain commands? If you want the Lord to help you, you must act. It remains for you to decide the question, whether you will be the Lord's or no; whether you will live for the kingdom, or be shut out forever. May the Lord help us to decide aright. Let us be careful and not prove stumbling blocks, but have a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price.

PHEBE.

For the Crisis.

From Br. C. Whitney

BRO. GRANT:—I never desired, or prayed more earnestly for the coming of that same Jesus who ascended from the top of mount Olivet, than at the present time. O that he would come speedily, to give life and immortality tothe dear saints who sleep in their graves. The hope of the resurrection is more dear to me than ever. Our little Mary, the youngest of our children—our lovely little Mary has fallen asleep in Jesus. The cruel tyrant death has laid his icy hand upon her little form, and we have borne her from the home where she was so much loved, and laid her in the silent tomb.

Her age was about two years and a half; of an age when she was very interesting and dear to the family. She was sick but a few days with inflammation of the bowels, which terminated in dropsy of the brain.

We miss her at every turn. Her seat is vacant at the table; her voice is hushed in death. Yet the promise of God is sure —"Thy children shall come again from the land of the enemy." I expect in a little while, it may be in a few short months, to see that same little Mary with a glorified body, free from sickness, pain and death. Oh yes, I expect to meet her in that land where sorrow never shall invade, where her voice will be heard mingling with the melody of birds, in notes of praise to her Maker. The promises of the gospel afford consolation to my companion and myself.

Paul tells us to comfort one another with the hope of the resurrection from the dead. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him"

O glorious hope! Blessed hope! how it encourages the child of God to be not weary in well-doing, for the bright prospect of eternal glory is before us, and the best of all is, we shall soon be there if faithful. Oh may the Lord preserve us from evil in this time of peril, that we may meet our loved one in the world of glory.

Domestic Summary.

FROM NICARAGUA.—The following articles from Costa Rican journals, give the Central American view of the recent proceedings of Walker, of which we have heretofore given the fillibuster version:

[From the (Costa Rica) Weekly Album, Nov. 29.]

By the Courier of yesterday we have dates from Rivas to the 20th, and from Massaya to the 18th.

A fierce conflict was going on at the latter place, which had already lasted since the 15th. Walker, with his accustomed celebrety of movement, finding he could not dislodge Gen. Canas from his position at San Juan, re-embarked for Virgin Bay on the 14th, and attacked Massaya with such vigor that he effected a lodgment in the town, and burnt the church of San Sebastian and some houses.

On the 16th the battle re-commenced, and the allies having surrounded his position, cut off and captured all his baggage-mules and horses, and two guns. This, it would seem, has brought him to a state of siege in a part of Massaya, and 800 Guatemalan troops were momentarily expected from Managua to cut off his retreat, who had slept there on the 17th.

The battle was still raging on the 18th, without any decided advantage being obtained, but Gen. Belloso writes in confident terms about his success, and hopes to be in possession of Granada on the 20th.

Gen. Canas was still in Rivas, with the division under Gen. Oceres, in all 500 strong, and expected to attack the fillibusters who remained in Virgin Bay on the 21st.

Some twenty deserters had arrived in Punta Arenas from that place, who were engaged in the action of the 12th near San Juan. They report some fifty more to be on their way, as their ill success had dispirited them, and they are more apprehensive of Nicaraguan vengeance than Costa Rican ill-treatment.

Walker's loss on the 12th was fourteen killed and twenty-seven wounded. Everything seems to be going on prosperously, and we anticipate good news by the next mail.

The operations of Walker already begin to wear a desperate aspect. He is evidently seeking a decisive engagement, and the heavy re-inforcements he is receiving every fortnight enable him to make light of his losses.

The Costa Rica forces are soon expected to be in the field, commanded by Gen. Don Jose Joaquin Mora, or the president in person.

The "Boletin Official" of same date thus announces the latest intelligence from the seat of war:

Gen. Canas writes from Rivas on the 20th Nov.:—In theaction of the 12th Walker nad 14 killed and 27 wounded; Don Manuel Cardenas has been named Prefect of Rivas; Gen. Jeres and his division continued under the orders of Gen. Oanas: Walker, availing himself of the advantages which the steamers give him, left Virgin Bay on the 14th, and attacked Gen. Belloso on the 15th at Massaya, destroying the church of San Sebastian, which incensed the natives very much.

On the 16th Walker lost all his baggage-mules and two cannons, and suffered considerable loss among his men. On the 18th the fighting continued; 2,000 men were in Massaya under Gen. Belloso; they had suffered but few losses, and had inflicted considerable injury on the enemy.

On the 17th 800 Guatemalan troops slept in Managua, and the next day attacked Walker's rear guard. On the 20th it was expected Granada would be taken and the transit road fall into the hands of the allies.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 29.

Steamship Texas sailed for San Juan this morning, with 500 recruits for Walker's army.

The Slave Excitement.

AUGUSTA, GA., Dec. 18.

We find the following intelligence in the Alabama Advertiser and Gazette:

In York district, S. C., to-day, the slave excitement continues.

Powder and muskets have been found in possession of the slaves.

A despatch from Columbia says fifteen negroes have been killed by their owners in Perry.

Escapes of slaves are numerous.

The whites, in all directions, are arming themselves.

LOUISVILLE, KY., 30th.

A great excitement exists in Nashville, in reference to a rumored rising among the negro slaves. The corporations met and passed an ordinance requiring the military to hold themselves ready for any emergency, and appointed a large number of additional watchmen.

The Washington correspondent of the Tribune says:

I have reliable information from New Orleans that within a few days, there have been serious troubles among the slaves in Louisiana, and that as many as 20 negroes have been hung, but the newspapers carefully refrain from any mention of the facts.

A party of South Carolinians from Kansas passed through here to-day, returning home, having abandoned that territory as presenting no hopes to their political enterprise or personal fortunes.

They and others from the South relinquish the experiment as desperate, and complain of the limited material aid furnished by their own section.

The tariff bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means at the last session, and set down for Tuesday next, as the special order, will probably be superceded by prior business, and be deferred to a more distant day.

A CALIFORNIA SAND TEMPEST.—A California paper of Dec. 3, gives an account of a severe sand tempest which occurred at Los Angelos about the 20th of November.

The dust and sand were lifted from the earth and carried along a continued cloud, enveloping every thing and obscuring every object from sight. The houses on the opposite side of tne street at times could not be discerned. All out-door business was snspended. With difficulty a person could walk the streets, not alone from the fury of the blasts, but from the cutting effects of the sharp sand, driven so forcibly against the face and person.

All travel on the roads was suspended. So thick was the cloud of sand, that from noon the sun became obscured. Teamsters could not keep the road, all efforts to guide their animals being fruitless. Many of them could not find out, even by groping on the ground, whether they were on the road or on the open plain. They could not see their leaders from the wheel animals. Teams along the road came in contact, the drivers neither being able to see nor hear the approach of each other. In many cases the mules were overturned by the violence of the wind. Light wagons were tossed aside as if they were corks.

Instances have come to our knowledge of gentlemen, perfectly familiar with the road, losing it, and having to camp out all night, within a few miles of town.

In fact, from the beach of San Pedro to the coast range of mountains, nothing was visible but dark clouds of sand and dust.

The worst of it is that the sand was deposited in places several feet deep on the pasture lands, thus inflicting the severest calamity on stock owners, by depriving the cattle of what little food they were able hitherto to pick up off the already parched and bare pasture grounds. The amount of injury inflicted in this district, in this particular, is incalculable.

A similar tempest, but not so violent, occurred in this vicinity in the month of March, 1845, rendered memorable by being the day on which was fought the battle of Cahuenga, between the Californians under Don Pio Pico and Micheltorena's forces."

BRIGHT IS OUR HOPE OF BETTER DAYS.

BY L. MILLS.

Tune.—Happy day.

The judgment day is rolling on,
Probation's hours are nearly gone;
Our warfare here is almost o'er,
We soon shall leave this barren shore.

The trump of God we soon shall hear,
And hail with joy the festal year;
When we redeemed from earth shall be,
And robed in immortality.

With joy arise and tune your song,
And gird your armor firmly on;
With patience wait 'till Christ shall come,
And sing for joy we're going home.

Hope to the end—the prize is sure
To all that to the end endure;
Then banish all your doubts and fears,
And God will wipe away your tears.

Around God's throne there then shall be
A tried and faithful company.
O, may it be our lot to stand
Amid that throng at God's right hand.

Our parting scenes will soon be o'er,
The faithful meet to part no more;
The wicked then outcast will stand,
For they've no right on Abra'm's land.

Jerusalem with streets of gold—
Whose glories yet remain untold—
Is shining there in glory bright,
The Lamb of God its glorious light.

The tree of life will there be seen,
With branches robed in verdure green;
But shall I ever worthy be,
To eat the fruit of Life's fair tree?

These trying days will soon be past,
Our conflicts all will end at last;—
Then loud to God my song I'll raise—
Bright is my hope of better days.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Europa.

NEW YORK, Dec. 8.

The steamship Europa arrived here at 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. Her dates to the 13th inst. one day later than those of the Canada.

The fall of Herat is confirmed. It surrendered to the Persians on the 26th of October. The English troops had arrived in the Persian Gulf. A dispatch from Vienna states that France was mediating between the belligerents and endeavoring to persuade Persia to yield to England.

Prussia has closed all communication with Switzerland, and will make no further propositions.

A St. Petersburg correspondent of the Konigsburg Journal states that it is understood in St. Petersburg that Gen. Birjuloff, who commands the troops on the Russian frontier, has received orders to enter Persia with 50,000 men at the first requisition made by the Shah of Persia. At the same time it is said that two Corps de Arms have been set in motion toward the Austrian frontier. The correspondent then says, as a comment of his own on this statement, that, "Russia cannot look on as a passive spectator to the bold steps the British government is taking towards Persia, or of the tergiversations of Austria, and that it will not be Russia's fault if new warlike complications arise. Of the Russian army, however, it is added, quelle ne demande pas mieux than to measure its strength with the Austrians whom it saved in 1850."

The Augsburg Allgemine Zeitung contains a communication, dated from the Polish frontier, which, in some degree, corroborates the statement of the movement of the Russian forces, northward and eastward. It states that the entire Russian army, which has hitherto been stationed in the South, is not only to remain there during the winter, but also a considerable portion of it is to be moved farther southward, to the frontier of Bessarabia and the Coast of the Black Sea.

LATEST.—[By telegraph from London.] The overland India mail arrived at Triest on the 12th, with Bombay dates to the 17th of Nov. and Calcutta the 8th.

War was proclaimed against Persia at Calcutta on the 1st of Nov., and the last division of the fleet for the Persian Gulf left Bombay on the 1st of Nov. Five thousand troops are to occupy Karrack and Bushire.

THE SUNKEN VESSELS AT SEBASTOPOL.—Among the passengers by steamship Baltic, arrived at New York on Thursday, was Mr. John E. Gowen, who is on his return from St. Petersburg where he obtained the contract to raise the sunken Russian fleet at Sebastopol, consisting of seventy-seven vessels, twelve of which are frigates. Mr. Gowen, it will be remembered, raised the hull of the U. S. steam frigate Missouri, burnt at Giberaltar. The Liverpool correspondent of the New York Herald says:

Mr. Gowen had five or six competitors, among them the Credit Mobillier of France, and yet the contract was awarded to him at figures above all his competitors, from his well known reputation and success at Giberaltar with the Missouri.

This contract so obtained, is not only a well deserved compliment to Mr. G.'s skill as a submarine engineer, but a national one, which should give every American cause for pride, as in magnitude and value it is the largest contract ever obtained by any American from a foreign government. Mr. G. returns to America to complete the necessary machinery, and returns in May to complete operations at Sebastopol.

Europe.

We publish in the morning paper news by the Europa, which is one day later than previous dates.

Although the news by this airival is not decisevely important, there are indications in it which lead, irresistably, to the conclusion that the peace of Europe has not been secured, and that, ere long, England and Russia will be engaged in a struggle once more. In this case, as England cannot expect the alliance of France, she will come out of the struggle with a fearful loss, and should she be victorious, will gain no advantages worth the life of a single subject.

It is clear that an immediate resort to hostilities is apprehended by the British ministry. The London correspondent of the Philadelphia North American writes on the 9th inst.

"I know from private sources that at the arsenals and dock yards there is no abatement of energy and activity; the re-production of expended stores is going on with increasing rapidity; the different departments are being inspected and re-organized; good hands are constantly sought after, and by liberal promises, obtained for the navy,"

The Duke of Cambridge is constantly engaged in bringing the army in the most effective state, and that it is in fine condition at this moment. Beyond dispute, vessels of war, of all calibre, now building or repairing, are being finished with expedition, and get ready for the sea.

In this undercurrent, in short, it is clear to perceive that the government are making preparations for the result of the Congress, whichever way it may head, and the complexion of their expectations ought surely to be gathered from the manner in which they are getting ready for it. All this activity in army and navy, in arsenal and dockyard, may be with the object of extirpating the errors of the past, which has, no doubt, something to do with it; but why all this action and energy—why this bustle, and why seek to give it a different aspect than that which really pertains to it? for the increase of men and effort is not made known and not suffered to be? It is difficult, however, to forget the continued occupation of the Principalities, the announcement that the Greek occupation is to continne, and that the British squadron in the Black Sea is to winter at Sinope."

But is Russia idle all this time? An unusual activity pervades her arsenals, dock-yards and founderies. "It is true," as the correspondent before quoted remarks, "as an indication of peace, there is an announcement that the army under Gen. Luders has been dissolved." So, no doubt, it has; but the soldiers have not been disbanded—they have been merely drafted into other regiments; and the dissolution of the army, therefore, is but another name for distribution. There are strong indications of an alliance between France and Russia which may be consummated at an early day

The matrimonial project of uniting the son of the Prince Jerome to a sister of the Czar would favor and strengthen a political alliance, which is an event much feared by the English government and people. Russia, though defeated in the Crimea, is not conquered. She is unconquerable by any force that England can bring against her. She is extending her power and views on every hand, and an entrance into India, the object of Russian ambition through many reigns, though long deferred, has never been relinquished.

There is a rumor not authenticated, however, that Russia has made an alliance with the Emperor of Ohina against the rebels, on condition of being granted a port and a certain quantity of land on the west side of the island of Chusand.

We wait to see the result of the second Paris Conference which was to meet about Christmas, and the result of the mediation of France with Persia. Hostilities may be averted, but the prospects that the peace of Europe is safe are extremely doubtful.—Herald.

To crown an Emperor in Russia costs as much money as we pay our Presidents in 40 years.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Dec. 9th, 1856, Sister Nancy Stokes, wife of Bro. Joel Stokes of Lawrence, Mass., after an illness of about four weeks of typhoid fever, in the thirty-seventh year of her age.

Sister Stokes, in her early age, saw the need of salvation. She sought and found the pardon of her sins, joined the M. E. church in Lowell, and was a consistent member of that church until the early part of '43, when she heard the heart-cheering, soul-refreshing and heaven-inspiring tidings of our soon coming King. She, like a noble Berean, sought to see whether these were so; her judgment became convinced, when she embraced the truth with her whole heart, in the love of it, with her beloved husband; from which time their house became one of prayer and a home for many of the saints of God. For the last ten or twelve years Sr. S—— has been a firm believer in the unconscious state of the dead, and of no immortality except through Jesus Christ, that all the righteous would come forth in the morning of the resurrection, when the sleeping dead shall hear the voice of the archangel and the trump of God. A firm believer in the Gospel of the son of God, she fell asleep to awake when the Lord shall again appear in his glory.

Our Brother is left to mourn the loss of his dearest earthly friend and bosom companion, who had shared his joys and sorrows for fourteen years. The poor pilgrim has lost a warm hearted friend. Many has been the one, that has found rest with Bro. and Sr. Stokes; but she rests in her final resting-place, in the town of Freedom, N. H., by the side of an only daughter that was taken from them some eight years ago while on a visit there at that time.

And now sister Stokes sleeps by her side. Thus Bro. Joel is left alone. His once happy family now sleep in death; but he sorrows not as those that have no hope, for he looks forward to that time when the redeemed shall come again—when those loved ones will inherit the kingdom of God.

Poetry.

ABOVE AND BELOW.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

O, dwellers in the valley land,
Who in deep twilight grope and glower,
Till the slow mountain's dial hand
Shortens to noon's triumphant hour,—
While ye sit idle, do ye think
The Lord's great work is idle too?
That light dares not o'erleap the brink
Of morn, because 'tis dark with you.

Though yet your valley sleep in night,
In God's ripe fields the day is cried,
And reapers with their sickles bright,
Troop, singing, down the mountain side;
Come up and feel what health there is,
In the dark dawn's daylight eyes,
As, bending with a pitying kiss,
The night shed tears of earth she dries!

The Lord wants reapers; O, mount up
Before night comes, and says, "Too late!"
Stay not for taking scrip or cup,
The Master hungers while ye wait:
'Tis from these heights alone your eyes
Th' advancing spears of Day can see,
Which o'er the eastern hill-top rise,
To break your long captivity.

Lone watcher on the mountain height,
It is right precious to behold
The first long surf of glorious light
Flood all the thirsty east with gold:
But we who in the shadow sit,
Know also when the day is nigh,
Seeing thy shining forehead lit,
With his inspiring prophecy.

Thou hast thine office; we have ours;
God lacks not early service here,
But what are thine eleventh hours?
He counts with us for morning cheer
Our day for him is long enough,
And when he giveth work to do,
The bruised reed is amply tough
To pierce the shield of error through.

But not the less do thou aspire
Light's messages of love to preach;
Keep back no syllable of fire,—
Plunge down the rowels of thy speech.
Yet God deems not thy æried sight
More worthy than our twilight dim,
For meek obedience, too, is light,
And following that is following Him.

"Rooted and built up in Him;—and stablished in the faith."—Col. ii. 7.

Heed no blast that bloweth,
Though it rock the tree,
Heed no stream that floweth,
Torrent though it be;
Fear no cloud that thunders
O'er the concave dim;
Rest thee in His strength and merit
Who forsakes no trusting spirit;
Rooted and built up in Him.

Heed no wind of doctrine,
Toward the haven steer,
Guided by the pole-star,
Though the proudest veer,—
To thy bosom clasp the Bible,
Pilot 'mid the billowy brine,
Let no earthly chart deceive thee,
Let no erring leader grieve thee,—
Stablished in the faith divine.

NUMBER II.

"Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it." Prov. 22 : 6.

Is this passage of scripture believed to be true, by the mass of professed christians?

I fear not. It is often quoted in my hearing, and reference at the same time made to profligate persons, who had pious parents, perhaps christian ministers were their fathers, for they often rear very unruly children.

But children brought up as specified in the above text are not often to be found in that class. Read it again. "TRAIN UP A CHILD IN THE WAY HE SHOULD GO,—not indulge him up, but train him up, which signifies to draw, to entice, to break, to exercise, to discipline, to form by instruction, teach, educate, &c. This must be done by constant and arduous labor, and an even, determined disposition. When this is done, few indeed, notwithstanding the depravity of the human heart, will depart from it.

The old adage—"as the twig is bent the tree is inclined"—is a good illustration of the human mind. Children are too often neglected until they have formed unruly habits in the incipient stages, before they are thought to be old enough to be instructed, or corrected. Those possessing common intelligence, can properly receive correction at the age of six months, in small matters.

This looks to some like folly. To such I would say, many children receive lessons in bad habits as young as this, and by them learn to rule their nurse, to be rocked to sleep, carried about the house, sit or lie in particular positions; to pull plates, cups, knives, and other articles from the table. In these things they are often indulged, to keep them from an intemperate use of their vocal organs.

Thus they go on, and when a year, or eighteen months old, they rule the family in many essential points. Chairs are turned down for carriages, shovel and tongs used as horses, or as hammers, whips, or other tools. The parlor becomes a wood and carriage yard; the best furniture is used as mere stagings to climb about upon. A little older, and the sugar-bowl is often visited by the cunning little hand; the molasses cup sends forth its yellow stream of sticky liquid, dripping from the besmeared little fingers, across the table-cloth and dishes. The preserve dishes act the same part. The pie and the best cake must be first served out to these young gentlemen and lady rulers. Step by step they bring everything under tribute to them. At six or eight years of age, they must visit where and when they please; have such clothing, such styles, such cost as they wish, and other things likewise. By this time they are nearly ruined. A little farther on, and they are saucy to their parents, irreverent to their superiors, independent as a naval officer, and command their parents in language suited to a southern slave-driver.

It may be thought that I notice small things in the above catalogue. Well, there are many who know full well, that most of the notoriously wicked men and women began their career in these small things. When an evil is being traced out, it is well to find the root of it. Just let parents train their children well until they are six years old, and then there is but little trouble in leading them afterwards. Watch over them carefully, and prevent them from imbibing those evil habits I alluded to, and a multitude of others—break their wills—direct their affections, and teach them to be obedient to ALL your commands, and they have a foundation formed for virtue and goodness on which you can build.

But, neglect your children—let them grow up in such habits—lie to them—promise and not fulfill—threaten and not perform—scold, and mean nothing—get angry and whip, pound, abuse, vex, and provoke, &c., until they are six years old, and nine out of ten are spoiled. The young mind is quick to learn, and if you do not store it with good principles, it will get bad ones. It is not over crowded with the ever anxious thoughts, the calculations, plans, and cares of the mature mind; it watches every motion, catches every sound, hears and ponders every word, seeks to interpret every look, and by these influences the mind of the child is being formed. How much care then should be taken to bring to bear on children, all right examples, proper words, pleasant looks, and virtuous and pure associations. How important the command of God,—"Train up a child in the way he should go."

But some will say, "all children are not alike; my children cannot be made to mind like some, they have such dreadful dispositions."

It is true that nature gives a variety of shades of temperament; all cannot be trained alike. But all should be trained, and made to obey. Those which require punishments, must have them. Thus, we need wisdom to discern how to train the different dispositions.

"But I cannot do it," say some.

Then go to God for wisdom, who giveth to all liberally. Study his word faithfully, and there you will find much instruction about governing your children. Hear the word:

"Apply thine heart unto instruction, and thine ear unto the words of knowledge. Withold not correction from the child; for if thou beatest him with the rod, he shall not die; thou shalt beat him with the rod and shalt deliver his soul from hell." Prov. 23 : 12–14.

Such is the instruction of Solomon, for the stubborn-tempered child. This should not be administered until more mild means fail, and when it must be done, it should be done faithfully, not in mockery, not in anger, but in mercy to the child, and with prayer to God that it may be made a blessing.

Not long ago, I read of a minister who took a disobedient child into his study, talked to him, prayed with and for him, and then whipped him for his offence. The child grew up, became a christian, and dated his conviction for sin, and need of religion, at that interview in his father's study. Many similar cases might be stated. Children should never be punished in anger, or in an agitated state of mind. They should always be punished when promised it. They should always know what they are punished for, and candidly reasoned with and instructed in relation to its importance. When this course is taken, the rod will not be needed often on the same child, rarely more than twice or thrice. How beautiful a sight is a modest, loving, truthful, obedient child. Such are something like the angels of God.

"Repent and be Converted."

BY H. PRATT.

No. II.

The next guide-post to which we shall refer, was in the days of Noah. There were special directions to be observed while in the path of life and ordinances but one of which we will notice.

After Adam had been driven from the garden and lost his title to earth, the Lord promised of the seed of the woman to raise up a second Adam who should taste death for all, that whosoever would believe in him, might not perish but have everlasting life; and the remission of sins was by virtue of this promise, in the shedding of blood. Now as this required a sacrifice of the firstlings of the flock, there were some even then who chose their own ways instead of being directed or converted by the law of God. Hence, Cain, instead of sacrificing his lamb, made an offering of the fruits of the field, thinking no doubt, as some talk now, that "it makes no difference what we believe if we only act right." Why was it then that Abel's offering only was accepted? Was not Cain honest in his sacrifice? did it not cost as much as Abel's? Was not Cain's "belief as dear to him" as was Abel's? Why then not fellowship Cain? why let this difference of opinion separate them?

1st. Because light hath no fellowship with darkness, and they can't walk together, for there is no communion, nor union, and God has fixed it so. Oil and water won't unite; put them into the same vessel—shake them together, and they rapidly seek their separate positions soon as left to themselves. Now it was not the cost of the sacrifice, or the honesty of heart with which it was offered that was acceptable to God; but it was "by faith that Abel offered a more excellent sacrifice than Cain.—Faith in what? In God's promise, that his Son should be made an offering for sin.

Now the Lord required of them in the pathway of life to show their faith in his promise by the shedding of blood.

But when we come to the cross, there is no more shedding of blood, and, as Isaiah says, "he that sacrificeth a lamb is as tho' he cut off a dog's neck." Faith, I say, in the promises of God is what has made the people of God a peculiar people.

This, then (i. e. the shedding of blood), was to be observed till the great atonement was made, and no farther. Then another promise becomes the object of hope and faith, which is, a resurrection from the dead at the coming of Jesus, and is typified by baptism, as Peter says, baptism is a figure of our salvation. To shew our faith in this promise, we are to be buried with him in baptism—planted in the likeness of his death. But do you think immersion essential? No more so than the shedding of blood was before the first advent. But will not sprinkling or pouring do just as well? Yes, just as well as Cain's sacrifice, and no better. Then you would cut off all who are not immersed? No, I would have them know that the object of baptism is to shew our faith in the resurrection of the dead, then be converted by the law of God, which says, be planted in the likeness of his death so that by "faith" (like Abel,) we may offer a more EXCELLENT sacrifice.

Having noticed thus briefly some of the ordinances by the way, we turn again to the guide-post in the days of Noah. The way of life was made plain even then, tho' God had determined to destroy man from off the earth; but, it was to leave all for God and truth.

An Ark was now the only way of life; it was the right way, and God's minister preached it, for he was a preacher of righteousness.

He was converted into the right way by the word of the Lord, and went about building an ark accordingly. Well, he didn't condemn everybody that did not think just as he did. "By which he condemned the world."

What was the test of christian fellowship here?

Christian character.

How was this developed?

By obeying God—by "being moved with fear" and building an ark.

But was not the belief of others just as dear to them as was Noah's to him?

No doubt of it.

And he condemned them all?

Yes—"the world."

But they were all wicked.

Yes, and it was because they would not be "converted" and build an ark.

What! could they not have been saved and still kept about their busines?

Nothing but repentance and being "converted" could save them then, "and as it was in the days of Noah even so shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." O, how essential it is to know the right way, and have courage to walk in it, though, like Noah, we condemn the world.

LINES.

BY S. S. BREWER.

To Advent Backsliders everywhere.

"So then because thou art lukewarm and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth."

Backsliders, it's time to awake,
And gird up the loins of your mind;
Arise! and quick from you shake
Unbelief, that makes you so blind,
Canst thou slumber while God calls arise!
And love the vain things of this earth?
Creation is trav'ling, and sighs
Aloud in the pangs of new birth.

I would thou wert cold or wert hot—
Lukewarmness God never could bear.—
And because thou neither art not,
His glory you never can share.
Too long thou hast hugged to thy heart
Your substance, from many in want,
And often refused to do part,
By whining in meanness, I can't,

Now do you in truth say, I can't,
With money and means at your hand?
The Lord will soon say that you can't
Enter into the fair promised land.
How once you could sing, shout, and pray,
And spread the glad tidings abroad;
Then happy by night and by day,
In telling the goodness of God.

The prayer-meeting night came around,
Your heart was all teeming with love,
No music so sweet as the sound
Of the songs to your Father above.
With prayers full of faith and desire,
Borne safe to the temple above,
They melted and raised our hearts higher,
Uniting in brotherly love.

Alas! what a change to behold—
Alive to the world—to God dead!
In meeting now stupid and cold,
Oft sleeping and nodding your head.
The word of the Lord has gone forth,—
Let it ring from the north to the south,
Proclaim from the west to the north—
"The lukewarm I'll spue from my mouth."

For the Crisis.

From J. B. Dodge.

BRO. GRANT:—It is a long time since I have written anything for your excellent paper. I call it excellent, for there is none like it, as far as I am able to judge, except it be the Bible Examiner. I have them both and should be very unwilling to part with either of them. There are others which are good, but these are my choice.

I love to read the many good and encouraging letters from the little flock who are looking and waiting for Jesus, though we are scattered as sheep are sometimes when the shepherd is gone. But the good Shepherd has his eye upon us, and will soon bring us all into one fold, and make us to lie down in green pastures and beside the still waters. The blessed hope of eternal life through Jesus is as precious to me as ever. I would not exchange it today for the whole world. I feel more and more determined to see the end of these things.

I have been disappointed, but I am not discouraged; cast down, but not destroyed; afflictions abide me, but God has not forsaken me, and will not unto the end, if I am faithful.

I do feel to rejoice and lift up my head, knowing that our redemption is at hand. The cry of peace and safety is about over and destruction is coming. The mighty nations of earth are now getting ready for a time of trouble such as never was before. The cup must be passed around, and all must drink. The great Image is about to be smitten on the feet, and the kingdoms of this world are to become the Kingdom of the Lord Jesus, no more to be broken up, but to stand forever.

The starting point seems to be Italy; the fire once begun there may fill the whole world very soon with a blaze that cannot be put out, nor smothered. There is not a single government upon earth that stands on a permanent foundation: all are trembling, and may it increase until they reel to and fro like a drunkard, and fall to rise no more.

Oh! Lord, let thy kingdom come, that that will may be done on the earth as it is done in heaven. Rend the heavens and come down! take to thyself thy great power and reign! let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end! Praise the Lord, O my soul!

Brethren, cheer up! the day is dawning; our trials are almost ended; our groans and sighs and tears will soon be forever put away; we now walk by faith, but soon, very soon, faith will be lost in sight. Soon we shall behold the glory of God, and our Redeemer as he is; be made like him, and experience that joy of which we now have but a small foretaste. We shall then meet all our Father's family, from righteous Abel, down to the last, and with that glorious company be gathered to our eternal home. We shall then sing redemption's song with voices that shall never tire, and shine as the sun in the kingdom of our Father. We shall then understand more fully the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. We shall then run and not be weary, walk and not faint.—There will the wicked cease to trouble, and the weary be forever at rest. The poor slave will be freed from his unmerciful master, and the voice of the oppressor no more be heard. No more death, no more pain. Brethren, let us press forward, the prize is sure; but let us keep in mind this truth, that it cannot be obtained without running to the end of the race. Let us run for life, and look not behind us, but remember Lot's wife. The Devil is come down to us in great wrath because he knoweth his time is very short; let us try to resist him a little longer and the conflict will be over,—the battle fought—the victory won. Thanks be to God, who hath promised to give us the victory through the Lord Jesus Christ.

Should the eyes of some poor sinner fall upon these lines, let him be assured that this is no cunningly devised fable, but truth, that will stand when all temporal things are passed away. "Awake thou that sleepest; and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Just look back on the past, and see the dealings of God with wicked men. Where are the antedeluvians who resisted God? Not even a stone marks their resting-place.—Look at the cities of the plain. The dark waters of the Dead Sea rest above them; they were burned to ashes—set forth as an example to those that should hereafter live ungodly.

Remember, sinner, that you, living under the sounding of the gospel, are much more accountable than they. O, be wise; flee to Christ and live while mercy is free.

Your Bro., looking for the sinner's friend. JOHN B. DODGE.

Redemption Sure.

It will not always be night. Morning will come at length. Tears will not always flow. We shall reach the world of smiles and songs at last. We depend not on the word of man, or angels, but on the plain word of our eternal God. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but his faithful promise shall not fail. How sweet the promise! "They shall be comforted." Not may be, or perhaps shall be. Blessed be God, I love to read it as it stands—"THEY SHALL BE COMFORTED."—Glory to God for His "shall be." E. B.

"Worship God."

Almost every thing else under heaven and in heaven is worshipped by the mass of mankind rather than God. A few worship God. Many who profess to worship God, only worship "a form of godliness." Some worship the acceptable minister of God. Some worship a fine meeting-house. Some worship a vain choir of singers. Some worship show and display. Some worship a sectarian church. Some worspip their gifts. Some worship their opinions. Some worship their "profession." It is a great thing to worship God! E. B.

FROM THE LORD'S PRAYER.

"I'll never forgive him—never!"

"Never is a hard word, John," said the sweet-faced wife of John Locke, as she looked up a moment from her sewing.

"He is a mean, dastardly coward, and upon this Holy Bible, I—"

"Stop, husband! John! remember he is my brother, and by the love you bear me, forbear to curse him. He has done you wrong, I allow—but O! John, he is very young and very sorry. The momentary shame you felt yesterday will hardly be wiped out with a curse. It will only injure yourself, John—O, don't say anything dreadful!"

The sweet-faced woman prevailed—the curse that hung upon the lips of the angry man was not spoken, but he still said, "I will never forgive him—he has done me a deadly wrong."

The young man who had provoked this bitterness, humbled and repentent, sought in vain for forgiveness from him, whom, in a moment of passion he had injured almost beyond reparation. John Locke steeled his heart against him.

In his little store sat the young village merchant, one pleasant morning, contently reading the morning paper. A sound of hurried footsteps approached, until a hatless boy burst into the store, screaming at the top of his voice, "Mr. Locke, Johnny is in the river—little Johnny Locke."

To dash down the paper and spring for the street was the first impulse of the agonized father. On, on, like a manaic, he flew to the river, pallid and crazed with anguish. The first sight that met his eyes, was little Johnny lying in the arms of his mother, who, with her hair hanging disheveled around her, bent wildly over her child. The boy was just saved; he breathed, and opening his eyes, smiled faintly in his mother's face, while she, with choking voice, thanked God.

Another form lay insensible near the child. From his head the dark blood flowed from a ghastly wound. The man against whom John Locke had sworn eternal hatred, had, at the risk of his own life, been the savior of his child. He had struck a piece of floating driftwood, as he came to the surface with the boy and death seemed inevitable.

John Locke flung himself on the green sward, and bent over the senseless form. "Save him," he cried huskily, to the doctor who had been summoned; "restore him to consciousness, if it be only for one little moment—I have something important to say to him."

"He is reviving," said the doctor.

The wounded man opened his eyes—they met the anxious glance of his brother-in-law, and the pale lips trembled forth—"do you forgive me?"

"Yes, yes, God is witness, as I hope for mercy hereafter, I freely forgive you; in turn I ask your forgiveness for my unchristian conduct."

A feeble pressure of the hand and a beautiful smile was all his answer.

Many days the brave young man hung upon a slender thread of life, and never were there more devoted friends than those who hovered over his sick bed. But a vigorous constitution triumphed, and pale and changed, he walked forth once more among the living.

"Oh! if he had died with my unkindness clouding his soul, never should I have dared to hope for mercy from my Father in heaven," said John Locketo his wife, as they sat talking over the solemn event that had threatened their lives with a living trouble. "Never, now that have tasted the sweetness of forgiveness, never again will I cherish revenge or unkindness towards the erring. For there is a new meaning in my soul, in the words of our daily prayer, and I see that I have only been calling judgments upon myself while I have impiously asked—"Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."—Ex.

Advantages of Expository Preaching.

1. The messages of the pulpit are, upon this plan, more likely to be received by the people with authority.

2. "The whole counsel of God" is, in this way, more apt to be delivered.

3. "Expository preaching" presents a strong inducement to keep up the knowledge of the Greek and Hebrew languages.

4. By this method, the pastor can bring out points, in practical duty, which he might not otherwise present.

5. It brings the mind of the preacher and people in direct contact with the Scriptures, and hereby opens to view that inviting and inexhaustible mine of truth.

6. By "the expository style," the preacher is less likely to run the circle, or deal out the peculiar views of a partisan and favorite leader.

7. The practice is commended by the example of Christ and his Apostles of whom we read as being "mighty in the Scriptures," and as "opening" Scriptures to their disciples.

HE is a fool who grumbles at every mischance. Put the best foot forward is an old maxim. Don't run about and tell acquaintances that you have been unfortunate. People do not like to have unfortunate people for acquaintances. Add to a vigorous determination a cheerful spirit it reverses come, bear them like a philosopher, and get rid of them soon as you can. Poverty is like a panther—look it in the face an it will turn from you.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Conversations Between a Brother and Sister.

BY JULIA A. FERRIS.

No. II.

Sr.—I am now ready to talk with you again, on the subject of our faith, if you have leisure.

Bro.—Certainly. We will first finish the subject already commenced, concerning the nature of God.

Sr.—We must be very careful and reverent when discussing the nature of the "high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity." Still, the more we know of a being who is altogether lovely, the more will our love for that being be increased. Therefore, it is our duty to "acquaint ourselves with him" and to learn all concerning himself which he has seen fit to reveal.

Bro.—Very well; He has seen fit to reveal that "God is a spirit." Do you believe this?

Sr.—Certainly; and that he is a consuming fire, and a husbandman, and a sun, a shield, and that he is love.

In the sense in which these terms are applied to him, I believe them to be properly applied. When speaking of his relation to the finally wicked, he is called a consuming fire. When speaking of his care over the vine of his own right hand planting, he is called a husbandman.—When speaking of him as the enlightener, and defender of his people, he is called a sun and a shield. When speaking of the spiritual, or pure and holy manner in which we should address him, he is called a spirit; conveying the idea, that as he is pure and holy, so in purity and holiness must he be worshiped. Now, I see no need of making confusion here, or of fancying, because he is called a consuming fire, that he must be a conflagration; or, because he is called a husbandman that he must be a farmer; or, because he is called a spirit, that he must be dissolved into a mere principle, without any distinct entity as a living being.

Bro.—Then you do not believe him to be an immaterial substance?

Sr.—Substance is matter, and immaterial matter is a term too ridiculous to be applied to anything, much less to the living God. No, brother, he is the living God, and not an immaterial substance.

Bro.—Then you cannot believe in his omnipresence..

Sr.—I believe he is omnipresent by his spirit; as when we say, "open the blinds, and let the sun into the room," the sun is present by its light and warmth, but the luminary itself is in the heavens; so, I believe the spirit of God is the vivifying, life-giving principle which pervades the universe; but the being whom we call God has his throne in the heavens. The idea of his omnipresence, (as Archbishop Whately says,) "strictly speaking, is not that God is everywhere present, but rather, that all things are present to him—as falling under his perfect knowledge, and complete control." He sitteth upon his throne in the heavens, judging right, and his whole created universe is present before him.—In short, the simple definition of my belief in God is, He is "Our Father which art in heaven."

Read that Book!

Not that old novel, not that almanac, not that old newspaper, but that Book of God; that Bible that has been covered with dust so long. Come, take that book and search it. You don't know how good it is. Come, dig, there's many a "placer" there richer than all the "diggins" of California, or Australia; there's many a rock there with more of the pure gold in it than all the auriferous quartz of the southern mountain chains.

Come, read that book! It is full of good things. There is food there, tender grass for little lambs, milk for babes, meat for them of full age, medicine for the sick, cordials for the faint, balm for the wounded, comfort for the disconsolate, life for the dead, salvation for the lost.

Come, read that book, search it, feed on it, hide it in your heart that you may not sin; let it dwell richly in you, let it fill and cheer your weary soul. Let it be a lamp to your feet, and a light to your path,—let it guide, comfort, strengthen and direct you.

Sinner, read that book and learn to escape the damnation of hell. Backslider, read that book and come back to Christ; if you had read it more you might have saved yourself sorrow and tears.

Christian, read that book; 'tis God's message of love to you, a sinful man.—Read it, believe it, obey it, and it shall make thee wise unto salvation. H. L. H.

A Lament.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

O thou holy, beloved, and ever-blessed One, why dwell I not with Thee? Why do I lonely sigh, and groan, and weep in exile anxiety? How long shall earth with its curse of desolation, and bands of corruption compass me about? When will the lingering hours of gloomy night retire before the splendor of eternal morning? When will the brooding clouds of mortal sorrow pass from over my anxious soul, and be succeeded by the clearness of smiling, immortal day. Alas for me! The joys of earth no longer attract my heart. I walk alone among the multitude, where the faithful are not found. My hope is not their hope. Their joy is not my joy. They speak of comfort which to me is no comfort. They tell of pleasure where I see nothing but boding sorrow, and gathering wretchedness. They point me to the bower of happiness, but I look only to see the precincts of death. I see them sporting on the very trembling border of the horrid gulf of final damnation. They mock my groans, deride my tears, laugh at my sighs, and scoff at my prayers. They do not comprehend my motives, and do not understand my designs.

I sigh for the society of the pure, the meek, and the holy. The few of such that I find are more lovely than I can tell. O when shall they all be gathered together into one place? Alas, and then I may not count one among them! O poor unworthy me! Was ever one so feeble, so poor, so needy, so erring, so inconsistent? Alas my Master! how ungratefully have I requited thy wonderful love! How slow have I been to believe! How cold my heart toward thee has often been! Canst thou possibly receive such an one as I into thy blessed kingdom?

And yet thou knowest that I love thee. My soul mourneth that I see not thy lovely face. I wait, but thou comest not. I watch for thee more than they who watch for the morning light; and still I sigh in disappointment. How often have my eyes fevered with holy anxiety, been lifted up to the heavens, eagerly imploring a sight of thy glorified form, and then have turned away, to dim again with anguish! O absent One, come and justify thy word, which now the wicked despise and trample under their unhallowed feet. Do they not return hatred for thy love, and turn thy merciful pleadings into ridicule? Alas, and do not those who profess to be thy very friends, thousands of them, hang up thy cause to bleeding reproach at the corner of every street? Many that loved thee once seem now to have forgotten thee. Some have turned to their farms, and have become absorbed beyond measure in that department; others to merchandise; and others otherwise; and few learn the lesson, so easy to learn, and practice too, to be "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Thy cause lieth largely waste and neglected. Alas, wilt thou find faith on the earth at thy coming?

Will the few of us who have given all for thee, and do still give all for thee, endure unto the end? By thy grace it must be so! We may be tempted, desolate, disappointed, yea, "killed all the day long," but we will, by thy help, be only for thee.

Parental Government.

BY ZETA.

No. III.

"And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Eph. 6: 4.

In former articles we have stated something of the importance of training children while very young, alluding to small acts which must be corrected, evils that must be stopped. Such items are as small fibres to the root of a plant, or tree, which gather nourishment from the soil, and produce the growth of the main body.

In the above text, fathers are first cautioned against the abuse of the mind or temper of his children—not to provoke them to wrath. In many instances this caution is not heeded.

There is a variety of ways to provoke to wrath, as well as "to love and good works;" and this great crime is often committed against children while still very young. They are often deprived of their proper rights, to see if they will contend for them, until all their stock of patience is exhausted: they are put in an uncomfortable position, to see how they will bear it; they are required to do what they cannot endure, to see their energy developed; they are sent on "fool's-errand," to see how they will act in disappointment, and in many other ways they are often tried, all in sport, by their thoughtless parents and tutors, to stir up their passion of resentment and hatred. When old enough to do service, and engage in amusements, improper tasks are required, without instruction, and scolding, threatening and whipping follows, if the task is not well performed.

All slight accidents, or imperfections in the child's course, are made occasions for scolding, fretting, or undue jesting and ridicule. Innocent amusements, and proper recreations are forbidden. Improper names are called, bitter sarcasm used in case of errors, or actual faults. All these and many more such things serve to provoke children to anger, and ruin their temper, by tampering with it, irritating, fretting and souring the mind, until all loveliness and goodness is driven out, and malice, hatred, and bitterness take their place.

In such cases, children have no inducements to be good, or to do right. They see nothing before them worthy the effort; consequently, the Lord has given the following admonition,—"Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be DISCOURAGED." Col. 3: 21.

The effort, then, should be made to encourage the minds of children to do well. To do this, God has charged fathers to "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." To bring them up, signifies to impart intellectual nourishment, to educate, gently reprove, to counsel against fault, to instruct in duties, to caution, direct, reprove, reclaim, &c.

To do this work, what instrumentality is the best adapted for our use?

We answer. The scriptures of the Old and New Testament contain the most healthful and useful instruction for children, of all writings extant. The word of the Lord is the most potent instrument With which you can instruct your children, when old enough to read, and get ideas from what they need. Here, the child can be shown, and taught the first principles of goodness, and obedience to God and his parents. All the principles of love, virtue, industry, temperance, gentleness, patience, forbearance, forgiveness, righteousness, &c., are here clearly taught and exemplified. Here are the most striking examples of the evil results of waywardness, idleness, disobedience, irreverence, avarice covetousness, anger, and other vices.

Let us for a moment carefully notice the importance which the Lord attached to the duty of teaching children his law. Hear. "And these words which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart. And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates. . . . . And when thy son asketh thee in time to come, saying, what meaneth the testimonies, and the statutes, and the judgments, which the Lord our God hath commanded you? Then thou shalt say unto thy son," &c. Please read Deut. 6: 6-25. Here the father is taught to instruct the child in the things the Lord has done for them. But mark, the father is first required to have "these words" in his own heart. This is important. Then the children will feel that there is some virtue in the instruction, when they see that their parents love and revere the words they teach them. It is also taught in Deut. 4: 9, 10. David makes mention of it in Ps. 78, in the most forcible language, saying, "I will utter dark sayings of old, which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us. We will not hide them from their children, showing to the generation to come the praises of the Lord, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done. For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers that they should make them known unto their children; that the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children, that they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments."

But few of the many statements of Scripture can be given which show the importance of instructing our children in the law of the Lord. But many parents seldom teach their children these things, because they make but little use of the word of the Lord for themselves, and know but little of its value. Others think children cannot understand scripture, and this is because they are taught by some teachers that they cannot understand it themselves. Others leave it all to the Sabbath-school teachers, but this will not be faithful treatment. The school, although it has been useful to a great extent, does not teach much of pure Bible and often teaches many hurtful heresies, which blind the minds of children. Parents must study the Bible, and love and obey it themselves, then faithfully, studiously and prayerfully teach it to their children. It will instruct, lead and admonish, better than anything else. It is the foundation of all wisdom and goodness.

The echo of love is love.

Our love to God is the response of His love to us. E. B.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

From Bro. H. Munger.

BRO. GRANT:—By request of a number of brethren, I will give, as near as I can, the state of the cause in the different places I have visited this month of December.

Winsted,—is recovering from a long sickness of chronic diarrhea; the body is yet weak, but the digestive organs are good, and crave the right kind of food, and are likely to live. Some have come in of late, and are determined to go on understandingly, hereafter.

Newfield,—is recovering from prostration of the whole system, probably caused by over action and taking sudden cold. But the body has commenced working, and each member is in his proper place. They will get along if they keep up a circulation, and guard against a relapse.

At Litchfield Station, the body is in tolerable working state, but rheumatism is lingering about. Exercising unto godliness will help many, much; a little bathing of the parts affected, with warm tears, probably, will work a cure soon.

Bridgeport.—The body here has been laboring under the spinal difficulty. The two sides suffered much for want of sympathy one with the other. But the warm bath system has worked well in this case, thus far. It has warmed the extremities and is likely to preserve what little internal heat there was left. The outer cords are relaxing, and a warming influence seems to pervade the whole system, and if they will follow the same course, and not take medicines from every quack, they will get into a healthier state, where they will see children begotten. The Lord give the increase and prevent a relapse.

Newark, N. J.—This body is not dead, but, like many others, is diseased by using strong food the year round. Salt and dry food, without a change, will give the scurvy; when the time comes to change the diet and resort to laxatives or vegetables, it must be done, to preserve a healthy state of the system. There are some stomachs that cannot take the same food the year round, and must not be blamed for going where they can get a change of diet. Internal heat is necessary here to give life to the body, and there are some signs of its taking place, by a change both in exercise and diet.

New York.—The body was struggling to rise from a general prostration, in consequence of a stagnant state of the blood. It only wanted a light surgical operation, when this was done, the lancet was followed with a rush of blood. Life and vigor appeared immediately. So sudden was the effect for the better, that it astonished all present; and members that had for months been opposing each other, to see which should be the greater, melted down before the Lord, and were willing to become servants according to Christ's example. Luke 22: 26. This sudden change so affected the congregation, that backsliders and sinners quailed, and over twenty rose for prayers. Some got blessed in such a wonderful manner, that they shouted old-fashioned, and gave glory to God in good earnest. We got the victory over the fear of the world, so much so, that the wicked in the Porter House, immediately under us, dismissed their shouting and came up to see what was going on over head. The Jews held a meeting in the third story, over ours, who probably never saw it on this fashion before. Some of them had an errand into our meeting. But nothing hindered it,—it went on in power until nearly ten in the evening, when I closed the meeting. There was a general rejoicing one with another, all willing to agree to go into the work anew, and try to save others; to stop debating on points of doctrine, as they had done, which caused this stagnation of blood; and if they will do these things, they will never fall.

Brn. Matthias and Roworth, and two other preachers, were present, rejoicing to see the work take a new start, and took hold in the name of the Lord. God will work, if we will let him, in his own way. I think his work has begun here. One sister said she was so blessed that it seemed to her she was dissolving. This is what the church wants, a melting or dissolving, instead of warring one against another. I left N. Y., Dec. 22, 4 o'clock P. M. Had a snow-storm — hard time — hindred ten hours.

Peacedale.—Here, there is a consistent and united body. They have been guarding for years against anything that would cause division or disease in the body; and have therefore been very successful. I stayed here two days. Some three or four serious. Two rose for prayers. There is a good number here that work for God, and but two or three brakemen. The whole church prize Bro. Hastings' labors, especially since he has left.

Providence. The body here is recovering from a partial smash-up in consequence of getting one wheel off the track in '54, on the days ending, and other extravagancies, that crept in unawares. But there is a steady intellectual and spiritual growth in grace, as in many other places. I was sick here two days with a cold. Stopped with Brn. Pray and Brewer. Took medicines from Dr. C. O. Towne, and started for New Bedford, by a special request.

New Bedford. Reached here at two o'clock, the 27th. A stranger, in unlucky circumstances, I traveled, in all, over five miles, before I got a place and then it was an inn. But as Christ had no place in one of those places, I was uneasy. When I got rested, I started again and found Bro. Howland; he took a stranger in, and I felt at home. I had a trial both of strength and patience, carrying a heavy valise two hours, being sick, to find a place to stop. Truly, I thought tending sawmill was preferable to this. But I found the brethren had made preparation for me, but I did not get hold of the arrangement, as they did not inform me. I anticipated a hard time, and was glad I had but one day to stay. But Sunday morning I was disappointed in seeing so large a congregation out in good season. I thought I discovered symptoms of dropsy in this large body; some of the limbs a little bloated; a rush of blood to the head, drowsiness and inactivity was manifest. I selected, for the first dose, Peter's medicine, found in his second letter, 1: 12. Most of them took it, saying, to add graces, was more necessary than doctrines, for the body lacked vitality.

Second dose, from Dr. Luke, 9; 23. This produced spasms in some parts of the body, which caused the water to run out of the eyes, and the bloat to grow less. This caused some sensation, and a few seemed to be troubled.

Third dose, from Paul, 1 Cor. 2: 11; this dose opened their eyes to see that God's people could know double as much as a sinner, or fancy professor, about the things of God. This caused some to rejoice, and some praised the Lord.

Unexpectedly to me, the church voted to have me stay the following week, which I consented to, on conditions they would stop contending and work for God, in helping sinners. Monday evening, I gave Job's pills, 14: 1. Shewed this world was full of trouble, from our birth to our death; and all mortality was chasing a shadow, while the devil was on their track, &c. Symptoms more favorable. Bloat going down.

Tuesday, at two o'clock, prayer and class meeting. Water runs off more freely—many confessed.

Tues. evening, I produced Malachi's search-warrant, Mal. 3: 8; and found fifteen or twenty acknowledged the fact of robbing, in tithes and offerings, in days past, and began to bring back and confess their guilt. This set the water running freely. One Californian confessed publicly, that he was the greatest robber in the house, and melted right down. This was like an electric shock; set others thinking. Some twelve rose for prayers. Thank God, I began to feel more at home, and more like getting over my trial and hoarseness.

Wednesday, two o'clock, had a good time talking from Heb. 11: 6; Showed that God was something, and had a body and parts; that our faith did not consist in a long, idle surmise, as some suppose, but in working out orders given to us, and expecting the thing promised, without consulting the forbidding circumstances, that seemed to stand in the way of obtaining it. Do what God tells us, and expect what he has promised us for that particular act. Works are the backbone of faith; no works injure the spine, and wrong works break both legs, and the body is maimed. This new idea started a number to commence working for faith, instead of expecting it without working. They got blessed in the first start, and we had a good meeting.

At ten o'clock in the evening, (it being watch-night) by a special request, I went over to the Christian meeting-house, and talked from Isa. 43: 10. The congregation, seeing a stranger, and hearing a strange discourse, secured the best order and attention. Many wept, and nearly thirty came forward for prayers, determined to commence the new year by giving their hearts to God. A good number got blessed and told of it.

This is the first time I ever met with this sect anywhere. But I found wheat among the chaff, as in all other places. I hope the sifting time will soon come, that the wheat may be gathered into God's garner. The preacher in this church is very liberal in sentiments, and has some of the spirit of the first founder of this church in this place,—Elias Smith, 1807.

Thursday, the 2nd, meetings were well attended, and a growing interest. Esther's history presented, to show the wonderful works of God, in taking weak instruments to accomplish great ends. This produced good effect.

Friday afternoon some spasms appeared, but so many members had got better, that a fit was prevented. In the evening, I gave Timothy's powders, to show the cause of these spasms, and prevent the brethren from supposing gain to be godliness, as some had done, debating about questions to no profit, and striving to be rich and to get the mastery. This will always produce such spasms, bnt the godliness that brings contentment is the right kind; this will be a great nervine, and will prevent these spasms. Even if we are poor we shall be content. See Tim. 6: 6, 7. This seemed to quiet the nerves, and the body appeared moist and warm, generally.

Saturday. Very stormy, but we had two good meetings, and fair weather in the house.

Sunday. Three meetings. Many out, some of all kinds. I gave tonics, and strengthening bitters, which produced action. Strangers were astonished to see such unity and strength. The Lord worked by his people all day, and especially in the evening. From twenty to thirty rose for prayers, and the church was in good praying order—the time well improved. There is a large body here, in good working order, and I expect they will not winter-kill. I did as well as I could in carrying them through a course of medicine.

HIRAM MUNGER.

For the Crisis.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

BRO. GRANT:—It is some time since I have spoken through the press to the reproach-bearing people, looking for redemption.

Various have been the reasons, but poor health has been the main one. Since May, I have been unable to labor in the field but part of the time, and although still ailing, I am better than I have been, for which I do thank the Lord. Sometimes I feel sad; then I look over the promises and know they are sure; then my head is up and I am rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

I am still winging my way among the flock of God, doing all I can in Jesus' name, by way of exhortation, stirring them up by way of remembrance, to double their diligence, holding on the "one faith," that purifies the heart and overcometh the world. Since July, I have spent most of my time in this State, Conn., and in N. H. I find a variety of views among us. But good religion can get along among them all, without being cross or willful.

I go to preach where there are some believers in the "Age to come" and what shall I do? My commission being like Paul's to the Gentiles, I preach them a gospel that winds up with the age, or dispensation. They tell of an age in which mortal and immortal, righteous and wicked will be in dreadful conflict, with Christ ...d, subjugating his enemies. I look for Isaiah's "age"—"they shall all be righteous." "They shall inherit the land (earth) forever."

Again, they tell me of a thousand years' reign of Christ on David's throne. I turn to Luke; he assures me that David's throne shall be established, and that He that shall be called the Son of the Highest, shall sit upon it AND REIGN.

How long?

"Of His kingdom there shall be no end." I say Amen.

Again, they tell of special favors for Jews, and others under the new Covenant in the future age. I think this a great error; but I don't fly all to pieces about it, for I am sane enough to know that it will all be right when Jesus comes. And by grace I am determined to be where I shall say Amen, at the fulfillment of the word of life.

I see there is a desire for harmony in the body, and it is quite desirable; but not at the expense of truth. Every one taking the word for his standard, with freedom to think and speak in the gospel, should concede the same to others, leaving off measuring men, only "by their fruits." This could but result in good, and bring about a oneness visible, which the church possesses.

I see with grief, some falling off on the right hand, others on the left; worldly-mindedness creeping in, the power of the gospel disappearing, all showing that we have come over the right track, and our Lord is coming; and that when he does come, there will be but little faith, and that will be among the JUST.

If there ever was a time when all our energies should be enlisted in the one all important work of saving men by the preaching of the Gospel, it is now. And while we have nothing to boast of, we are a peculiar people, having been made so by a recognition of the fulfillment of dispensational truth, due the church at this time.

We are in the toes of the great image; the signs have been seen in the heavens; the track of blood can be plainly seen. The sun has responded to the call, the moon could but speak, and refused her light; the stars, as by prophetic eye, loose their balance, and fall to the ground. In keeping with the sure word, "the powers of the heavens shall be shaken"—thrones crumble in its fulfillment. The last deceptions are visible everywhere; the hour of temptation is fully come! O what wait we for now, but the opening heavens to reveal Him whom our souls love. Glory to God! He is soon to be revealed in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. The judgment is right upon us. Your duty is now to be up, awake, watching. I feel well with the prospect right upon us. Glory, immortality, eternal life.

I pity the cold-hearted, covetous, worldly, self-righteous, self-loving, honor-seeking, backslidden in heart and life. Their doom will be certain, unless they speedily repent and turn to their first love, and do their first works. The people looking for Jesus must come on to higher and holier ground, or their identity will be lost, and they lost too. O that their faith might be increased, and this would give vigor to the branch, and it would bring forth fruit—a new crop.

Why, we are the people that are to be in readiness to be translated at a moment's warning, and caught up together with the sleeping dead, which will be aroused by the last trump. O Lord, revive thy work, and speak to thine own covenant-abiding people once more. Amen.

It is no time to look for a world to be converted, or to look for a political reform, in the nation. The old engine with her mighty train is running the down grade; her directors and conductors cannot stop it, if they would, "and they would not if they could." The great godlike business for us all is, to snatch men as from the fire, for soon all is over, it will be too late —the gulf of destruction is reached.

This is a sad picture but truthful. The end of all things is at hand. Brethren, in the name of the Lord and by his grace, love and mercy, let us gird up the "loins of our mind," have more confidence in the Lord and his blessed truthful word, letting the last cord be cut that binds us here, and run, not as uncertain, but crying, life, eternal life.

I have seen of late some things that encourage me to still labor on in the field. The Lord is with us, and will be to the end. Amen and Amen.

Brethren, don't forget me, in my feeble state, in your prayers. I long for the better day of glory.

Thy brother in hope,

L. BOUTELL.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 14, 1857.

A Question.

A friend of mine, a believer in the existence of spirits separate from the body, wishes me to ask you to reconcile the words of Christ, John 11: 26, (And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die;") with the doctrine that the dead are unconscious.

G. HALL.

ANSWER.

We see no reason why this passage is not in harmony with the unconscious state of the dead. The text itself clearly intimates that those who do not believe in him at the time when this scripture is fulfilled will die. If this verse teaches the conscious state of the dead, it is only of those who believe in Christ, as the Savior of men, which would cut off nearly all who believe in modern spiritualism, besides every other class of infidels. It is plain that the promise in this passage applies alone to the righteous, thus proving that no wicked man is conscious after death. By observing the context, we think the plain meaning of the passage will appear.

Ver. 14. "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." If Lazarus was conscious, then he was not dead, for the Bible declares—"the dead know not any thing." If he was not dead, then the Savior's statement was not true, for he positively asserts—"Lazarus is dead." We see no possible way to prove he was immortal and alive, only by impeaching the testimony of Jesus. Has any one the presumption to make the attempt? Lazarus was not only dead, but "he had lain in the grave four days." "Martha said unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." It appears that Martha did not suppose her brother was alive and conscious.

"Jesus saith unto her, thy brother shall rise again." Observe, he does not say he shall come from heaven and enter his body again. "Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." She had not been instructed as some are at the present time, that the resurrection takes place at death. She does not say I know he did rise into the spheres, or ascend to heaven more than four days since, but, "I know that he shall rise."

"Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." When? "In the resurrection at the last day." What will the Lord do with his children who are alive on the earth at that time?

Ans. "Whosoever liveth (at that time) and believeth in me shall never die. This was a new truth to Martha, hence the Savior says, "believest thou this?"

Paul is afterwards instructed to write on this point to his brethren, and to say in 1 Cor. 15: 51, "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep (or die) but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." When? "At the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."—Again, in 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17, he makes the point still plainer—"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we, which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air."

We see clearly from these passages, that John 11: 26, ("whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die,") is to be fulfilled at the coming of the Lord at the last day, when the dead will be raised, and when those living at that time, who believe in Jesus, will be translated like Enoch and Elijah without dying, and "be changed in a moment" from mortal to immortality, and at the same time the dead in Christ shall rise from their graves and be gathered unto Christ.

To the Subscribers of the Christian Reformer.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—You will see by the "circular" in another column, that the Crisis committee have purchased Bro. Turner's mail book, hoping that all parties interested may be mutually benefited, and that we may form a pleasing acquaintance with the patrons of the Reformer. We shall try to make the Crisis just such a paper as is needed at the present time, one calculated to comfort and strengthen the christian reader during these last day perils.

We hope that a veil of charity may be thrown over our past mistakes in theory and practice; and what we ask for ourselves, we freely grant to others; and by the help of the Lord we will endeavor to be more fully than ever,—Bible christians.

N. B.—Those who send for the Crisis were subscribers to the Reformer, are requested to mention it when they write.

CIRCULAR.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS: My former Patrons and Subscribers:—I have come to the conclusion at last, that I shall not, at present, if ever, publish an Advent paper. My state of health and embarrass-circumstances are such as to make it impossible to do so with safety and propriety.

I have contracted with the committee of the Crisis, to sell them my mail book on the following conditions:—

I convey to them my mail book, containing the names of all the subscribers to the Reformer, for which they agree to pay me fifty cents for every one of those subscribers, who become paying subscribers to the Crisis, or half of every dollar paid them.

They pay me sixty dollars in advance, and when they shall have secured 120 subscribers from my book, not now on theirs, the sixty dollars will be paid; then, I shall receive fifty cents for every subscriber obtained, not now on their books, who pays in advance.

All I receive for my subscribers, will be counted on the "old debt" of the Watchman; so that, by the advanced sixty dollars, the "old debt" is made so much less; and should all my old paying subscribers become advance paying subscribers for the Crisis, nearly half ths old debt would be thus paid, and then, with a little effort on the part of the ministry, the rest could soon be paid me, and I should be freed from embarrassment—should be again myself.

From this time, the little influence I have will be exerted in favor of the Crisis. I shall do all I gn to increase its patrons, for where no Advent paper is taken, the glorious truths for which I have suffered so much in common with others, is dying out.

This State is suffering much for the want of a a soul-stirring Advent paper, and I really hope the Crisis will from this time supply this pressing want.

Dear brethren and sisters, I invite you to become subscribers for the Crisis at once, and to pay for it in advance. One number will be sent you with this Circular, and you will feel, I trust, that you can no longer do without it. Subscribe for it at once, for by so doing, you will be accomplishing several good things. You will be helping me essentially, you will be paying the "old debt," you will be blessing yourselves, and families if you are parents, you will help the Committee of the Crisis, and will be aiding, in a very important manner, in keeping the Advent truths before the world.

I trust these considerations will induce you to become subscribers without delay, that we may all be benefited together.

It pains my heart thus to take my leave of you as a publisher and Editor, but, it must be so; nevertheless, as I may have opportunity, I shall still address you. I remain unchanged in regard to the truths I have advanced; they are all as dear to me as they ever were, but, I can now do but little toward spreading them, as I am obliged to earn a living.

To those who have not paid me for the Reformer, AND TO NONE ELSE, let me say, if you have religion! if you have honor!! if you have simple benevolence, and are not too poor to go abroad yourselves, you will pay me what you owe me, and pay it now. I am in great want, and what is due me from my subscribers would make me and my family comfortable. Please forward what you owe me now, and direct to Elder J. Turner, Hartford, Conn. To become subscribers, send your name and money to Elder Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., Crisis box. Yours as ever,

J. TURNER.

Slander.

"Whoever brings derogatory charges against the established character of another, without proof of the same; and whoever circulates such unproved charges, is guilty of slander, and is to be dealt with ecclesiastically for the purpose of securing repentance, acknowledgment, and reparation."

MISS BEECHER.

"There are loose ideas respecting our obligations not to take up a slanderer's report against another. Men do not realize as they should the sin of circulating false reports. It is sin, because God has forbidden it. 'Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.' It is forbidden, because to lie about another, subjects the subject of falsehood to a great amount of unnecessary suffering. It alienates friends, man's confidence, impugns motives, blasts reputation, and destroys character.

Solomon says, 'He that uttereth a slander is a fool.' Prov. 10: 18. He is such if he does it with good intentions. If he does it maliciously, he is a knave. The Psalmist says, 'Whoso privily slandereth his neighbor, him will I cut off.' Ps. 101: 5. Jeremiah speaking of 'grevous revolters,' says, 'they are walking with slanders.' Jer. 6: 28.

Again, he says, 'Take ye heed every one of his neighbor, and trust ye not in any brother; for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbor will walk with slanders; and they will deceive every one his neighbor, and will not speak the truth.' Jer. 9: 5. St. Paul makes a man incapable of holding the office of a deacon, if his wife, even, be a slanderer. 1 Tim. 3: 10, 11."—Advent Herald of July 20th, 1850.

"Let it be graven upon our memory, that the person who repeats a slander, even though he give the name of his author, is no better, and far more mischievous, than its originator. He endorses the lie by his repetition of it; and as, without his endorsement, it could never gain credit, he is responsible for the mischief by the law of God and man.

We would take a spurious note far more readily from an honest man than from a known counterfeiter, and every additional hand it passes through, adds to deceptions. Besides, slander is more accumulative than a snow-ball. It is like a salad, which every one will season to his own taste, or the taste of those to whom he offers it; or like the kite of a child, to which additional exaggerations are attached, each light in itself, but together forming a counterbalancing weight, without which the airy trifle would fall again to the earth, when, with eager speed, he runs to make it soar aloft." —The Golden Vase.

How then can those who persist in slandering others ever expect to attain to eternal life. The evil of this one sin is incalculable. Think of its frequent occurrence, and that amongst those who pretend that they are waiting for the judgment. Away with such pretensions while by your conduct you prove that you have no saving faith in the occurrence of a future judgment. What! believe that God will destroy the slanderer, and while persisting in the sin pretend to be looking and longing for the very event which will secure your destruction! Preposterous! May the mercy of God be granted to all such ere it is too late! too late!

JOHN HOWELL.

For the Crisis

"Repent and be Converted."

BY H. PRATT.

No. III.

Nothing is more crossing to the natural man than denying self, yet it is the first principle of action in the pathway of life.

When we are converted to God it is to be his servants—to walk with him, fear him, "and keep his commandments, and obey his voice, and serve him, and cleave unto him." Deut. 13; 4.

The Lord will have a tried people—he will prove you as he did ancient Israel, "to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul."

The Lord has not only made the pathway plain, but has had prophets to warn of dangers, and lastly, the spirit of truth to guide into all truth.

Micaiah pointed out the way to Jehoshaphat, but he was so anxious for a union with Ahab, although his hands were yet dripping with the blood of Naboth, that he refused to be converted or directed by the prophet of the Lord, and so up he went to Ramoth-gilead and only saw his mistake in time to save his life.

Jehoshaphat was anxious to know the word of the Lord; and the lying prophets all say go; but he asks again, "is there not here a prophet of the Lord besides, that we might inquire of him?" "There is yet one man, Micaiah, the son of Imla, by whom we may inquire of the Lord; but I hate him."

However, Micaiah is called, and flattered to speak smooth things like all the rest of the prophets; but no, thank God, there was one that would tell the truth, though he provoked the king, maddened the prophets, and was smitten on the mouth by the man that had made the iron horns, and finally, is shut up in prison. A blessed good salary for the man of God.

Now, as Jehoshaphat refused to be converted by Micaiah, he meets another seer on his return, who said to him, "shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord."

Nevertheless, he repented and concluded afterwards to fight the battles of the Lord alone; and when Moab and the children of Ammon and the Ammonites came out against him, instead of calling upon Ahab, or the king of Israel, he called on the Lord and the spirit of the Lord came upon Jahaziel, and he said, "hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat; thus saith the Lord unto you, be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not yours but God's. . . . Ye shall not need to fight in this battle; set yourselves, stand ye still and see the salvation of the Lord with you."

Here was the guide-post of the Lord for them, and Jehoshaphat was converted by it, and bowed himself, and all Judah and Jerusalem fell before the Lord worshiping the Lord, "and Jehoshaphat stood and said (being converted he could now strengthen his brethren), "Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem; believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established: believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper."—Glory to God, for such conversions as that "The law of God is perfect converting the soul."

For the Crisis.

From H. Grew.

BRO. GRANT—The perusal of an article on the Sabbath in your interesting periodical induces me to offer a few thoughts on the nature of positive institutions as distinguished from moral precepts.

Moral precepts are founded on the immutable principles of justice and righteousness. They are commands to do right which is the duty of all intelligences in the universe, the infinitely holy and blessed God not excepted.

The positive institutions of the old and new testaments of divine appointments, such as sacrifices of animals, feast days, sabbaths &c., are founded on the sovereign will and pleasure of God, and, not being violations of moral principle, are binding so long as the Almighty is pleased to require their observance.

Positive institutions are mutable. Moral precepts are immutable. The same positive institutions, (which are tests of obedience,) are not appropriate to different dispensations; consequently, they have been changed by divine wisdom.

Sacrifices, sabbaths, &c., which were shadows of things to come, (even of Him who has come) are "done away." Col. 2: 16, 17, and whosoever allows another to judge him as disobedient for not keeping a sabbath day, violates the divine command. But if the fourth commandment was a moral precept, it would be still binding and must remain so. To change the day would be an immorality. To do any manner of work on the seventh day would be an immoral act.

It is true indeed that disobedience, both in respect to moral precepts and divine positive institutions, involves immorality, not, however, because positive institutions are, in themselves considered, of a moral nature, but because it is an immoral principle to disobey any command of God, he being perfect, it is morally impossible that he should require anything which is morally wrong.

Some persons maintain the arbitrary proposition, that a thing is right primarily and simply, on the ground that God does it. They say it is right because God does it. It appears more correct to say, that God does it because it is right. If every thing that God does is right primarily and simply because God does it, what becomes of his moral character?

Were this the case, he would appeal to no other standard than his own will. He does, however, appeal to the immutable standard of righteousness in various passages, such as the following: "Judge ye between me and my vineyard." "Are not my ways equal and yours unequal?" So Abraham understood this subject, when he said, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Inferentially, indeed, it is true that a thing is right because God does it. We infer this justly from the glorious truth that God is too perfect to err either in wisdom or goodness.

I rejoice, dear brother, to notice the general disposition of the brotherhood at your late meeting, to inculcate the principle of forbearing love, until "that which is perfect is come." May divine mercy prepare us for that welcome day of our Lord's appearing. Yours in christian love,

HENRY GREW,

Phila. Jan. 9. 1857.

NEVER court the favor of the rich by flattering either their vanities or the vices.

For the Crisis.

From Bro. A. F. Cressy.

Bro. Grant:—I feel it my duty to write a few lines for the Crisis. Feeling cast down beneath the burden of a guilty conscience, I am resolved by the help of the Lord, no longer to walk in the path of the transgressor. Having once enjoyed a fullness of the spirit of the Lord, I am constrained to cry out as did Job;—"O that I were as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me. When his candle shined upon my head, and when by his light I walked through darkness."

Having found by sad experience that the way of the transgressor is hard, I take this method of writing to the brethren to inform them, that, by the help of the Lord, I will no longer live upon the husks which are fit only for swine; but "I will arise and go to my Father" where there is bread enough and to spare. Having once had a taste of the bread of heaven, I can never forget the glorious feast.

I can only look back upon my life for the past year with a feeling of remorse, for, as Job says, "They that are younger than I, have me in derision." And why should they not? for I have neither feared God nor loved men. And I can assure the brethren of North Adams, that I will yet prove myself to be an honest man before God, and I trust before men. Could the church in that place know of the suffering I have endured for the year past on account of my unfaithfulness. I am sure it would constrain each member to live with an eye single to the glory of God. O may we together, and from henceforth live in a manner acceptable to God, keeping his commandments. For, it is written,—"Blessed are they who do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates, into the city." This is my prayer, and I trust that the church will say, amen.

Your unworthy brother,

For the Crisis.

From Bro. A. Andrews.

Bro. Grant:—You left us the 24th of Nov. and your visit was a blessing to the little church. The next Tuesday and Thursday evenings we had heavenly meetings. Sunday the 30th, Bro. Munger was with us, and preached three times, also Monday evening, Dec. 1st. On Tuesday evening, the 2nd, a good prayer meeting at Bro. Bassett's. Thursday and Friday evening, 4th and 5th, Bro. Brewer was was with us at the Chapel, and preached on historical prophecy. Saturday evening, the 6th, prayer meeting at Bro. Osborne's; and two converts (of that day) testified what the Lord had done for them. Sunday, Bro. Ira Morgan gave three sermons at the chapel, and last night we had a prayer meeting.

In our meetings the influence has been most heavenly, and the work of the Lord has progressed. Quite a number have turned to the Lord, and backsliders are returning at almost every meeting. Our meetings were never in a healthier state; and the prospect now is that this good work is to continue, and many souls are to be converted, and backsliders from the churches reclaimed. Last evening an awful bad backsliders from the Methodist church, came in and confessed, and begged for prayers; and a sister from the Baptist church, came and desired prayers for the conversion of her husband.

We are having very solemn times, but they are happy times for the little flock. Let us throw off our contracted views and exercise faith with works, and God will give us an abundant harvest. This is the prayer of your unworthy brother, that we may come to the kingdom with our sheaves with us.

Yours in love, Ali Andrews.

Long Sermons.—At the South Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, the presiding Bishop decided long sermons, except on very special occasions, to be improper, contrary to the discipline, to the practice of "the Fathers," and, to some extent, subversive of the ends of the Christian ministry. The limit, on ordinary occasions, according to the Bishop, hould be from thirty to forty-five minutes.

Truth is like a torch—the more it is shaken the more it shines. But it sometimes burns people's noses Can't help hat—such noses had better keep out of ʼl (way.

In governing others you must do what you can do, not what you would do.

DO GOOD.

Do good! do good! there's ever a way,
A way where there's ever a will;
Don't wait till to-morrow, but do it to-day,
And to-day, when the morrow comes, still.

If you've money, you're armed, and can work enough
In every street, alley, and lane,
If you've bread, cast it off, and the waters, though rough,
Will be sure and return it again.
Then do good, do good, there's ever a way,
A way where there's ever a will—a will;
Don't wait till to-morrow, but do it to-day,
And to-day, when the morrow comes, still.

Obituary.

The melancholy intelligence has recently reached us, that our amiable and much loved sister in Christ—Mrs. Susan Dillwyn Conner, late consort of Commodore Conner,—died at Cintra, Torquay, England, on Sunday morning, Nov. 30th, 1856.

This afflicting news reached us by the Torquay Directory, an English paper, and by a letter from her friend, Mrs. Read, of Philadelphia.

The health of Mrs. Conner was seriously impaired, and her feeble constitution received a severe shock last spring, at the death of her honored husband, from which she never recovered. During the summer, she embarked for England, hoping that the voyage would revive her nearly exhausted strength. But, on arriving in England, she became gradually weaker till the last Sunday morning in Nov., when she sweetly sank, without one struggle, to sleep in Jesus, in hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie, promised before the world began, unto our glory!

Many are the tears of christian affection that will spring spontaneously, and freely flow in memory of her cherished name. But the object of this notice is to state briefly the facts relative to her death.

She possessed in a high degree the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price." Her last days were most peaceful, in sweet accord with her habitual trust in Jesus during the years of her unobtrusive, but exemplary life. Nothing but the grace of God can fill the void which death has made in her family, and large circle of christian friends. Our earnest prayer is, that the void may be so filled. O Lord, endue us more plentifully, with thy heavenly grace, that when thou shalt "gather thy jewels" we may be "counted worthy" of a place among them, and so "bear the image of the heavenly—the Lord from Heaven."

The soul fills at the mere mention of a destiny so blessed and glorious! The spirit thrills at the thought of meeting all the excellent, the amiable, the wise, and the worthy,—enrobed in glory that well becomes "the bride"—the brethren of the King of Kings, in Paradise restored.

Our lamented sister cherished this hope more than her life. It is the blessed hope—the appearing of the glory of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ. To her it seemed an impending event, for which she needed to be habitually "ready." "Then this mortal shall put on immortality." "And so shall we ever be with the Lord."

"O glorious hour! O bless'd abode!
We shall be near and like our God!
And flesh and sense no more control,
The sacred pleasures of the soul."

J. B. Cook.

Died in Lawrence, Mass. Dec. 12th, '59, George W., son of Dudley L. and Eliza W. Stokes, aged four months. His sickness was short, but distressing, the disease being lung fever and congestion of the brain. God's grace enabled Bro. and sister Stokes calmly to give up their little one, and in this hour of affliction this blessed hope imparts comfort.

Died, in Gardiner Mass., June 21, '56. Sr. Sylvia Perley, aged forty six years and two days. She was sick eight months. She murmured not, but endured her great suffering with christian patience. She selected the text to be preached from at her funeral, found in 1 Thess. She looked for that "blessed hope." Martha Perley.

Domestic Summary.

Polygamy and Slavery.—Brigham Young turns all the arguments for Slavery to the account of Polygamy, and talks about his peculiar institution, defends it by scripture, and extols its virtues in much the same way that our Southern brethren defend and extol slavery. He further copies the South by declaring that if polygamy is not tolerated he will go out of the Union; but we do not notice that he demands its forcible extension. He says in one of his recent sermons:

"It is not the prerogative of the President of the United States to meddle with this matter, and Congress is not allowed, according to the Constitution, to legislate upon it. If Utah was admitted into the Union as a sovereign State and we chose to introduce slavery here, it is not their business to meddle with it.

If we introduce the practice of polygamy, it is not their prerogative to meddle with it; if we should turn to be Roman Catholics to-day, if we all turn to the old Mother Church, it would not be their prerogative, it would not be their business, to meddle with us on that account. If we are Mormon's or Methodists, or worship the sun or a white dog, or if we worship a dumb idol, or all turn Shaking Quakers and have no wife, it is not their prerogative to meddle with these affairs, for in so doing they would violate the Constitution.

There is not a Territory in the Union that is looked on with so suspicious an eye as Utah, and yet it is the only part of the nation that cares any thing about the Constitution.

'Mormonism' is true, and all hell cannot overthrow it. All the devil's servants on the earth may do all they can, and as Br. Clinton has just said, after twenty-six years faithful operation an exertion by our enemies, including the time when Josepq had scarcely a man to stand by him, and when the persecution was as severe on him as it ever was in the world, what have they accomplished? They have succeeded in making us an organized Territory, and they are determined to make us an independent State or Government, and as the Lord lives it will be so. (The congregation shouted amen.) I say, as the Lord lives, we are bound to become a sovereign State in the Union, or an independent nation by ourselves, and let them drive us from this place if they can: they cannot do it. I do not throw this out as a banter; you gentiles, and hickory and basswood "Mormons" can write it down if you please, but write it as I speak it.

I am still Governor of this Territory, to the constant chagrin of my enemies; but I do not in the least neglect the duties of my Priesthood, nor my office of Governor; and while I honor my priesthood I will do honor to my office as Governor — This is hard to be understood by the wicked, but it is true."

Horrible State of Affairs at the South.—From time to time we have found in Southern papers accounts of intended slave risings, arrests of slaves, some of whom have been whipped to death, and others hung. A lull follows, and the previous accounts are denounced from the same quarter as exagerations. It is evident, however, that there still exists a wide-spread alarm at the South. The late papers from various sections of that region are filled with details of further arrests, followed in some cases by a resort to lynch law on the supposed guilty parties.

"Last Wednesday week, about 12 o'clock, the news came here that the negroes at the furnaces at Stewart county had rebelled, and that they had crossed the Cumberland river, and would attack Lafayette that nght, and with this came other rumors from Dover.—I fixed up immediately and went to Lafayette that night. The report I found to be false, but the town was in a state of perfect excitement upon the negro question. The citizens had called to-gether their most substantial men and formed a committee, and were engaged in the examination of the negroes. I was permitted to witness the investigation, which was rather general and indefinite, but others had told startling facts in regard to the insurrection. Mr. Rust owing to the excitement, had dismissed his school that morning. Thursday morning I went to Dover, and arrived there about 2 o'clock. The people had hung four negroes at 11 o'clock that morning, and two more then in town were to be hung. I got to the place of execution in time to see the last one got off. Of the six that were hung, three were preachers. They were all proved to be ringleaders. I learned that the men at the forge were at work whipping the truth out of their negroes, so I rode out there that night, and was up with them all night. I never had such feelings in my life. I saw a list of negroes that had been whipped, and was told what they all had stated, and then I heard the balance examined, some taking five and six hundred lashes before they would tell the tale, but when they did tell it it was the same as all the others had told. Some told the whole story without taking a lick.

Those that were examined were not permitted to see those that were not; they were kept entirely separate, and a guard over each.—One of the negroes at the forge died from whipping that night, several hours after the operation.

The substance of the testimony there was, that Christmas eve they were all to "rise.'—Old Hal, Amos, Anderson, Grey and Ishmael, were to murder Parish, the manager, and his family, except his wife, and she in future was to be the wife of Ishmael.

They were to kill young Pepper next (brother of Judge Pepper), and other whites that might be about the place.

They were then to meet the Mill negroes at the forks of the road at Pidget's, near Long Creek, and were to make a joint charge upon Dover; after they had cleaned up Dover and provided themselves with arms and ammunition, they were to scatter out over the country generally. At the mill, the negroes, or rather Bob Murrell, was to kill George Lewis first, then Henry Erwin, and then the balance indiscriminately.

Lewis and Erwin whipped Bob Morris to death. At the old Dover furnace, Charlie Napier was to kill young Tom Buckingham next, and Bill Blair was to kill Edward, George's son, and Henry and Willy Lynus, and then go to the mill. Robert George hung Charley Napier one day about 11 o'clock, and let him hang till next day about 1 o'clock—26 hours.

We are at work here to-day. We have one negro in chains, and will hang him, I think, certain; if the committee will not, the community are determined to do it. I think we will have quite an exciting time before we get through.

I have no doubt but that it is a universal thing all over the Southern States, and that every negro fifteen years old, either knows of it or is into it; and the most confidential house servants are the ones that are to be the most active in the destruction of their own families.

The negroes, everywhere they are examined, all agree that the men, women and children are to be slain, and that the young women are to be kept as wives for themselves, and a good many of them about Dover and the furnaces, went so far as to select their future companions.

A brilliant meteor, in appearance like a rocket, showering large pieces of fire, was seen in many places in Eastern Massachusetts last Friday morning. The light from it was as bright as that of noonday, and in several places a loud report was heard.

A fight took place on Christmas day among a number of Philadelphir oystermen in Patuxent river—One man was killed and buried at Drum Point. Three others were taken ashore wounded. Three boats were lashed together and the fight continued all night.

Beware of talkative professors; they are generally dangerous characters; wise Christians are "swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath."

Prosperity is no just scale; adversity is the only balance to weigh friends.

Foreign News.

Arrival of the Fulton.

Sandy Hook, Dec. 31, 1 P. M.

The steamship Fulton, from Havre 17th inst., has passed this point.

The quarrel between Switzerland and Prussia, had gone so far that it was feared the next step would be to open hostilities.

Milaud, who attempted to assassinate the King of Naples had been hung.

The British had taken the Island of Ormuz and Karack.

The navigation of the Baltic was reopened Dec. 14.

Constantinople advices state that Persia had recognized, by proclamation, the English declaration of war.

The Russians under Gen. Phillipson, have re-taken Souyoak, Kalph, after a gallant resistance by the Circassians.

Arrival of the Niagara.

Halifax, Dec. 31.

The Royal Mail steamship Niagara, from Liverpool, at 3 P. M. on Saturday, 20th inst., arrived here at 11, 30 this evening, en route for Boston.

Prussia is making great preparations to move against Switzerland. Considerably more than two army corps, as first intended, will be mobilised for immediate service.

AUSTRIA.

The state of public feeling is reported to be so bad in Hungary that the Austrian heads of departments are to meet in consultation on the subject.

Arrival of the North American.

Portland, Jan. 8.

The steamship North American, Capt. Grange from Liverpool, 8 A. M. Dec. 24, arrived at this port at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

THE CONGRESS OF PARIS.

Contradictory statements respecting the Conference continue to abound. The principal statement is in letters from Vienna of 14th, stating that Count Buol had received from Count Walewski no official notification that France cannot accept the interpretation of the Belgrade and Isle of Serpents questions, in the absolute sense determined on by England, Austria and Turkey. Count Buol had sent this unexpected announcement, in all haste, to the Emperor in Italy.

Paris papers publish the text of the letter, under reserve.

The London Globe, the British government organ, denies that there is any difficulty in the way between France and England.

The London Daily News believes the difficulty does exist, and will postpone the meeting of the Congress indefinitely.

The Paris Debats thinks that all hope of adjustment is not lost, and the Congress may open within the time specified.

The Paris Constitutionnel thinks Congress will open early in January, and be satisfactory.

PRUSSIA AND SWITZERLAND.

Diplomatic relations are broken off between Prussia and Switzerland, and matters are becoming extremely complicated.

No reply had been received up to the 16th to the note of the 8th, addressed by Prussia to the Great Powers, on the affair of the Neufchatel. It was. however, supposed that Russia and France would approve, while England and Austria disapprove, of an armed demonstration by Prussia.

Meantime, Prussia persists in forcible measures. Prussia has notified the Germanic Diet that her own troops are sufficient for the exigency, and preparations are being made for the assembling of 45.000 men at Berlin by Jan. under command of Gen. Van Groben, to march on Switzerland.

The Swiss are behaving with the greatest gallantry. The population is called to arms, and responds with enthusiasm. Twenty thousand men are to be put under arms without delay, of which 10,000, under Gen. Bourgeoise, will defend Baale, and the other half, under Gen, Zeigler, will garrison Schaff hausen. The van and reserve of the army w ll operate in the field.

Unlimited credits for military puposes have been voted.

The Federal Diet is convoked for the 27th December.

Great Britain.

It was reported on 'Change that Government is arming all the gunboats for service, probably for the East.

Spain.

A Madrid despatch of the 29th, reports that a revolutionary club had been discovered in that city. Numerous arrests were made and papers seized.

Italy.

Naples.—The principal powder magazine at Naples had exploded, killing many soldiers.

A government announcement says that bands of insurgents are still flying about in various parts of Sicily, but there is no fear of a general revolutionary movement.

Persia.

Persia continues her warlike preparations.

The Times' Paris correspondent states that the Russian army amounts to 40,000 men complete, on the shores of the Caspian, and is still in cantonments. The Russian General had, however, sent three superior officers into the nearest provinces of Persia to examine the situations of the towns and forts, and to take plans of the routes by which a passage might be made for an enemy.

A correspondent of the Independence Belge, writing from Naples on the 22d ult., says: "Vesuvius was blazing away last night, and was evidently in great force. For the most part one sees only the reflection of the light, which is thrown up from the interior of the crater, but at times it rises up in all majesty, and illuminates the entire city."

APPOINTMENTS.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

MEDITATIONS.

BY C. H. FULLER.

Hopes of youth,
How bright ye are!
Gleams of Truth's
Glad radiant star.

Dreams of light,
How soon ye're past!
Though so bright,
Ye will not last.

Love's bright gleams,
How soon ye're gone!
Happy dreams,

Friendships dear
Are false sometimes;
Hearts are sere,
For men seek dimes.

Scenes of mirth,
How soon ye cloy!
Leaving dearth
Instead of joy.

Pleasure fair
With gen'rous boon,
Lures us where?—
What! fled, so soon?

Worldly gains,
What transient joy!
What remains,
Save base alloy?

Fortune's smiles,
How quickly flee!
Satan's wiles,
Haste now from me!

Hopes there are—
So faith believes,— Better far
Than Earth receives.

Endless life,
Ere long to ope,
Joy so rife—
O glorious hope!

Love there is,
That brightly glows,—
Purer 'tis
Than Alpine snows;

Boundless, sure,
In ev'ry clime
'Twill endure
Through endless time.

Wisdom pure,
Serenely shines,
Only sure
To earnest minds.

Studious seek
Its lone retreat;
Patient, meek,
With steady feet.

'Biding thee
By its mild ray,
Thy path shall be
A pleasant way.

Bible Women.

OR WHAT BIBLE WOMEN HAVE BEEN —WHAT THEY SHOULD BE.

BY B. MATHEWSON.

No. I.

In the few remarks I may, in weaknes, offer on this subject, I shall endeavor to follow the teachings of scripture, without regard to modern etiquette. Because much of modern "modes and forms" are diametrically opposed to God and His word. Our observation often convinces us that "that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God."

Probably most who will read this are familiar with the account of the creation, but they will suffer a brief reference to the subject, as a kind of basis on which to erect a superstructure.

In the beginning God created an earth so perfect that He himself called it "very good;" clothed it with herbage, fruit and flowers; created a great variety of animals to walk and feed thereon, perfectly adapted to the parts designated them; an innocent class of aerial songsters, with their golden and variegated plumage, filling the air with their sweet melody; a multitudinous variety of marine animals particularly adapted to their watery element; almost an endless variety of beasts, all calculated for the service and accommodation of a being, organized "in the image of God"—but a "little" inferior in nature to a class called angels.

What vast preparations made by an Almighty God to fit up an abode, a proper residence for man, ere he has an existence! Then it pleased the Creator to take particles of this earth, and so arrange them, as to form the perfect machinery of man,—but as yet, silent and unconscious as those particles ere they were arranged—when this skillful Architect "breathed" breath or air "into his nostrils," inflating his lungs; thus the heart began its beating, propelling the blood to the surface, and noble man stood, erect, and beautiful, before his Creator, physically, morally, and intellectually perfect! Also, every object, animate and inanimate, kindly furnished him by a wise and munificent Creator, bore the same perfect impress.

But after all, there is a lack. Adam does not complain, yet his provident Benefactor discovers (no doubt) a mysterious shade of loneliness upon his ample brow, which elicited the words—"it is not good for man to be alone, I will make him an help meet for him." Not one of those sylph-like creatures modern fancy may have painted her—partaking more of the etherial than material; not a beautiful statue on which to hang all the gold, pearls, costly array," and fantastic gewgaws his hard toil can purchase; not a waxen doll, a mere plaything destined to no share in the sober realities of life, but an HELP MEET! that is, a being that can sympathize with and enter into the sphere of meditation and feeling peculiar to man, and assist him in all the common vocations of life, whether mental or physical.

Already there existed a class of superior and inferior beings, but for Adam there existed no congenial associate. There is a pleasure in mingling with superiors occasionally; and again, it affords true gratification to a benevolent soul to manifest lenity and affability, by associating with inferiors at times.

But what a vacuum must inevitably be experienced without some association with congenial spirits. A munificent Benefactor immediately resolves to supply the vacancy. He therefore "caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam"—took out one of his ribs, of which he formed a lovely bride—a companion—an associate—a sympathizing and confiding friend, and presented her in all her loveliness to Adam.

What exquisite joy must have been his at this moment, as he stands convinced, by his own visual organs, that he is no longer alone, but in possession of an associate, neither too high or too low to appreciate what he appreciates; one that is equitable to converse, advise, reason and plan with himself.

What a glow of animation must have encircled his noble brow when first he escorted his fair bride around their paradisiacal home, pointing out here and there its most exquisite beauties and luxuries, to be equally shared with his fair consort, whose hands were not too fair to help him "dress and keep it."

The inquiry may arise in what respect was woman to be a "helpmeet" to man? Certainly the sacred record does not define her sphere to be exclusively of the domestic kind. And from the examples therein contained, may we not reasonably infer that her Creator designed her as an helpmeet in every department her ability should render her capable? May we not conclude this advice of a modern heroine —"Let woman do all she can do and do it well"—is consonant with the teachings of the great Law-giver? Ought she not to receive the same encouragement to improve the talent with which her Creator may have endowed her, awarded to the other sex?

Some seem to imbibe the idea, that the scriptures forbid woman the privilege of improving her talent, providing it be of a public character; but if we will patiently investigate the sacred oracles we shall find the reverse substantiated therein.

It is true, the scriptures abound in patterns of excellency found in the vale of domestic life. The apostle recognizes Sarah as belonging to this class, and sets her as a model for christian women. He particularly recommends her reverential obedience to her husband's office as an oracle of God. In the communications heaven bestowed on her husband she evinced magnanimous veneration, and addressed him with great deference, "calling him lord." We find her also co-operating with her husband in acts of hospitality. She utters no word of complaint when he solicits her to hasten her agile step, that his guests may be accommodated without loss of time. She manifests delight in honoring his guests with a proper entertainment, as every good wife will do.

It must be conceded, however, that Sarah was one of those women who have a mind of their own. It is quite apparent she did not deem it sufficient merely to follow in the wake of her husband—believing what he believed—speaking what he spoke with a parrot-like imitation, without seeking to understand the mind and will of God for herself, as a separate, accountable being! Had not this moral energy been hers, she might have suffered the annoyance of having her own pure Isaac contaminated by associating with the carnal, mocking, Ishmael. In this matter she seemed to understand the Divine will more perfectly than her husband; and when apprised that God would have the miscreant expelled, she was firm and unshaken in her purpose, though "the thing was very grievous in Abraham's sight," when he heard his meek and gentle Sarah exclaim:

"Cast out this bond-woman and her son; for the son of this bond-woman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac."

In seeking to know the Divine will by earnest prayer, woman may prove herself an invaluable "helpmeet." It is apparent from the foregoing example that woman is to seek "wisdom" for herself—understand for herself, as she will be required to answer for herself at last. Though she is not to "rule," yet she is not obligated to restrict the expansive spirit of pure benevolence, because her husband may not have opened this holy gate before her. If she possess sufficient energy to unlock the golden portals, unassisted, while walking therein, she will receive the approbation of a christian husband; and I do not find her obligated to indulge a spirit of parsimony, though it be discovered in the heart of a husband.

That illustrious woman, resident in the city of Shunem, situated in the valley of Esdraelon, possessed sufficient energy to move first in the noble deed of giving entertainment to the servant of God. At first she would have him share hospitalities in her own domestic circle; but with woman's sagacious eye, she soon discovered the necessity of more retirement for one who was continually traveling from place to place with that anxious solicitude known only to a faithful servant of God, when he discovers the church in danger of being led into wickedness by wicked rulers—wearing a professional cloak of godliness, like Ahab, who "did more to provoke the Lord God of Israel to anger than all the kings of Israel that were before him." She might have been apprized of the revengeful anticipations of his Queen, respecting his life, which served to heighten her sympathy when blended with her own conviction of his deep spirituality; for "she said unto her husband, behold now, I perceive that this is a holy man of God which passeth by us continually." She then besought her husband to build a room for him, where he could be better accommodated. He immediately complies, though he manifests no particular interest in the matter; yet such is the influence of a "wise" woman that "the heart of her husband doth safely trust in her." Prov. 31 : 11.

So comfortable did he find himself in his attic, his heart, swelling with grateful emotions, desired to make some return for her unwearied kindness. She did not desire an increase of riches, or honor, but she was childless, and a son, to be heir of their inheritance, would make great accessions to her joy. This boon was granted her. But alas, the golden goblet was pressed to her lips only to be dashed aside! The beautiful boy lives long enough to be the darling pet of the household—then dies! O earth, thy joys are short. What is to be done now? The man of God is far away, on mount Carmel. Shall she wait only to follow the example of her husband in the matter? If so, her boy would have been consigned to the tomb. Her energetic soul, warm with a mother's love, conceives a plan—she importunes her husband for a single beast attended only by one servant, to go with all haste to the prophet. He gently remonstrates with her for allowing her grief to shape so wild a purpose, when it was "neither new moon nor Sabbath." The words of a deeply wounded soul are few; she only replies,—"It shall be well"—and vaulting into her saddle, bade her attendant drive the animal to the top of his speed, until she arrives at Carmel—"the highest point on the coast of Palestine. In her agony she clasps the feet of the Prophet, who manifests no indignation at this liberty, but endeavors to soothe her by directing his servant to take his staff and go lay that on the face of the child.

But she resolutely declares, "As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And he arose and followed her."

The sequel is well known. Her darling lives again, all through the means of her pious energy. And think you not her husband rejoiced with, and considered her a more emphatic "helpmeet," than if she had never moved herself?

My dear sisters, let us see how many good deeds we can do, and do WELL.

For the Crisis.

"Love one another."

BY MERRILL.

If we are children of God, and expect to be heirs of the kingdom, we must live as the word of God teaches us, trying to do all the good we can while we live in this world, especially unto the house-hold of faith. My brother, or sister, did you ever envy the rich, or despise the poor? if so, we think you need more of the true spirit of Christ.

We have need enough to visit the throne of grace more, and to wrestle with God.—Let us love one another, and not despise any because others do not believe as we do. nor appear as we do, or stand as good in society, or dress as plain, or enjoy as much of the presence of God.

We must not despise any one, for God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to die, that all might be saved. Let us, as a body of Christians, do our duty to our fellow-men around us, praying for all. The kingdom is for all who wll repent and turn to God.

Some may say, what is our duty? If we do not know, let us take our Bibles from our shelves, which have been laying so long that you can write your names on their dusty covers, and pray for knowledge, and the spirit of Christ to lead into all truth.

If the stranger comes to us hungry, let us feed him; if sick, administer to his wants. Remember the words of our dear Redeemer—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me."

Let us ask ourselves the question, have we wronged a brother or a sister, and caused the heart to be sad and the tears to flow? May the Lord forgive us.

Let brotherly love continue. Let the grace of God abound in our hearts, remembering to do unto others as we would have them do unto us; and see that we offend none of God's little ones who are trying to serve him, no matter how poor in spirit. They have a glorious promise left them,—"Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." May the grace of God be with us. Amen.

HOPE.

BY S. G. MATHEWSON.

Blest hope! thou sweetest boon of earth,
Thy very name is dear!
Can angels ever tell thy worth
To pilgrims toiling here?

Angels thy worth can never tell—
Ask Alpine mountains cold,
And hear the songs of martyr's swell
Thy worth to them of old!

Thy cheering presence gave them power,
When death's black arrows fell,
To look for Time's triumphant hour,
When they with Christ shall dwell.

But in this dark and groaning world,
Earth's sorrows we must share;
And, if death's darts are at us hurled,
Hope says, we'll triumph there!

And in temptations' awful hour,
When sorrow's cup we drink,
And clouds of darkness o'er us lower
We from their vengeance shrink;

We look at hope's sweet smiling face,
And all our sorrows flee;
She points us to that happy place,
And bids us joyful be.

Blest hope! thou precious gift of God,
We crave thy presence still;
That when this thorny road we've trod
We'll sing on Zion's hill.

That Eden home we long to see,
And in its blessings share;
In rev'rence Lord we bow to Thee,
And for that world prepare.

For the Crisis.

BRO. GRANT:—The following touching incident appeared a few years since, in many of the religious and secular periodicals of the day; but I believe, has never appeared in the columns of the Crisis. I thought its readers might be both gratified and profited by its perusal. If you should thus think, please give it a place in your paper. B. MATHEWSON.

The Efficacy of Prayer.

Mr. B. was a merchant in Baltimore, and did a very heavy business, especially in grain. One morning, as he was passing over the vessels that lay at the wharf with their various commodities for sale, he stepped upon the deck of one, at the stern of which he saw a negro man sitting, whose dejected countenance gave sure indication of distress; and he accosted him with—

"Hey! my man, what is the matter with you this morning?"

The negro lifted his eyes, and looking at Mr. B., replied—

"Ah, massa, I'se in great trouble."

"What about?"

"Kase I'se fotcht up here to be sold."

"What for? What have you been doing? Have you been stealing? or did you run away? or what?"

"No, no, massa, none o' dat; it's bekase I didn't mind the audes."

"What kind of orders?"

"Well, massa stranger, I tell you. Massa Willum werry strick man, and werry nice man, too, and ebry body on de place got to mine him; and I break trew de rule; but I didn't tend to break de rule, doe; I forgot mesef, an I got too high."

"It is for getting drunk, then, is it?"

"O no, sah, not dat nother."

"You are the strangest negro I have seen for a week. I can get no satisfaction from you. If you would not like to be pitched overboard, you had better tell me what you did."

"Please, massa, dont frow de poor flicted nigga in de wata."

"Then tell me what you are to be sold for."

"For prayin, sah."

"For praying? that is a strange tale indeed. Will your master not permit you to pray?"

"O yes, sah, he let me pray easy; but I hollers too loud."

"And why did you halloo so in your prayer?"

"Kase de Sperit comes on me, an I git happy fore I knows it; den I gone; can't trol mesef den; den I knows nuthin bout massa's rule; den I holler if ole Sattin hissef come, wid all de rules of de quisition."

"And do you suppose your master will really sell you for that?"

"O yes; no help for me now; all de men in de world couldn't help me now; kase when Massa Willum say one ting, he no do anoder."

"What is your name?"

"Moses, sah."

"What is your master's name?"

"Massa name Colonel Willum C——."

"Where does he live?"

"Down on de Easin Shoah."

"Is he a good master? Does he treat you well?"

"O yes; Massa Willum good; no better massa in de world."

"Stand up and let me look at you."—And Moses stood up and presented a robust frame; and as Mr. B. stripped up his sleeve, his arm gave evidence of unusual muscular strength.

"Where is your master?"

"Yander he is, jis comin to de wharf."

As Mr. B. started for the shore, he heard Moses give a heavy sigh, followed by a deep groan. Moses was not at all pleased with the present phase of affairs. He was strongly impressed with the idea that B. was a trader and intended to buy him, and it was this that made him so unwilling to communicate to Mr. B. the desired information. Mr. B. reached the wharf just as Colonel C. did. He introduced himself, and said—

"I understand you wish to sell that negro man yonder on board the schooner."

Col. C. replied that he did.

"What do you ask for him?"

"I expect to get seven hundred dollars."

"How old is he?"

"About thirty."

"Is he healthy?"

"Very; he never had any sickness in his life, except one or two spells of the ague."

"Is he hearty?"

"Yes, sir; he will eat as much as any man ought, and it will do him as much good."

"Is he a good hand?"

"Yes, sir, he is the best hand on my place. He is steady, honest, and industrious. He has been my foreman for the last ten years, and a more trusty negro I never knew."

"Why do you wish to sell him?"

"Because he disobeyed my orders. As I said, he is my foreman; and that he might be available at any moment I might want him, I built his quarter within a hundred yards of my own house: and I have never rung the bell at any time in the night or morning, that his horn did not answer in five minutes after. But two years ago he got religion, and commenced what he terms family prayer—that is, prayer in his quarter every night and morning; and when he begun his prayer, it was impossible to tell when he would stop, especially if (as he termed it) he got happy. Then he would sing and pray and halloo for an hour or two together, that you might hear him a mile off. And he would pray for me and my wife and children, and all my brothers and sisters and their children, and our whole family connection to the third generation; and sometimes, when we would have visitors, Moses' prayers would interrupt the conversation and destroy the enjoyment of the whole company. The women would cry, and the children would cry, and it would set me almost frantic; and even after I had retired, it would sometimes be nearly daylight before I could go to sleep; for it appeared to me that I could hear Moses pray for three hours after he had finished. I bore it as long as I could, and then forbid his praying so loud any more. Moses promised obedience, but he soon transgressed; and my rule is never to whip, but whenever a negro proves incorrigible, I sell him. This keeps them in better subjection, and is less trouble than whipping. I pardoned Moses twice for disobedience in praying so loud, but the third time I knew I must sell him, or every negro on the farm would soon be perfectly regardless of all my orders."

"You spoke of Moses' quarter; I suppose from that he has a family."

"Yes, he has a woman and three children —or wife, I suppose he calls her now, for soon after he got religion, he asked me if they might be married, and I presume they were."

"What will you take for her and the children?"

"If you want them for your own use, I will take seven hundred dollars; but I shall not sell Moses nor them to go out of the State."

"I wish them all for my own use, and will give you the fourteen hundred dollars."

Mr. B. and Col. C. then went to B.'s store, drew up the writings, and closed the sale, after which they returned to the vessel; and Mr. B., approaching the negro, who sat with his eyes fixed upon the deck, seemingly wrapt in meditation of the most awful forebodings, said—

"Well, Moses, I have bought you."

Moses made a very low bow, and every muscle of his face worked with emotion as he replied—

"Is you, massa? Where is I gwine, massa? Is I gwine to Georgy?"

"No," said Mr. B., "I am a merchant here in the city; yonder is my store. I want you to attend on the store; and have purchased your wife and children too, that you may not be separated."

"Bress God fer dat! And, Massa, kin I go to meetin sometimes?"

"Yes, Moses, you can go to church three times on Sabbath, and every night in the week; and you can pray as often as you choose, and as long as you choose, and get as happy as you choose: and every time you pray, whether it be at home or in church, I want you to pray for me, my wife, and all my children, and single-handed, too; for if you are a good man, your prayers will do us no harm, and we need them very much; and if you wish to, you may pray for everybody of the name of B. in the State of Maryland. It will not injure them."

While Mr. B. was dealing out these privileges to Moses, the negro's eyes danced in their sockets, and his full heart laughed outright for gladness, exposing two rows of as even, clean ivories as any African can boast; and his heart's response was, "Bress God! bress God all de time, bress you too, massa! Moses neber tinks bout he gwine to have all dese commondationers; dis make me tink bout Joseph in de Egypt."

And after Moses had poured a few blessings upon Colonel C., and bidding him a warm adieu, and requesting him to give his love and farewell to his mistress, the children and all the servants, he followed B. to the store, to enter upon the functions of his new office.

The return of the schooner brought to Moses his wife and children.

Early the next spring, as Mr. B. was one day standing at the store door, he saw a man leap upon the wharf from the deck of a vessel and walk hurriedly towards the store. He soon recognized him as Col. C. They exchanged salutations, and, to the Colonel's inquiry after Moses, Mr. B. replied that he was up stairs measuring grain, and invited him to walk up and see him.

Soon Mr. B.'s attention was arrested by a very confused noise above. He listened, and heard an unusual shuffling of feet, some one sobbing violently, and some one talking very hurriedly; and when he reflected upon Col. C.'s singular movements and the peculiar expression of his countenance, he became alarmed, and determined to go up and see what was transpiring.

When he reached the head of the stairs, he was startled by seeing Moses in the middle of the floor, down upon one knee, with his arms around the Colonel's waist, and talking most rapidly, while the Col. stood weeping audibly.

So soon as the Colonel could sufficiently control his feelings, he told Mr. B. that he had never been able to free himself from the influence of Moses' prayers, and that during the past year he and his wife and all his children had been converted to God.

Moses responded; "Bress God, Massa C., doe I way up hea, I neber forgit you in my prayers; I ollers put de ole massa side de new one. Bress God! dis make Moses tink bout Joseph in de Egypt agin."

The Colonel then stated to Mr. B. that his object in coming to Baltimore was to buy Moses and his family back again. But Mr. B. assured him that that was out of the question, for he could not part with him; and he intended to manumit Moses and his wife at forty, and his children at thirty-five years of age.

Moses was not far wrong in his reference to Joseph. For when Joseph was sold into Egypt, God overruled it to his good, and he obtained blessings that were far beyond his expectations: so with Moses. Joseph eventually proved the instrument of saving the lives of those who sold him. Moses proved the instrument in God's hand of saving the man's soul who sold him.

Old Moses is still living and doing well. He long since obtained his freedom, and at present occupies a comfortable house of his own; and I suppose sings and prays and shouts to his heart's content.

Facts.—The Divine Word being Fulfilled.

Abstract of Sermon by J. B. Cook, on John 10: 35.

"The kingdom of men" has appeared in four forms. This fact fulfills "the word." "These great beasts which are FOUR, are FOUR kings (kingdoms ver. 23, 24, 27,) which shall arise out of the earth." Dan. 7: 17. These "four horns" are the Gentiles "which have scattered Judah, Israel and Jerusalem." Zech. 1: 18—21.

The fact, that Babylon was followed by Persia, Greece, and Rome, each in succession—the symbolic, Gentile "beasts," that "lifted up their horns over the land of Judah to scatter it," shows a complete accomplishment. Four is their only number, near ten times repeated, in the word of God. FOUR, with their predicted appendages, do in fact fill out the history of the civilized world, for about three thousand years!

This word of the Lord, embracing as it does, many minute events concerning the return of Judah from captivity in Babylon, their history on to the birth, life, death, resurrection and ascension of Messiah, the progress of the Gospel, the destruction of Jerusalem, and "desolation of the sanctuary" to this time, the concurrent fortunes of the church and Judah in dispersion, under the progressive revolutions in Roman history, furnish the firmest basis for faith. There is nothing else that can be proposed for human belief so solid, so so firmly fixed by fact, so secure against mistake. Therein is embraced the sum of all argument—all knowledge. It is God's word concerning this world with Jew and Gentile; nay, they are the best known facts through the entire period of authentic history, that answer to, and so fulfill that word. The chariot of divine providence has ever moved directly down the track of prophecy—the sure word to which we do well to take heed!

THE FACT that the symbols in Revelation are consecutive, and attended usually with an authorized explanation, furnishes a help to an understanding of their import, and their intended application. The dragon gives up its seat to the beast which rules through "forty-two months," when it goeth into "captivity,"—to be "killed with the sword." Its place in prophecy is then filled by another power, which prevails till the "Lamb stands on Mount Zion." Imperial Rome yielded its seat in Italy to Papal Rome,—"its seat" was the city of seven hills.

This system, embodied in the code of Justinian, did exist at the basis of legislation, from about [illegible], the conquest of the Goths, till the French Revolution reached Rome, 1798. The French Republic—"like a lamb,"—the French Emperor, that "spake as a dragon," as did the Roman Cæsar, when "the dragon" was its symbol, succeeded.

These facts were of the utmost importance. They did comprehend the political, ecclesiastical, and commercial interests of the world, of both Jew and Gentile.

THE FACT that the period of the Papacy in prophecy leads on to the "time of the end," when many must "run to and fro" with increase of "knowledge," is too obvious, in our rail-rush, to allow of misapprehension. The world's progress since Napoleon has been beyond all parallel! Indeed, the name of Napoleon became the watch-word of revolution, progress, and glory! This gave it its controlling charm over the European masses. They ascribed to Napoleon what belongs to God, whose wonderful providence is only fulfilling his word. Dan. 12: 4; Nahum 2: 4.

THE FACTS that complete and crown the series, (as symbolized) are those which fulfill the last headship or Dynasty, in its relations to the Romish church and kingdoms,—as they go to "the judgment," to make way for the millennial kingdom—the kingdom of heaven. Rev. 17: 1—18; 20: 1—6. Our limits allow but a bare statement.

1.—The prophetic description is in these words: "Was, and is not, and yet is!"—By this we are to know that it is the one "that goeth to perdition."

The facts of our age agree; Napoleon I "was;" then he was not head, but died in exile. Napoleon II was "not" head of the Roman world at all, but Napoleon III "is." He came up from exile—"the abyss;" he takes the controlling head in all the Roman world, in the city of Rome, in Greece, in Northern Africa, in Constantinople, and has "the key"—the supremacy, in Jerusalem and the East!

2.—The number of the last dynasty in the Roman world, is "seven." FOUR times we read of the "seven heads." This is sustained by "the seven crowns" the "seven kings," and "the seven mountains on which the woman sitteth." This number occurs "seven" times; it has a seven-fold certainty.

The fact is, that as five had fallen in the apostle's time—as the one—the Imperial—then existing was the sixth, there is no number left for the Napoleonic, save the seventh! It must "continue a short space." v. 10. It must exist so as to justify the description—"was, and is not, and yet is." It must be wounded to death by the sword, and then "healed." Thus, while the last is the seventh, proper, yet it is in its last form an eighth, of the seven, and goeth into perdition! The seventh is the wounded and healed head; otherwise, it could not be an eighth, of (out of) the seven. Napoleon III. did, in fact, owe his elevation to his association with the name and fame of Napoleon I. An eighth, of the seven.

3.—"The beast that carrieth the woman," is the inspired representation of his relation to the Romish church. Napoleon III. is the centre, the champion of Romanism.

4.—The city of seven hills is the great concentral city of this vision. Rome is the sphere for the development of all this prophetic imagery. It can not be Russia, or the United States of America, because the only geographical representation confines it to the Roman Empire. France was and is Roman.

5.—The part of the Roman Empire to which the prophetic word points, is none other than France. "Three unclean spirits like frogs" take the lead in gathering "the kings of the earth to the battle of the Great Day." Rev. 16: 13, 14.

France did, in fact, hold forth "three frogs" on her military standard, from Childeric to Clovis.

France does take the lead in the world's progress; but Paris is the heart of France, and Napoleon is "the head" of Paris! Napoleon III. "IS,"—(I think, the head.)

6.—The ten kings give their power unto this beast till the words of God are fulfilled. Rev. 17: 13—17.

The fact is notorious, that England, Protestant England, has given her material and moral power to Napoleon; yea, the Emperors of Austria and Turkey have, as it were, "held his stirrups," while he has mounted and rode to the pinnacle of Empire.

7.—"The number of the beast" is "the number of a man, and his number is six hundred and three score and six." Rev. 13: 18.

It is a fact that the French Emperor's name, as used in the Romish church service, is 666!

The personal and moral characteristics of Napoleon, also agree perfectly with the prophecy, so far as we can judge.

The crowning truth of Holy scripture, that seems to seal this whole series, is the doctrine of Providence. This doctrine demands that the right agency shall rise at the right time, and in the right relations, to fulfill the prophecy. Moses, Cyrus, Daniel, John the Baptist, and every revealed agency, good or bad, has risen at—and only at—the right time. Jehovah says: "My counsel shall stand." "Thus it is written, and thus it must be." There is a divinity giving direction to human destiny. "The oppressor shall perish." "The oppressed shall go free." "The judgment" will destroy "the great whore"—the most revolting tyranny ever organized under Satan's subtle sway.

WHEN? "When they shall say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction shall come upon them, and they shall not escape!" "Peace" has been this year proclaimed over Romanism and Mohamedanism—the two great subjects of prophetic judgment. God says,—"sudden destruction!" "The scripture cannot be broken." Let us "be ready"—"in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."

Conversations Between a Brother and Sister.

BY JULIA A. FERRIS.

No. III.

Bro.—I would now like to talk with you on the subject of the atonement, and if I find you orthodox on that subject, I can afford to be more tolerant towar minor errors. Since I regard the death of Christ as the axle on which the whole plan of salvation turns, I think it not safe to be unsound on that question.

Sr.—I perfectly agree with you on the importance of the subject, and will try to give you an idea of my faith, that you may judge of its soundness.

I believe that what we lost in Adam, was restored through Christ, by his dying on the cross, thereby paying the penalty of Adam's transgression, and also by his rising from the dead, securing our own resurrection. Is this orthodox?

Bro.—It appears to be.

Sr.—Still you have misgivings that there may be some secret spring by which the soundness of my faith on this point may be affected. Precisely the state of my own mind with regard to you, my brother. Do you know that I have serious doubts about the soundness of your own belief in the atonement?

Bro.—Me unsound? I am a Methodist, and believe that "Jesus died for all."

Sr.—Yes, I know the phrase, "Jesus died for all," is a very common one, but it seems to convey rather a vague and imperfect idea to the minds of those who use it. Let us examine the subject. You say, my belief that Jesus paid the penalty of Adam's transgression, appears to be orthodox. What was the penalty of Adam's transgression?

Bro.—Death, to be sure.

Sr.—Was it natural or spiritual death?

Bro.—It must have been spiritual death of course.

Sr.—Why do you consider it a matter of course that it must have been spiritual death?

Bro.—I judge from the phraseology employed in the threat, "In the day that thou eatest thereof." Did Adam die a natural death, in the day that he first disobeyed?

Sr.—We will read what your own commentator, Adam Clark, says: "dying thou shalt die"—(marg.)—(after giving it a partially spiritual meaning) from that moment thou shalt become mortal, and shalt continue in a dying state till thou die. This we find literally accomplished. Every moment of a man's life may be considered an act of dying till, &c. "Ye shall not surely die." Here (says Clark), the father of lies at once appears, flatly contradicting the assertion of God, as if he had said: God has created thee immortal, thy death, therefore, is impossible. God knows this, for as thou livest by the tree of life, so shalt thou get increase of wisdom by the tree of knowledge."

You see, (according to Clark,) that to say we are created immortal, or possess inherent immortality, is to contradict God, and embrace one of the "doctrines of devils." Now God is his own commentator on the words, "surely die," and explains their meaning in pronouncing sentence upon Adam, Gen. 3: 19; "For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

Bro.—That is, his body. Adam's body did return to dust, but his soul did not.

Sr.—That is, did not surely die. Be careful, brother, recollect who originated that sentiment. Now, I believe God told the truth to Adam when he said, "thou shalt surely die," and "unto dust shalt thou return." He was not addressing any separate part of Adam (it so, it must have been the conscious part), but he spoke to the man himself, the same man who was made of the dust of the ground, and into whose nostrils was breathed the breath of life, and who became a living soul.

Bro.—Ah! there you have it; a living soul, not a dying soul. Don't you see the pre-eminence given to man above a beast? There is no such term as "living" soul, applied to any creature but man.

Sr.—Not so fast, dear brother. You assume, because it is said, "man became a living soul," that there must have been placed within Adam an inherent immortal principle. Observe, it does not say "in him was placed" a living soul, but "man became" a living soul. Will you please hear me read the marginal corrections, and you will see, that what you suppose to have been implied of man, was positively asserted of beasts. Gen. 2: 30. "And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is (Heb.) a living soul." (mar.). 20th: "Let the waters bring forth abundantly, the moving creature that hath soul." (mar.)

Bro.—Stop sister, it is shocking to hear you talk of the beasts having souls.

Sr.—It is not me, but the Bible, which is responsible for this, but there would be nothing shocking in it, if we would allow the word soul its real meaning, life or being.

Bro.—Very well, suppose I believe the death threatened Adam to have been death in trespasses and sins, and you believe it to have been literal death, of what great importance is this difference?

Sr.—It is of this importance. If the penalty of Adam's transgression was, to become dead in trespasses and sins, the Redeemer must have become dead in trespasses and sins, in order to pay that penalty, which he certainly did not; consequently, the debt has never been paid and the sin is yet unatoned for.

Letters to a Friend.

BY T. F. SARGENT.

No. IV.

I assure you, my dear sister, I sympathize deeply in your interior sufferings. It is, however, of great consequence that you yield not to melancholy. It is a dangerous temptation. Satan does not in this tempt you after a gross manner, which you will easily detect, but he aims to make you melancholy which proves a real hindrance to your progress, thereby extinguishing the grace of the interior, and making you insupportable to yourself and others. Melancholy contracts and withers the heart, and renders it unfit to receive the impressions of grace. It magnifies objects, and gives them a false coloring, thus making your burdens seemingly too heavy to bear; and the little consolation you can have from circumstances around you help to nourish this state. The only safe alternative, instead of looking to others, and the confused state of things, is to "look to Jesus," he will save "just now."

My mind of late has dwelt on this promise, and wondered why it was given! "In the world ye shall have tribulation." "Those who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution;" now surely this promise is as truly dictated by love as any of the others in God's Word. And my inference is this: some of the reasons for this Divine arrangement we can see, and others we cannot see; but it is enough for us that He can see them all. "Even so Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight." To render a prompt and unquestioning submission, is like laying one's head on a downy pillow. Many a disciple of Jesus has been permitted at the last to lean on the breast of the Savior, "and breathe his life out sweetly there." But we know, and read of some who have learned that this privilege is not reserved exclusively for the sick-room and the death-bed, but they may lean always on that sacred breast, and breathe the whole of life out sweetly there.

These are those disciples whose meat and drink it is to do His will. The command—"Rejoice evermore, and in everything give thanks," is one I wish to obey. But when we are sorely tried and tempted, the thought arises, "Can I rejoice in all this?" The apostle answers, "Be ye filled with the Spirit." Now the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, &c.; what a string of remedies we have here! Each one is "a talisman of virtue rare."

Afflictions are the common inheritance of all men. God has a wise design in this, and in all his dealings with us. In many things this design is apparent; it is in various ways revealed to the reflecting mind.

Afflictions, however, are twofold in their nature and their design. To the sinner, they are threatened judgments, "the wages of sin," "the fruit of his doings." But to the christian, they are promised, not threatened.

The word of God abounds with many declarations of promised affliction to the saints of God; but to them all there is a rich assurance of ultimate good annexed.

Afflictions and trials, may be regarded in the light of a school, and in this school the Christian makes his greatest attainments in the knowledge of God and himself.

One suggestion, dear sister, before I proceed to give you my ideas of the benefits of sanctified afflictions; i. e. to study the word of God by subjects, and bring everything possible to bear; thus doing, we shall not want for interest or subjects, and the mind may be active while we are laboring with our hands; also, to seek for divine aid. In drawing our conclusions, we have the promise of the Spirit to lead into all truth. And I know from the Word that the Spirit will not lead me to preach Christ, and another, anti-Christ; neither in the first advent of the Savior were men led to receive Christ and others to reject him; neither now are men led to proclaim the second Advent, and others contrariwise. Holy, godly men, being filled with the Spirit, will have the same faith and hope, and need seek no other basis of christian union, than the Holy Spirit; for all the powers of darkness combined cannot divide them; there is no such thing as disunion if we are filled with the spirit of God.

When Job was afflicted, he felt his ignorance, and prayed to God, saying, "Shew me wherefore thou contendest with me?" This is an example worthy our individual attention. May it be indelibly written upon our memory.

It is the design of affliction thus to draw us nearer to God, and to fit us for greater usefulness in the world. If, when we are afflicted, we can discover no such advantage, we have just cause for alarm. I think we shall find on examination, our trials, and afflictions have done us some good; they have caused us, in a measure at least, to let go our hold upon the world; we have less disposition to indulge our depraved nature—the lusts of the flesh; there is less love and desire of human praise, and less fear of censure; there is less disposition to yield to the enticings and instigations of the adversary; there is deeper consciousness of our own weakness, unworthiness, dependence and wrath-meriting condition; there is a keener relish for the priveleges and means of grace; there is a more grateful appreciation of God's blessings, both temporal and spiritual. There is, or should be, an insatiable hungering and thirsting after entire conformity to all the will of God in heart and life.

That we may be pure and holy, is the prayer of your unworthy sister in Christ,

T. F. SARGENT.

Response.

I am receiving a multitude of letters, in response to my "missionary notice," from friends in different parts of the land. Thank the Lord! I rejoice that there are some humble ones who still love the proclamation of the soon coming kingdom! I wish to say to all who have written, and may write to me, I will comply with your invitations and directions as fast as possible. If you do not hear from me, or see me, for a length of time, do not think I slight you: I will come as soon as I get time and means. Trust in God!

To Throw off Bad Feelings.

If you are troubled with gloomy and cloudy feelings, just take a walk out among the poor, and sick, and feeble, which may be in your vicinity, and in doing them good, and comforting them you will forget yourself, and your clouds and gloom will all be gone before you know they are going.

Brief Sketch of my Life and Doctrine.

BY ELD. JONA WILSON.

Dear Brn. and Srs., I will give you a brief sketch of my ministry, for the last fifty years, lacking a few months. I was educated from childhood by Presbyterian parents. At thirty years of age, I experienced what I thought was religion; at all events, it was what I never experienced before. Being sick at that time, the first sentence I uttered, after this heavenly light broke into my mind, was, I must go down the banks of Jordan, travel the country, and preach the gospel.

My wife and her sister, the only persons present at that time, both unconverted, supposed at first that I was partially deranged; it was such a derangement as I never had before. It has lasted almost fifty years and now with as much weight as ever; but age has forbidden my travelling abroad any more.

The above took place on the seventh day of July, 1807; this was my first sermon, and both of my hearers were converted. One is dead—the other yet lives.

At that time I knew no more about gospel doctrine, than a child does about the Greek language. Baptism was clear to my mind; that gave a preference to the Baptist church, above other denominations. I subscribed to their creed, became a member, and preached with that order thirty-seven years. In that time I baptised thirteen hundred candidates, who joined the Baptist church.

A few sections on doctrine.

1. The nature of God. He is a spiritual Being, possessing a body and parts; hence, we read of his hands and feet, and other members of a body.

"But," says an objector, "that is figurative."

So we may figure away his whole existence, and have no God, as some do who say God was produced by the four elements—the cause, and God the [illegible]; which differs very much from Paul's view of God, and the language [illegible] of Eden,—"Come, let us [illegible] our image." Gen. 1: 26.

Paul says to the Hebrews, that [illegible]

a "the express image" of his Father's "person." Now he cannot be a person without a body. Heb. 1 : 3.

Again, Paul says Christ is "the image of the invisible God." We see image of a thing, is not the thing itself, but like it Col. 1 : 3.

So we see the invisible things of God are clearly seen by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head.

2. The creation of man. God made man "of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." It does not say God breathed into man a living soul, but the man made of dust, when made alive, was a living soul. So the man was a soul, not the breath God breathed into him.

Now if any person will show me knowledge without organization, they will do me a great favor. They may have room enough to search for it, for they can have heaven, earth, and hell or the grave, and then not find it; the reason is, there is no such thing in all the works of God.

3. Is the living soul—man—immortal? Paul says "God only hath immortality." 1 Tim. 6 : 16. It is a reward of obedience to those that love God and keep his commandments; never to the wicked, Rom. 2 : 7.

Consistency would say that before man sinned he was neither mortal or immortal; he was a probationer; his living or dying was to be the result of his own act of obedience or disobedience. If he had been immortal, he could not have died; and if he had been mortal, he must have died if he had not touched the tree of knowledge. Either of these two states would have destroyed his being a probationer, or his accountability to God. That man is mortal, is true; but how did he become so?

I answer; by transgression of God's law, the penalty of which was death, which sentence was given against him, a law of mortality was declared against every living thing that was on the earth, for all was under his control, therefore it was sacrificial. Therefore by sin came death; so death passed upon all, for all are under the law of mortality; and had not the Savior come, suffered, and died, there could never have been a resurrection of any being of Adam's race—saint or sinner; for "without shedding of blood is no remission." Heb. 9 : 22.

4. Christ an adequate Savior for mortal man. Was Christ immortal?

I answer no; not as the son of man. He had a mysterious existence with the Father, before he appeared here as our mediator; for he tells us of ascending up where he was before." John 6 : 62. But how came he here? Paul tells us he "took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." We have seen that Abraham's seed were mortal—must die; so Christ could die. The Christian has to die, as well as the sinner. If a child should live to be an hundred years old, and not commit sin, he must die, because he is mortal.

Now let us look for immortality, as under a law of mortality. And where can it be found? God has vetoed man's having eternal life from the system of creation, by guarding the tree of life against Adam and all his posterity, by a sword. If they had eaten of it they could never have been saved; for there was no provision made to save immortality. But Christ has satisfied divine justice by being made a curse for us; and so he opened a door of mercy that we might have a lawful pass from mortal to immortality—a glorious door of hope, which is brought to light by the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is "good news" to us.

5. Salvation a complete redemption from the law of mortality.

Some suppose conversion is salvation from sin; but we find by sad experience, that we sin afterward, being yet probationers. When is redemption completed? At the resurrection of the just, and no part of it before. The triumph of the just is when he—Christ—shall destroy death, and him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. Heb. 2 : 14. I once transcribed with my pencil, a verse from old Elder Judson's tomb stone, in Plymouth, Mass. It reads thus:

"Laurels may flourish round the conqueror's tomb,
But happier he who wins the world to come;
Eternal triumphs crown their toils divine,
And all this triumph, Judson, now is thine."*

Oh how contradictory to the sentiments of Christ, and of all the writers of the Bible. There he lies under the power of the devil—unconscious—neither death or the devil destroyed; and yet by him the whole victory is won. The gospel means, good news; and complete redemption when Christ shall come to judge the world at his appearing and kingdom." 2 Tim. 4 : 1. So we see none yet completely redeemed, in the present dispensation; but in the world to come. Eph. 2 : 6, 7. "And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Jesus Christ." This is experiencing what the gospel promises to true believers.

When the serpent tempted Eve, he struck at the character of God, saying, "ye shall not surely die." Here was the origin of unbelief; its criminality cannot be exceeded. What! charge God with being a liar! We cannot wonder that "without faith it is impossible to please God," since unbelief strikes at the holy character of God.

The inspired apostle John, in his first epistle 5 : 10–12, says: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life."

O my God! my heart sickens at the thought of that awful trial, which awaits the unbelieving sinner, in the day of judgment—condemned for the same crime the devil was sentenced for in the garden of Eden. In looking at it, I feel somewhat as Peter did, 1 Pet. 4 : 17, 18, where he says, "if the righteous scarcely be saved, where will the ungodly and sinner appear? Faith and repentance are the conditions of salvation, which is to be awarded at the resurrection of the just under the personal reign of Christ on earth.

The above has been witten to show the effect of Bible truth on my own mind, within the last thirteen years, the other thirty-seven years I consider lost as to gaining any Bible doctrine sufficient to qualify any man to preach the gospel of the grace of God, that bringeth salvation to sinners.

I close, brothren and sisters, by saying to you that I have traveled by land, to preach, more miles than would carry me three times around this globe. I have preached in ten different states, lived in five, and have baptized thirteen hundred and ninety-two. I am now closing up my labors for time, happy in the change that must soon take place. Amen.

A Request.

Will the dear brethren who have received books and tracts from me, which they have sold and haven't paid for, and especially those who don't answer my letters that I have written to them, have the kindness to pray earnestly for me that the Lord will provide me with means to pay the debts that I incurred in publishing the books; so that I shall not be under the necessity of cheating my creditors out of their honest dues, nor of troubling them any more with duns for what they owe me. Please consider, and grant this special request of your affectionate brother, H. L Hastings, Rochester, N. Y.

P. S.—While you are praying, it might be well to ask God to give some of the churches and brethren money enough to pay the preachers expenses a little better, so that they will be able to pay their bills a little more promptly. H. L. H.

Bro. Grant:—Several persons have, sometime since, written to me on different subjects, enclosing postage stamps for me to return answers to their letters—I have, in several cases, neglected to do so until I have lost their names and place of address—if they will inform me, in these cases, I will make all right—if not, I will use up their stamps in writing to the Crisis.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 21, 1857

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The Lord willing, we propose to hold a general Conference in Boston, at Chapman Hall, Chapman Place, commencing Tuesday evening, Feb. 10th at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

Our brethren and sisters, who attended the conference two years since at the same place, will recollect that it was one of great interest and profit, and that no effort was spared by the church in Boston to make it pleasant for those who come to enjoy that religious feast; and we trust that those who may be pursuaded to come to the one now proposed will not go away disappointed.

The object of the meeting is to make an effort to arouse the Lord's children to greater activity in his vineyard, and to afford mutual strength and comfort to each other. The apostles and primitive christians had such conferences, and were rewarded with rich blessings. We are confident that the time has come when we should make an extra effort to awaken new interest in our fellow men in the great work of preparation for the future world.

Brethren and sisters, come up to the feast, for we expect special help from the Lord of hosts.

We are anxious to meet once more in conference before our Master calls for an account of our stewardship. We very much need the benefit of a mutual interchange of thought and feeling.

We therefore earnestly entreat our brethren and sisters to make this meeting a subject of special prayer. Let us meet not as sectarians, to advance party interests, but as Christians, united in love, to promote the best good of our fellow men.

The opposer of all righteousness is making most alarming inroads upon the cause of truth, and shall we sleep till he has bound us hand and foot? Shall we flee and faint because our enemy is strong, or shall we like Caleb and Joshua be willing to meet, in the strength of the Lord, all that can come against us? God has committed to our trust, truths which, if faithfully employed, present an impassable barrier against the last-day errors, and the onward march of man's great enemy, and shall we hide them under a bushel? Brethren, arouse for the conflict! The victory is sure. Our King will prevail. Sleeping soldier, awake and gird thine armor!—"Fight the good fight," and soon our waving palms will proclaim the holy triumph upon the hills of glory!

In behalf of the church,

Varied Musings.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

It is night now—earth's night—dark, dreary, stormy, tearful, oppressive, gloomy, lingering night. O, when will the morning of joy, triumph, and immortality come? But, blessed be the name of our ever-faithful, unchanging, and loving God, it will come! Hail, glorious moment! Hail-morning of celestial, cloudless, transcendent splendor! How suddenly, then, will the fearful shadows, which have hung so long over us, be gone!

Then comes eternal, smiling day! Then comes the feast of comfort, and the song of rapture all divine! Then comes the inheritance everlasting, unfading, unchanging, and all-glorious! Then comes our sweet, our blessed Eden home! Haste, moments, haste, and bring the welcome hour! How slow the months roll by! It must be almost morning. The watchman that is with my God cannot be greatly mistaken. I hear the echoes of the voice of divine prophecy—"THE GREAT DAY IS NEAR"—"near," "near!"

"BEHOLD HE COMETH"—"COMETH," "cometh!" O yes: and the echoes are from the heavens, the earth, the nations, the church, the many, and the few. My anxious soul would fain fill up all that is wanting in the prophetic measure now. I would that I might not wait another year. Be patient, my soul—thy Maker holds the elements, and His wisdom must be preferred. His hour will be the most acceptable hour. His designs and arrangements are all perfect. Wait on Him and for Him, and thy portion shall be a blessed portion at last. To the hungry man, the food that he needs is the sweeter for being kept from him at present—so the manna of the immortal kingdom will be the sweeter to the elect of God for being kept comparatively long from them.

To the thirsty man, the water is the sweeter for his being kept long from it; so the waters of life will be sweeter to us, who hope to drink them, for that we are not permitted to drink them yet.

Continued toil and much weariness makes rest, phsically speaking, more pleasant, agreeable, and welcome—so long toil, weariness, and affliction, in this state, will make the rest that remains to us the more welcome when it does come.

It is grateful to meet with loved ones when we have been long absent from them—how grateful will it be for loved ones, long separated, to meet in the home of the immortal!

I speak of long toil, long labor, long waiting; but I only speak comparatively: for Inspiration makes our season of trial and labor here to measure "but for a moment!" Well, I will endure it gladly. I must not faint. I must gain the eternal kingdom. Help me Lord! Blow ye winds of earth with all your power, and howl ye raging storms more and more wildly still, the eternal calm that will soon succeed will be the more agreeable.

Let lightnings flash and dance, thunders howl and bellow, earthquakes jar and heave, floods overflow, and flames consume—our God, the eternal God controls, and underneath and around us are the everlasting arms! We weep now; but our rejoicing hour cometh anon. We are the minority of earth now; but we shall be the majority anon. Our enemies ride in triumph over us now; but we will ride in flaming chariots on the heavens, in triumph, soon. We are wandering, dying strangers now; but "we are going home to die no more." Be full of strength, my feeble spirit, and remember "THY GOD IS THY GLORY!"

Parental Government.

BY ZETA.

No. IV.

"Lo children are an heritage of the Lord. "Thy children shall be like olive-plants round about thy table." Ps. 127, 3, and 128 : 3. When a declaration like the first in my quotation is made to us in the scriptures, it is enough to command our most strict attention. A boon from the Lord is to be more highly prized than all others, and should have our greatest care. Children are an HERITAGE from the Lord. Some there are, who love their children dearly, and this is right; but they neglect to love Him who gave them their children, consequently they cannot teach them to love and obey their Creator. They have not learned the lesson which Hannah, Samuel's mother, learned,—"for this child I prayed, and the Lord hath given me my petition which I asked of him. Therefore I have lent him to the Lord as long as he liveth; (margin) "returned him to the Lord." 1 Sam. 1 : 28. Let all remember that they should give their children back to the Lord, and that this heritage is put in their care to train up, in the Lord, and for him, that they may be guided to the fountain of life, and obtain immortality. They must love them as the Scripture saith. Hear a few more on correction:

"He that spareth his rod hateth his son; but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes." God reckons love differently from many parents. 'Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying." Prov. 19 : 18. This duty is as important as it is to feed and clothe the child.

Again. "Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child; but the rod of correction shall drive it far from him." Prov. 22 : 15. This is the course the Lord pursues with his children,—"Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," and thus we receive instruction, to drive our folly from us, and obtain wisdom. "The rod and reproof give wisdom, but a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame. . . . Correct thy son and he shall give thee rest, yea, he shall give delight to thy soul." Prov. 29 : 15, 17.

But some one will now point out A. B. and C., who are always whipping, and have bad children too. Well, they don't do it according to the word. When this is followed, children do not need the rod often. There are some good children, and the treatment they have, met with has done much more to make them so than nature. In my second citation of scripture, at the head of this article, from Ps. 128 : 3, there is a beautiful promise,—"Thy children shall be like olive-plants round about thy table." By turning to that Psalm it will be found that a great and important condition stands connected with this promise. I will quote it. "Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord, that walketh in his ways." This is the character to whom the promise is made. I will quote another like it. Prov. 14 : 26. "In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence, and his children shall have a place of refuge. Such ones will teach their children the fear of the Lord, giving instruction in his law. What words are so pure and wise as the words of the Lord? "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimonies of the Lord are sure; making wise the simple. The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes." Ps. 19 : 7, 8. Let children be faithfully taught the word of the Lord, with humble prayer to its author, and many more good children would appear amongst us to bless those around them. I remember having read, a few years ago, an account of a class of christians in Siberia, who had been persecuted and banished to the forests of the interior of that country for their simple faith in the Bible, which led them to reject the mummery and ceremonies of the Greek church. Mr. Goodale, the missionary who visited them, informs us that their children were remarkable for their knowledge of the scriptures, seeming to have committed large portions of them to memory, making them their resort on all questions, using them as their household words, &c. This was in what is called a heathen country. O that it might be so in this so-called christian land.

There are parents, it is true, who are deprived the privilege of doing what they would for their children, some are not permitted to have the care of them; but the most of parents can bring up their own children, and do it "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." "The just man walketh in his integrity, his children are blessed after him." Prov. 20 : 7. The just man will teach his children justice, both by precept and example, justice with God and man. The unjust may, and often do teach their children to be just, but they learn the examples of their father, and will often follow them, rather than his precepts. A lamentable and soul-damning practice is now prevalent among a large class of professedly christian parents. I will mention an item, hoping it will reach the eye of some of them, and the heart also.

Children are taught to defend themselves against aggression, to fight their way, while the words of Christ forbid it. They are taught to use duplicity in various ways to escape detection in error, and to be shrewd to cheat and get the best bargains; to lay plans to obtain what belongs to others,—to covet, to love money, and be niggardly, to be proud, haughty, taught that it is a blessing to be rich, and a variety of that class of evils. But when the word of God is faithfully applied it corrects these evils, and makes christian families, for it leads to Christ as our wisdom, sanctification, and redemption. It makes righteous ruling parents, lovely, virtuous, gentle, humble, liberal, prudent, industrious, just, righteous, courteous, exemplary, christian children, which grow up to bless society wherever they move. Such are always doing something to benefit society, to relieve the distressed; these distribute to the poor, instruct the ignorant, correct the erring, and extend the influence of that gospel which has led them to the fountain of life, and the hope of salvation.

The parents of such children will not be brought to shame, nor left to die in the alms-house, or on the town-farm, nor to drag out a miserable existence in poverty and want, in their old age; neither will such children cause their gray hairs to go down in sorrow to the grave, but "they will be like olive-plants," which bring forth fruit, and when the Lord makes up his jewels, they shall be known by him; "for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them."

For the Crisis.

"To Enjoy, is to Obey."

BY ORRIN P. ALLEN.

Pope expressed a great truth when he wrote the line which is placed at the head of this article; a truth which the most trivial mind cannot fail to appreciate.

Obedience is the source of all true enjoyment, whether physical or mental. To enjoy the sweet blessings of health, we must obey those laws that govern our physical nature; and to enjoy the calm serenity of a peaceful mind, we must obey the law of our higher nature, the precepts of virtue, the ordinances of God. Man is so peculiarly constituted, that disobedience of itself will poison all his anticipated joys. The world may not know his guilt, yet he knows it, and he is also aware that a higher Being has taken cognizance of his unworthy acts.

There is a monitor within man's bosom, whose potent voice never gives rest to the guilty soul; but it ever whispers peace to him who looks to Heaven for guidance. Obedience is the parent of happiness, disobedience of shame and remorse.

Will this hold true in every case? Let us turn to the instructive past for an answer. On every page of its mighty volume we find the proposition substantiated by the history of mankind. When man awoke to a glorious existence in Paradise, he was untainted by sinful thoughts; he gazed upon his great prototype with all the confidence of innocent affection. All the sweet enjoyments of Paradise were his, and he rejoiced in the consciousness of his innocence. But when the hour of trial came, he disobeyed his Maker's law; then, he lost his bliss, his angelic nature, and the approval of Heaven. His transgression stung him with shame, and when he heard again the voice of God, his guilty soul shrunk from the eye of his offended Creator. He was no longer innocent, and he no longer enjoyed. The fruit of his disobedience, which Milton has so nobly sung, was the loss of Eden and his former happiness. A dreary world of change then became his portion, in which he found by sad experience that "the way of the transgressor is hard."

The Israelites furnish us with a striking illustration. As long as they walked in the ordinances of the true God, they triumphed over their enemies, prosperity smiled upon them, and sounds of joy were heard throughout their land. But when they forgot the ordinances of heaven, how soon their prosperity vanished. Yet their sad reverses profited them only for a short time. Behold now the result of their disobedience; they are a reproach among the nations; their prosperity is blighted forever; their once delightful Judea, which smiled with all the charms of oriental beauty, is now desolate, because of the sin of her inhabitants.

This is a national example—not less striking is the example of the individual. How serene the life of him who bows at the shrine of obedience. An expression of confidence animates his brow, and he carries the impress of nobility with him. Such a man is truly noble; he is respected by his brother, and beloved of heaven. Life, to him, is a reality, and he enjoys its superior blessings as a reward for his virtues. But can he be happy who scorns all law? Ah no! there is a shrinking fear in his very look, that tells of the troubling emotions, which are ever disturbing his tranquillity. The mark of Cain is upon him, and he goes forth into the world, a wretched exile from the society of the virtuous.

If what we have stated above is true—and all history shows it to be so,—how impressive becomes the great truth, that "to enjoy is to obey!"

For the Crisis.

Our Father.

BY H. F. CARPENTER.

Thus did He, who taught "the way of God truly," teach us to address Him whose throne is the heaven above, and whose footstool is the earth.

But can it be that we, of such low estate, so corruptible, have been exalted to such a parentage as this? Israel of old boasted and prided herself in the fact that she had Abraham to her father; but where is Israel's boasting to us, while we have to our father, the "God of Abraham"—the God who nursed them when weak in Egypt, and when grown, brought them out with an outstretched arm, bidding the sea roll back its flood—going before them by fire and by cloud-opening in the flinty rock a plentiful fountain for their thirst, and bringing down from the heavens, angels' food; the God at whose presence Sinai shook with thunders and with lightnings, and whose voice they that heard entreated that the word should no more be spoken unto them—who stretched out the north o'er the empty place, and hung a world upon nothing—meeted out the heavens with a span and measured the waters in the hollow of His hand,—whose glory fills the sky, and His goodness the earth—the Lord, whose the earth is, and the fullness thereof!

Yet this is He, the mighty God, delighting in mercy, judgment, and righteousness; long suffering, merciful, gracious, and abundant in goodness and truth, who wondrous things hath done, sustaining the worlds by His might, and crowning them with His loving-kindness. This is He who holds us not at a distance, though vile we may have been, but draws us very near, as children, and bids us call Him "our Father." "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God."

But while we are exalted thus, have we whereof to glory in ourselves, whereof to boast? Shall we say to our neighbor "come not near, for I am holier than thou?" O no! for what have we that we have not received? The adoption of sons was "bestowed upon us" by a love such as only a "God of love" can know; it is all of grace, free grace, which came by Jesus Christ. If we have renounced darkness, and now "walk in the light," if we have turned from idols, and now serve the living and true God, if we have overcome sin and are now holy, it is not of ourselves, for of ourselves we can do nothing; it is not we that live, but Christ who liveth in us. Let us therefore be not high-minded, but fear; fear, lest we come short of the glory of God, for, if sons of God, we must be partakers of the divine nature; we are no longer of this world but chosen out of it; no more to bear the image of the earthy, but of the heavenly, having put off the old man with his deeds, and "put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." We have no longer an earthly parentage, for one is our father, even God.

Having therefore a parentage so high and holy, how unlike the world, who are children of the wicked one, shall we be. As light is to darkness, as righteousness to unrighteousness, as Christ to Belial, so, by "our high calling," are we to them; they, being more and more conformed to this wicked world, we, "beholding as in a glass the glory of God," being "changed into the same image from glory to glory."

But what is the nature of God of which we must partake, if children? He is "merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth." This is His nature—"merciful," O how merciful! "keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin;" long-suffering, not willing that any should perish, bearing long with iniquity, as in the days of Noah while the ark was preparing; as with Israel's rebellious host; as now he waits upon this perverse generation ere He comes in flaming fire to judgment. Abundant in goodness, numbering the very hairs of our head, bearing our burdens, taking away our cares, good as when He gave man earth's fair dominion, good as when Egypt's oppressive yoke he broke, good as when He fed Elijah by the water-brook, good as when His arm brought salvation down. Have we such a nature as this? Are we merciful, forgiving one another even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us? Are we long-suffering, bearing long the injuries we received, as God bears with the world, and with us to-day? Not easily provoked? Do we love and seek the salvation of sinners? Do we delight in loving-kindness? Are we gentle to all men? Are we good? Then are we followers of God as dear children; then have we received the adoption of sons; then can we come boldy to the throne of grace, and from the depth and fullness of a sanctified heart say, in spirit and in truth, "Our Father." or the Crisis.

From Sr. Mary K. Heath.

BRO. GRANT:—As I read the Crisis week after week, I find much to comfort, edify, correct, instruct, and help me to persue the narrow way that leads to life. I love to have the witness 'that I endure chastising as a child; "for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the Father chasteneth not?" Heb. 12: 6, 7.

"But to do good, and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." Heb. 13: 16. Again, "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." 1 Pet. 4: 10. I still love the directions given by our Lord and his Apostles; teaching us how, and exhorting us to adorn the doctrine we profess; be helps to each other, do good as we have opportunity to all the human family; glorify our Father which is in heaven, in the [illegible] and so be disciples of the meek and lowly Jesus.

Truly, "without faith it is impossible to please God." The faith which worketh by love and purifies the heart.

I do rejoice that we can have a present justification by faith in Jesus as our Savior; faith in that which he hath spoken, and thereby have peace with "God, who at sundry times, and in divers manners, spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." Heb. 1: 1, 2. "In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory." Eph. 1: 13, 14.

Brethren and sisters, how necessary it is that we be watchful; that we pray always. As we prize eternal salvation, and desire to escape the things that are coming to pass on the earth, we need to be, amid the increasing perils of the last days, that we grieve not the Holy Spirit, "the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost," by which we are sealed. And be sure we have the title to the inheritance, day by day, the spirit of adoption whereby we cry Abba, Father; and it children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ to an incorruptible, unfading and everlasting possession.

Be encouraged to gird on the whole armor; resist the enemy steadfast in the faith of that which is written; overcome the world: hope to the end for the grace that will be brought unto the saints of the Most High, at the appearing of our Lord; who is not slack concerning the promise of his second coming, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. That the day of the Lord will quickly come, suddenly, and unexpectedly to the greater part of the human family, I truly believe. "In the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also; and the works that are therein, shall be burned up."

I rejoice that immortality is so soon to be given to the righteous dead and living, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Surely, the righteous nation which keepeth the truth, will enter in through the gates into the New Jerusalem,

Blest city of our King:
They will have right to the tree of life,
And Jesus' praises sing.

Many of our dear brethren and sisters have fallen asleep in Jesus within the last year. Their voices are no more to be in the prayer-room. Their family circle is broken; the place of the father, or the mother at the family altar, is vacant. O cruel death! Truly thou art the King of terrors. But thou wilt be destroyed, and him that had the power of thee. Heb. 2: 14.

Ye mourning and lonely, be comforted. The loved ones will quickly come, robed in immortality. Isaiah says,—"thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isaiah 26: 19.

"O hail! happy day,
That ends thy tears and sorrows,
That brings thee joy without alloy,—
O hail! happy day!"

He who hath the keys of hell, the grave, and of death, will "descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ will rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. 1: 16—18. MARY K. HEATH.

Lynn, Mass., Jan. 1, '57.

From Bro. J. Stockwell.

BRO. GRANT:—I still love to hear from the dear saints scattered abroad, and expect they do in return for me. I still love the Savior and his blessed word. He is my Savior and very best friend. It ravishes my soul to think of the many exceeding great and precious promises contained in his blessed word, and of His speedy coming again to earth to be admired in all them who believe.

I have expected the Savior a number of times, and been disappointed, but am not discouraged. Glory to God! I [illegible] stronger and stronger, and as a [illegible] the last Crisis said she had been a great lover of time, so have I; and, blessed be God, I love it still.

I have been pondering for some months on the commencement of the twenty-three hundred days, and have yet to learn that they did not commence in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, King of Persia. I have been reviewing Bro. Decker's argument on those days and the seventy weeks, and I find one small item which has been overlooked. On the 87th page of Bro. Decker's pamphlet, in an extract from Furgerson's Astronomy, he says, the beginning of Artaxerxes' seventh year is pinned down to the 4256th of the Julian period; now we are not told in what part of that year his seventh commenced, whether in the former, middle, or latter part of that year; any way, it must end in the next 4257th of the Julian period.

Again, we are not told in what part of Artaxerxes' 20th year he gave the command to build Jerusalem; now, as his 7th year must end in 4257, his 20th year must end in 4270th of the Julian period. If Artaxerxes gave the command to build Jerusalem in the latter part of his 20th year, it must be in the 4270th of the Julian period; which, with the 2300 added, carries us to the coming year, 1857, or to 6570 of the Julian period. Last summer, or spring, when Bro. Decker's argument on the season of Christ's coming and his union with the church, was published, I told the friends here, if any one had sent me a ten dollar bill I should not have prized it more highly. I told them too the argument was sound, and would be just as good for the coming year, as for this year.

Again, I have yet to learn that the law is not a shadow of good things to come. As the feast of Passover had its antetype in the death and resurrection of our Savior, we are justified in expecting the feast of pentacost will have its antetype in the union of Christ with the church.

Another question arises. Where will the "feast of tabernacles" have its antetype? The answer, in my mind, is, they dwelt in booths during that feast, a short time before they went every man to his possession; the antetype of which is, the church enters into her chambers a little space, till the indignation be overpast; after that, she enters her everlasting inheritance. Oh, what a thought! can it be? O yes, glory to God! my soul believes it. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus!

Your Bro. in the tribulation and patience of Jesus. Pray for me.

JOHN STOCKWELL.

P. S.—I just think of a word or two more I want to say, which is this. The brethren and sisters who looked for the Savior in '43, I with the rest, went up to the spring of '44 even to the time of Pentacost. Now, if it was just 2300 days from Artaxerxes' seventh year, to the spring of '44, the 2300 will reach from his 20th year to the spring of '57. Again, if we add two years on to the end of 519, we have, with the addition of 1335, 1857.

I want to say to the Nashua brethren and sisters, through the Crisis, or by letter, I want to hear from you. I have not heard from you since I left your one year ago last Sept I wrote to Bro. Isaac Chapman once, but have received no answer.

Your Bro. in Christ,
JOHN STOCKWELL.

Obituary.

Died, in New York, on Sunday, Dec. 28, Catherine E., wife of Henry C. Wright, and daughter of James and Elizabeth Dannat.

The subject of this notice enjoyed the advantage of a careful, religious training; her mother being a believer in the gospel of the kingdom. The same has been looking for the hope of Israel from the commencement of the great work of God under brother William Miller and his coadjutors.

She not only enjoyed these religious advantages, but much pains had been taken in her education, which efforts were well requited. She was the only daughter, beloved and cared for by parents and brothers with passionate fondness, and loved by all who knew her.

Her associations during the last few years of he were not promotive of pious thought, growth, being of the gay and worldly; which, as a consequence, formed a trial for faith, we are happy to record, did not prove overpowering and ruinous.

For a year or more, she gave evidence of decline: and was for this period suspended between hope and fear by her friends; but with her it was a season of thought and preparation for the kingdom of God. She was meditative and prayerful. She read the scriptures, wept before God, and was penitent. She fell asleep rejoicing and hopeful.

Her last words were—"happy! happy!—In the [illegible] will commence where she was broken off, where it will be continued [illegible] happy! This will be the [illegible] word with Catherine in the kingdom without end. [illegible] happy, happy! What a relief to mourners when their friends leave them in such a state of mind.

To such, how consoling the text—"For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so also them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." 1 Thess. 4: 14.

B. MATTHIAS.

Philadelphia, Jan., 1857.
(Herald please copy.)

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Manchester, N. H., Bro. Richard Goodhue, aged 25 years.

Bro. Goodhue sought and found the Lord about seven years ago, and was baptized, and united with the Free Baptist church at Wilmot N. H. Soon after, he thought he had a call to preach. He took up the cross, and tried to do his Master's will. By examining the word of God for himself, he could not see that man had an immortal soul. He left the church; but, not knowing of any people that believed as he did, the churches going against him, the adversary with all his hosts hurling their darts at him, he concluded to give up preaching and go to California. He left Wilmot, N. H., Oct., 1852; but the spirit of the Lord found him in the land of gold.

He had the charge of a church there about two years; but on account of poor health, he started for home Nov. 17. Arrived at Manchester Dec. 17, at his sister's, unexpectedly meeting his mother there. He concluded to stop a few days before going to his home. On Saturday, he was taken senseless, and on the next Friday died, and was carried home a corpse.

At times, during his sickness, he would sing part of a verse distinctly; and would often shout, glory! hallelujah!

Although all his friends did not have the privilege of seeing him when he could shake the friendly hand, or converse with him, yet they feel to rejoice, believing, if they are faithful to God, they will meet son and brother where there will be no more parting, and where none shall say they are sick.

SETH GOODHUE.

Wilmot, Jan. 12, 1857.

Poetry.

THE HEAVENLY LAND.

There is a land where beauty will not fade,
Nor sorrow dim the eye;
Where true hearts will not sink nor be dismay'd,
And love will never die.
Tell me—I fain would go,
For I am burdened with a heavy woe;
The Beautiful have left me all alone;
The True,—the Tender,—from my path have gone,
And I am weak and fainting with despair;
Where is it? tell me, where?

Friend, thou must trust in Him who trod before
The desolate paths of life;
Must bear in meekness as he meekly bore,
Sorrow, and toil, and strife.
Think how the Son of God
These thorny paths has trod;
Yet tarried out for thee th' appointed woe;
Think of his loneliness in places dim,
When no man comforted or cared for him;
Think how he prayed, unaided and alone,
In that dread agony, "Thy will be done!"
Friend, do not thou despair,
Christ, in his heaven of heavens, will hear thy prayer. [From the German of Uhland.

MISCHIEF MAKERS.

"The mischief makers;
Nor do they trust their tongues alone,
But speak a language of their own;
Can read a nod, a shrug or look,
Far better than a printed book;
Convey a libel in a frown,
Or wink a reputation down."

Foreign News.

ARRIVAL OF THE ASIA.

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.

The Asia arrived at her dock at 10 o'clock. She left Liverpool at 9 o'clock morning of the 27th, brings 80 passengers, and upwards of $100,000 in specie.

The Arago touched at Southampton eve of the 27th.

(The approaching Conference at Paris, the affair of Prussia and Switzerland, and the difficulty between Persia and Britain, continue to be the main features of interest.)

No day is yet fixed for re-assembling of the Congress at Paris. As already intimated, the second Plenipotentiaries will alone take part in it. Count Walewski will preside. There is still some preleminary business to go through with, but it is anticipated that the day of meeting may probably be held within a few days.

A statement is made in the London Times that England and France are now agreed on the points of discussion with Russia. No topics are to be introduced but those relative to Belgrad and the Isle of Serpents. Two or three sittings will suffice.

All the plenipotentiaries, including the Turkish minister, have now received their instructions.

As regards the Neufchatel question, Prussia continues her preparations for invasion and Switzerland for defence, but there exists a belief that the other powers will prevent actual hostilities. There was a rumor that England had agreed to mediate in the matter, but it was doubtful. A large space is devoted by the Continental journals on the question, but they contain little beyond surmises.

Hugh Miller, the geologist, was found shot dead in his house, supposed accidental.

It is stated that negotiations are broken off between the British Minister at Constantinople and Perouk Khan, the Russian Envoy, and the latter is proceeding to Paris, having, meanwhile, requested further instructions from his Government.

SWITZERLAND.—The state of affairs between Prussia and Switzerland is unchanged.

The Prussian Army, 130,000 strong, and not 30,000, as before reported, or about one-half of the entire Prussian force, was under arms. The present state of the controversy has been given. The rights of the King of Prussia were admitted by the great powers, in the Protocol of 1852, but the King of Prussia engaged not to employ hostile means to enforce them.

The arming of 20,000 men, ordered by the Swiss Federal Council, will be immediately carried into effect.

A Council of War, composed of 24 colonels, was to meet at Col. Delour's.

The Swiss are unanimous in their enthusiasm, and in the measures they are adopting.

At present there is no hope of seeing a pacific termination of the affair.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—The propeller Emeu left Havre Dec. 26. A despatch from Berlin, states that the war enthusiasm in Switzerland was increasing on all sides. The whole Swiss Union is organized for defence. An appeal had been made to the women for the organization of ambulances. The Diet had received rom Napoleon, a proposition for an amicable arrangement.

"WILL THE ANGELS GATHER ME?"

BY MARIA.

When the mighty ones commissioned,
Shall go forth at God's command,
From the earth, the isles, the ocean,
Gath'ring all the scattered band,—
When the bright prophetic hour
Dawns, the ransomed saints to free,
By the trumpet's peal loud spoken,
Will some angel come for me?

Shall I hear a voice unearthly
In the music of its tone,
Calling my poor name, as weary
I may toil and weep alone?
Shall I see the beaming features
Of a form enrobed in light,
Near me, with a heavenly radiance,
Dazzling to weak mortal sight?

Will a strong arm fold around me,
And a pure hand clasp my own,
While all doubt, now trembling, fearful,
From my spirit shall be gone?
Shall I feel "this mortal" changing
Into immortality,
Mine—its deathless bloom and vigor
Ever, ever more to be?

Shall I feel it parting from me
All this long-worn load of woe,
Grief and care, and pain and weakness,
With all earth-things left below?
Shall I then unfettered, soaring
With my angel-guide arise,
Mingle with the shining myriads,
Nearing now the azure skies?

Will that glory-cloud, enshrouding
Whom alone my eyes would greet,
Part, a crowned brow unveiling—
Shut me in, His face to meet?
What shall be the rapture, thrilling
Every chord within the breast,
When the "weight" of bliss eternal,
On my ravished soul shall rest?

Will not e'en the strength immortal
Faint, to hear the longed-for word—
"Come, ye blessed of my Father,"
Dwell forever with thy Lord?
While shall rise in swelling echoes,
Wakened by unnumbered strings—
"Hallelujah!" reign forever!
"Lord of Lords, and King of Kings!"

Oh, when angel ones commissioned,
Shall go forth at God's command,
From each lowly spot remotest,
Calling all the waiting band;
When the bright, long-promised hour
Dawns, earth's burdened hearts to free,
O, with that blest throng, elected,
Will the angels gather me?

Corespondence.

For the Crisis.

From C. E. Gierlow.

Dear Brn. and Sis.:—I am still a pilgrim in this vale of tears, looking for the great Shepherd of Israel to come and gather his sheep and lambs home to his protecting fold. Not one will be forgotten; all, all will be there. Long have they wandered in this world's dark wilderness, exposed to the ravages of the wild "beasts" who have always been seeking to devour them, sprinkling their pathway with blood and tears, while thousands upon thousands have fallen a prey to their persecutions. But soon, thank God, they shall live again, and with the innumerable host of the elect of all ages dwell in His presence where no danger can reach them more!

Oh, how I long for that time to come; I feel sad and desolate—no abiding home—no continuing city—separated from nearly all whom I have loved on earth. Alas! shall I never see you more, until we meet at the bar of God? You my friends, with whom I have enjoyed sweet intercourse, and walked to the house of God in company? Probably not. But I hope to meet you when mortality is swallowed up of life.

Do you ever think of me now, and sometimes offer up a prayer to God—our God, to bless and keep me from the evils with which I am surrounded?

I have many trials known to Him who numbers the hairs of our heads; I shed many tears which He putteth into His "bottle;" I utter many prayers, which, no doubt, He will answer in His own good time. But I am weary of this world's vain strife. I long for home!

Last evening I visited a wealthy family in this city, consisting of parents and seven children. I think I never saw a happier group. The parents are remarkably mild, agreeable people. Their children, the three oldest of whom have arrived at manhood, seem to have inherited the disposition of their parents. The fourth, is a daughter, a beautiful girl of fifteen years; such an one as we read of, sometimes, but seldom find. She seemed too pure, too beautiful for this poor world. I could not wonder that the fond father, as he had previously told me, enjoyed this life with his beloved family. They have created for themselves a little heaven upon earth.—All are kind to each other; no harsh word is spoken here; and what most excited my admiration was the respect that was shown by the children to their parents. What a beautiful sight is a well-ordered family. It makes me sad to think that while others were so much blessed in their domestic circle, my own had been marred and broken by the ravages of Death.

Previous to my coming to the South, I had buried three children, side by side in the cold grave, and when I thought of changing my place of residence, I mentally exclaimed—"must I leave you, my once sweet prattling babes? must I go to my new home without you?" But it was a consolation to think I had two others to come with me, so far from my native home. The youngest of these, as many of you know, was the darling of my heart. I loved him too well, and in a few days after I arrived, he was taken away; and O! I think that this was the severest affliction I have ever met with. But "He doeth all things well." Who knows what is in reserve for those who have come to years of maturity? Who can tell, amid the temptations and dangers of this life, whether they will ever be permitted to wear the crown of immortality? Be still, my soul, and trust in God, who hath done what was best for thee and thine! Thy little ones are safe. Be faithful to the end, and thou shalt find them all again. Trust in God, and soon, very soon, thy tears will cease to flow, and thou shalt rest.

God grant us the consummation of our hopes speedily, in his everlasting kingdom.

C. E. Gierlow.

For the Crisis.

From Bro. C. Churchill.

Dear Brethren:—It may not be uninteresting to you to learn the state of the Advent cause in the frontiers of the far West. I came to Iowa last June; commenced to make improvements upon a new place, one and a fourth miles from the little village of New Hartford, in the Beaver valley, at the foot of Beaver Grove; and as there were no schoolhouses, nor places of worship, I gave an appointment in a large saw-mill, that was opened by a Mr. Ensign, as a place of divine worship. Our meetings were well attended during warm weather; some believed in the "gospel of the Kingdom" and of our Lord's speedy coming. Others said, "we will hear thee again on this matter." Others mocked, saying, "all things continue as they were from the beginning."

I have held meetings in several neighborhoods, in private houses, as there is but one schoolhouse within my knowledge, and I hold meetings there once in two weeks.

There are some of "like precious faith" interspersed here and there, upon the broad prairies, upon the west branch of the Cedar river and at the Horse-neck. Some of our brethren are so scattered, that I have not been able to get enough together to organize a church.

Some backsliders have been reclaimed, and several prominent men have become interested, and are reading Advent books that I furnish them, viz: "The Time of the End;" "Messiah's Throne of Millennial Glory;" Cumming's works; Hill's "World to Come," &c., together with a few tracts.

A few professed christians have embraced the Advent doctrine, but there is strong prejudice among the different denominations against us; but few attend our meetings, and not unfrequently almost the entire congregation are non-professors. I have heard of no other preacher in these parts, who proclaims a Savior nigh; and before I commenced meeting, I was told that the way they knew when the Sabbath came, was by the firing of guns along the river, for it was the day they took for hunting.

"Say not there are four months, and then cometh the harvest, but lift up your eyes upon the fields; are they not all white, ready to harvest? the harvest truly is great but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into the field." I am doing what I can. I labor through the week and preach on the Sabbath. Our privations are many, but we will endure them patiently, for the cause of our Master, and the love we bear for perishing sinners. Let us make ready a company to meet Him, for the King is at the door.

Good Sayings.

Blessed is that man who is wholly consecrated unto the Lord.

The Word of God is an everlasting source of comfort and interest to the sanctified soul.

The person who loves to pray, prays because he loves to, and loves to pray the more, the more he prays.

No person can do a right act without, in some way, being a gainer by it. E. B.

THE LAST EPIPHANY.

BY J. GIERLOW.

Awake, my soul! and see those dread portents,
Those dismal harbingers of dire events;
Loud thunders roar, and darting lightnings fly
Through the dark region of the troubled sky;
Dreadfully bright o'er seas and earth they glare,
And bursts of thunder rend the burdened air.
The day is girt with horrors of the night,
And light itself refuses to give light.
Confusion, jarring spreads from pole to pole,
And dissolution siezes on the whole.
All nature suffers, and the pathos far
Spreads from the centre to the farthest star;
Yea, not a wandering atom in the way,
But feels the coming of this august day.
The whirling wind with horror roars aloud,
Drives wave on wave, and dashes cloud on cloud;
The hills, unfixed, their bases now forsake,
The mighty mountains to their centres shake,
And rocks that scorned the billow's frequent dash,
With dread concussion 'gainst each other crash.

Now glory flashes from the golden spheres:
Rejoice, O man! a God—a God appears!
A God! a God! descending angels sing,
And mighty Seraphs shout, Behold your King!—
Hail, virgin-born! lift, lift, ye blind! your eyes;
Sing, O ye dumb! and O ye dead! arise!
Tremble, ye gates of hell! in noblest strains
Tell it aloud, ye heavens! the Savior reigns!

Beam on, eternal day! and let thy light
Dart through our souls, thrice welcome glorious height
Of love ineffable! thy presence, King
Of Kings, forever in thy courts we sing.

The French Empire.

BY GEO. STORRS.

The following interesting article was published by Bro. Storrs, soon after Napoleon III. came to the throne of France, and is now published by request, in the Crisis:

The re-establishment of the Napoleon Dynasty in France, has opened a new chapter in prophecy, as clearly marking the time in which we live, as any event in modern history. The prophecy relating to this scene is found chiefly in Revelation, 17th chapter.

Prophecy was given as a light to the church of God; designed to show it, at the period of fulfillment, the exact position and time occupied by it, that it might never be without a "day-star" or day-dawn," to guide its steps. It is not necessary to suppose that the church living before the events predicted take place, should be able to fix them with exactness; nor for it, when living centuries after the events take place, to fix with certainty all the events which were the subject of prophecy; this would require more knowledge of profane history than most saints have the means of acquiring. But passing events are more within the knowledge of all; and the prophecies relating to them are what immediately concern the church in whatever period it may be called to labor or suffer.

In the prophecies of Scripture a beast is the symbol of a Dynasty or Body of Rulers. It does not include the ruled, or subjects. To suppose this is to destroy the harmony of prophecy. The same dynasty may be, and sometimes is, symbolized by different beasts. The seventh and eighth chapters of Daniel are presented in proof of this. It is not our object now to enter further into that argument, but to show that the Napoleon Dynasty is symbolized in Rev. 17, and then briefly suggest its mission in this present development.

At the opening of that chapter, one of the angels having the seven last plagues, called John to view the position the great harlot occupied when she was going to judgment; and he beheld her seated on a scarlet-colored beast, having seven heads and ten horns. That this harlot represents the Papal Dynasty, we shall not now stop to argue, as we consider that point long since settled. The corrupt body of rulers of that corrupt church appear supporting their power by taking refuge on the civil dynasty that is described by a scarlet-colored beast. The description of that beast shows it to be a dynasty differing from any previous one.

The Dragon, Rev. 12, has seven heads and ten horns, but has crowns on his heads. The first beast, Rev. 13, has the same number of heads and horns, but has the crowns on his horns. The beast in the 17th chapter appears with the same number of heads and horns, but no mention is made of any crowns; and yet it is shown to have a family relation by the seven heads.

The peculiarities of this beast are, that it is "the eighth, and is of the seven"—that "it was, is not, and YET IS;" and that it is by ascending out of the abussou—the abyss. It had been in power—that power for a time is not; then, suddenly, it ascends from its non-existence and appears to the wonder of all except those whose names were in the book of life, that is, of all except the followers of Christ, for whose special benefit the prophecy was given; and who by a careful attention to the words of Christ are enabled to see the approaching consummation in the accuracy of the event fulfilling the prophecy.

In the information the angel gave John, he says, ver. 10—"There are seven kings"—forms of government, or dynasties—"five are fallen, one is, the other is not yet come; and when he cometh he must continue a short space."

That these seven dynasties are all Roman, we believe, is nearly the universal belief of Protestant Christendom. The sixth, that was in power at the time John had the vision, was the Roman Imperial. Five forms of Roman government had fallen prior to that time. The Imperial was the one then reigning, and was to continue till "the short space" dynasty should arise.

We find the imperial did continue down to 1806. After it was darkened in the western Roman Empire, just previous to the rise of Papacy it still continued in the eastern, at Constantinople, till 1453. Before it fell in the east, it had been revived in the west, in the person of Charlemagne, A. D. 800; and continued unbroken in the Emperors of Germany or Austria, till overthrown by Napoleon Bonaparte, in 1806.

At this point we look for the "short space," or "seventh" dynasty. Accordingly we find Napoleon proclaimed Emperor of France and King of Italy; and assuming to be the successor of the Cæsars. Thus the seventh is developed. "It was"—but soon, "it is not; and the world supposed it had disappeared for ever. But, before forty years pass away, an "eighth" appears from the abyss, to the wonder of the world; but this eighth is not another dynasty—it "is of the seven;" it is the same that "was" then "is not"—and "yet is."

Nothing could be more accurate in its fulfillment than the prophecy in the Napoleon Dynasty; and when Louis Napoleon entered Paris on his return from his tour through France, to prepare the way for the proclamation of the Empire, some of the sentiments inscribed on the banners that graced his entry into the city, were such as this—"the uncle that was—the nephew that is." Thus employing the very words of the prophecy, though unknowingly to themselves.

For a time this dynasty "is not." When Napoleon I. abdicated, he did so in favor of his own son, Napoleon II. But that son never came to power—he "is not" a reigning portion of the dynasty; and the dynasty, itself, for near forty years, "is not." It then "ascended from the abyss," and now "it is!" Thus far all seems plain.

We next remark—That in ascending from the abyss, one of the first acts of the beast is to receive the great harlot to sit upon him. She takes her seat there just as the "judgment" is about to be executed upon her. Here again history and prophecy harmonize. The Papal power was driven from Rome, and was not likely to recover its seat. But the ascending beast sent his republican (!) armies to Italy, and the harlot takes her seat on, or by means of, that scarlet-colored beast, where she now sits; because, as yet, Louis Napoleon knows it is for his interest to let her sit upon—not guide—his dynasty. So long as he can use her for his own aggrandizement, so long will he consent to let her sit as she does.

Thus far the fulfillment seems perfect; but we now approach the future. Here all we can do is to trace the outlines. There seems clearly to be "ten kings"—or small dynasties—yet to be developed, who are to be united to the beast by a voluntary giving "their power and strength to the beast," verse 13; after which, by some means, or from some cause not yet developed, "the beast with the horns," (so the Syriac reads,) will come in collision with the harlot, and "eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." Let the Papal or Harlot power attempt to put bits in the mouth of this beast, or to restrain his ambition, and she will soon find she has been riding to judgment, and her destruction is certain and final.

Another event in the history of this dynasty and its horns is, they will "make war on the Lamb;" consequently this "short space" dynasty will continue in power till the Lamb shall return to claim the kingdoms of this world. That war is briefly spoken of in the conclusion of the 17th chapter, with the emphatic declaration—"The Lamb shall overcome them." The 19th chapter speaks of this war more in detail, and after describing "the armies in heaven," that followed the Lamb, John proceeds to say—"I saw, the beast (the Napoleon Dynasty,) and the kings (the ten kings) of the earth (who had given their power to the beast) and their armies gathered together to make war against him that sat upon the horse, (viz., the Lamb,) and against his army."

Thus the battle is set in array—the war commences—tremendous scenes open—a conflict that is to decide the government of this world. Is not this a matter of interest to all? What is to be the result? The prophecy does not leave us in doubt—"The Lamb shall overcome them:" chap. 17: 14;—"the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him. * * * These both were cast alive into a lake of fire and brimstone;" chapter 19: 20. The 17th chapter had said, verse 11, he "goeth into perdition"—is destroyed. The 20th chapter tells us this is done when he makes war on the "King of kings and Lord of lords." Then he—that is—this dynasty—goeth into perdition, or is destroyed, and that destruction is final.

Now, whether all these things will take place under Napoleon III.—the present reigning Emperor in France—we will not pretend to say—the events yet undeveloped must determine that. But this we must say, If we have given the right application of the prophecy—and of this we see no reason to doubt—then the Napoleon Dynasty will not pass away till all these things be fulfilled; and as it is to be a "short space" dynasty, it does not seem likely that many years more can be allotted to it. If, however, the present Emperor of France is to be succeeded by others of the same family, it will not alter the general features of the prophecy; we are manifestly fast approaching the world's crisis; and the most astonishing events will, most likely, soon burst upon the world, which will cause the hearts of many to fail them with fear and consternation.

Much more might be said upon this subject; and we have by no means exhausted it. All we have aimed to do is, to throw out hints to call attention to prophecy as connected with passing events; this we feel bound to do as a watchman. As to fixing upon particular days or years for the accomplishment of all these things, we have no hand in it; and we are fully settled that all such calculations are injurious in their tendency, and calculated to throw the mind from that calm and sober waiting for the Lord, which ought ever to control and govern us, if we would be preserved from wild fanaticism.

Let us remember, the night is far spent—the day is at hand. Let us watch and keep ourselves unspotted from the world, walking in the footsteps of our blessed Lord and Life-Giver, Jesus the Messiah; that when He who is our life shall appear, we also may appear with him in glory.

Beloved reader, let us not forget that this present life is of infinite value to us; because, if improved as God has enjoined and commanded we may gain an unending life. May none of the cares, anxieties, pursuits, or perplexities of this present time lead us to neglect the great and glorious prize of Immortality, Incorruptibility, Eternal Life; which can only be secured by a living union with Christ, the heavenly-appointed Life-Giver. May the Spirit of God be shed on us through Him, that we may be aided to walk in the truth, and be made partakers of Everlasting Life thereby.

For the Children.

Sarah Goodwin and her Boys.

Sarah Goodwin was the name of a poor seamstress, residing in the city of New York. She was not wholly friendless, but those whom she knew, and who would have aided her in her struggles, were very poor and could not. So she, a widow with four boys from the ages of four to nine years, struggled through winter's cold and summer's heat, provided her family with bread and that was all. Meat and luxuries were denied Sarah Goodwin and her boys. The latter were very good children, always in their homes after nightfall, and giving their mother every cent of their little earnings, as often as they found work to do. At last the mother fell sick, and through a weary illness, she had no other attendance, save the occasional help of a neighbor, and the constant aid of her boys. They were never from her side, and it was touching to behold their sympathy, their gentle ministrations; everybody prophesied that they would be blessed in coming years for their thoughtful kindness to their mother.

The widow recovered; but it was now in the heart of winter, and their little stock of fuel was nearly gone. As soon as her strength permitted, she walked through the cold on a cheerless day to the shop of her employer, and told him her pitiful story. But the times were hard, her illness had made room for others as destitute as herself; in fine, they had not one stitch of work to give her. With a sinking heart, but praying to keep her courage up, the poor woman toiled on from one shop to another, until it became late, and what with tears and darkness, she could hardly see her way home.

"If Mr. Hart himself had been there," she soliloquized, bending to the strong wind, and drawing her scanty shawl closer about her form, "I know he would have given me work."

As she whispered thus through her chattering teeth, a tall man with a long gray beard passed by her, and as he did so, something fell to the sidewalk, and lay upon the crusted snow. Sarah paused, she had heard the noise made by the packet, and a mysterious impression led her to search for it. Oh joy! it was a purse, heavy and filled to the brim; yellow and shining lay the gold within, in its strong meshes, as she carried it toward a lighted window.

"My poor boys! they shall want food no longer," she ejaculated, fervently; "this is gold, gold! God put it in my way. He saw I was despairing."

Suddenly, like a flash of lightning, the thought occurred to Sarah that not a cent of the new found treasure was honestly hers. But a moment she lingered, pressing the money with her numbed fingers, the sorrowful tears pressing down her thin cheeks; then starting forward to find the owner of the purse, she walked hurriedly up the street, fearful that the temptation, should she arrive at her poor home and see her hungry children, might prove too strong for her integrity.

Opposite the great hotel, as she stood hesitating which way to take, she saw the stranger enter. She knew him by his long singular beard, and timidly crossing the street, she made her way into the billiard hall, and there, bewildered by the light, knew not what to say or do till twice asked by a servant what she wanted. Of course she did no more than describe the stranger by his tall stature and long beard. But he had already gone out again; she must call on the morrow, they said, and ask for Mr. Ascroft.

The next morning, having eaten nothing,—for she could not touch a farthing of the gold,—she was admitted into the room where sat the stranger. He rose as she entered, and gazed with a curious air till she presented the purse. Then he started with pleasure and surprise, laid down his paper, took the gold, and deliberately counted it over.

"It is all safe," he said; "you have not—"

"Not one piece, sir," said she, eagerly, trembling as she stood.

"You seem very poor," remarked the stranger carelessly.

"I am poor," she replied.

"Got a family, I suppose?"

"Four little boys, sir; I am a widow."

"Humph! humph! so I supposed—that's the old story."

"Ask Mr. Hunt, the tailor," cried the widow, stepping forward a little; "he knows me well; he knows that I am poor—I am honest."

A bright spot burned on her cheek as she spoke, and she forced back the tears.

"Now confess," said the stranger, rising and walking to and fro before the fire, "confess that you expected a large reward for this."

"I did think, perhaps," and she turned with quivering lips to the door.

"Stop, stop!" cried the stranger; you know you would never have returned the purse, had you not expected to be paid for it."

"Sir!" said the widow, her tone indignant, her thin form towering, and oh! the withering rebuke of her voice and manner; the stranger paused, holding the purse in his hand; then drawing forth the smallest piece the purse contained, offered it to her. For a moment she drew back, but then remembering that her boys were hungry at home, and in bed because there was no fire, she burst into tears as she took it, saying, "This will buy bread for my poor children," and hurrying away, she buried the bitterness of that morning in her own heart.

It was four o'clock on the same day; Sarah Goodwin sat by a scanty fire, busy in sewing patches on the very poor clothes of her four boys.

"Run to the door, Jimmy," said she to the eldest, as a loud knock was heard.

"Oh, mother!" the boy cried, returning; "a big bundle for us; what is it? what can it be?

"Work for me, perhaps," said she, untying the package, when suddenly there came to light four suits of gray clothes, with four neat black shining caps, each set exactly fitting to the dimensions of her boys.

Almost paralyzed with astonishment, the widow remained on her knees, her eyes riveted on the words—"A present for the fatherless," while the boys, appropriating their wardrobes, danced about the floor, shouting with glee.

"What's in the pocket here? what's in the pocket?" cried Jimmy, thrusting his hand into that receptacle, when lo! out came the very purse of gold she had returned that morning.

A scene of confusion ensued, and the voice of prayer ascended from Sarah Goodwin's full heart. Again and again she counted the glittering treasure. Five hundred dollars! It seemed an almost endless fortune. How her heart ran over with gratitude to God and to the good stranger. She could not rest till throwing on her bonnet, with cheeks now glowing with hope and happiness, she ran back to the hotel to pour forth her thanks. A carriage laden with trunks behind stood at the door. The driver mounted the seat as she reached the hotel steps; and turning her head, there within, sat the mysterious stranger with the long beard. She had no time to speak, but he nodded his head as he saw her with clasped hands, stand there; her very face seemed a prayer embodied.

Sarah never saw the eccentric stranger again. She took a little shop and stocked it well, and put her boys to school.

To-day she is the proprietor of a handsome store. Of her four boys, two are ministers, one is a doctor, and the other is a thriving merchant. Nobody knows where the man with the long gray beard has gone, but if he is living and his eye meets this, he will have the noble results of his generous deed toward Sarah Goodwin and her four boys.

If we look to God for help He will look to us with favor. E. B.

Bible Women.

OR WHAT BIBLE WOMEN HAVE BEEN—WHAT THEY SHOULD BE.

BY B. MATHEWSON.

No. II.

With the potency of the promised Spirit, "uprightness" is just attainable by frail mortals, leaning neither to the right or left, knowing "the scriptures do completely environ us," yea plumb us to erectness, affording no opportunity for self-indulgence.

The word of God contains prohibitions, warnings, and exhortations for the variety of temperaments produced by a different organization of matter. To the excitable and vivacious, it presents the highest encomiums on "a meek and quiet spirit," giving assurance of its invaluable estimate in the "sight of God." It solemnly threatens expulsion from the "kingdom of heaven" to those who possess an opposite spirit of subdued and docile "little children." It also exhorts such against being "overcharged" with worldly cares lest they be found in an unsalvable state. To the naturally tranquil, easy and inactive, it commends and gives promise to the "diligent"—commands activity in "business" and fervor of spirit, and even forbids that nourishment necessary to existence, to those who "will not work." The language of this last prohibition may appear to some, paradoxical with the clemency of an apostle, but to myself, there is a justness in it that does honor to that high appellation! Would it not be a blessing to society for their place in creation to be filled by some being affording some utility to mankind?

God never commends an amiability (if I may be allowed the expression) that connives at sin by suffering it to pass unrebuked—that manifests complacency by not expressing displeasure, when the church are incurring the danger of an "Achan" in their midst, whose hypocritical wickedness will trouble all Israel and weaken their spiritual power! May God increase faithful christian reprovers!

The prophet Isa. uses his burning eloquence, with cutting reproof, upon a class of females whom it may be presumed, appeared rather amiable than otherwise.

"Rise up, ye women that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters; give ear unto my speech. Many days and years shall ye be troubled, ye careless women; for the vintage shall fail, the gathering shall not come. Tremble, ye women that are at ease; be troubled, ye careless ones; strip you and make you bare, and gird sackcloth upon your loins." I understand the "wo" upon those at ease in Zion to stand with equal force upon both sexes.

The Queen of Sheba—known to the Arabians, by their traditions, as Queen Balkis—affords a striking example to her sex of mental, moral, and physical energy. When we consider the wonderful difficulties she surmounted for the acquisition of religious knowledge, we marvel not that a greater than Solomon commended her intellectual and moral power as standing paramount to a generation.

The south-western part of Arabia—now called Temen—comprized the Sheba of the Bible; "an area" says the historian "equal to the whole of New England and New York." From this to Jerusalem by the winding way of travel, it must have exceeded by far twelve hundred miles, for it must have been all of this distance in a direct line. A journey equivalent to a tour half round the globe in these days. Her sagacious intellect must have discerned the fatigue and appalling dangers attending such a journey. But as to physical endurance perhaps she was better qualified for hardship than most of New England females; for Baron de Larrey, surgeon general of Napoleon's army in Egypt, said of the people of this same region, east of the Red sea—"their physical structure is in all respects more perfect than that of Europeans; their figure robust and elegant, their intelligence proportionate to that physical perfection."

Glance, if you please, at the map of Arabia and behold what mountains and wide trackless deserts must have been passed—where the lion prowls—the scorpion stings—the simoon sweeps it poisonous breath—clouds and pillars of sand threatening the traveler with a living burial. Sixty nights was her pavilion pitched, and sixty mornings struck, ere she reached the residence of him whose fame had occasioned this two month's journey. But she feels there is no cause for murmuring. No; her anticipations relative to Solomon's wisdom, are more than realized, for she frankly acknowledged "the half was not told her. It was doubtless her lively interest in religious knowledge that called her to endure the hardships and perils of such a journey—the privation of being separated from her own devoted people, for, at least, some five or six months. Says the sacred record,—she "heard of the fame of Solomon, concerning the name of the Lord," upon which she resolved to prove him with "hard questions." An intellect, sufficient to prove with "hard questions" the wisest man that ever had an existence, does great credit to the female sex. It also goes to sustain the capability of her regal powers.

After many days of profound converse with her friend, she addressed him with the following language,—"blessed be the Lord thy God which delighteth in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel; because the Lord loved Israel for ever, therefore made he thee king, to do judgment and justice;" which gives us an idea of her appreciation of the Eternal—her love and good will to his servant—her just and equitable character as a ruler.

We learn also from the sacred oracles that her magnanimous soul delighted in acts of generosity. It appears she selected the choicest products her own soil yielded, "and very much gold and precious stones" as a present to the king of Israel. From the same source we may understand the slight estimate she set on rank or position in society, compared with that wisdom" for which her soul thirsted, by her language relative to Solomon's servants,—"Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom." The Savior expressly declares that he "came to hear wisdom." Would that this were oftener the object of travel and conversation.

It is more than probable that this noble and excellent woman spread a hallowed savor,—a healthful and saving influence over her country for centuries. History informs us that eight hundred years after the death of Queen Balkis, and one hundred and sixty before the Savior's advent, the pious Maccabees found it more easy to propagate pure religion in Sheba than elsewhere in Arabia. The tone of morality standing much higher probably through the influence of one woman.

Amid the conflicts of these "perilous times" some still exclaim,—"I wish I knew what was right relative to the requirements of God from man." Well, this desire is very well. But suffer me to inquire how high it stands upon the thermometer of the heart? Would you value such knowledge more than gold, yea, than fine gold? Is. 19: 10; and 119: 127. Prov. 8: 11. Have you ever used that careful solicitude you would for hidden treasures? Prov. 2: 9. Or have you ever fasted three full weeks to understand the mind and the will of the Lord? Dan. 10: 2, 3. According to our Savior's teaching, the pious exertions of the Queen of Sheba to understand the truth of God's will, at the judgment, condemn 'a generation." And shall I inquire who will condemn the present professed church, who seize with avidity the light and useless novel, to the neglect of the holy scriptures which are able to make them wise unto salvation? Like Pilate, some hastily inquire, "what is truth?" but like him are so heated with anxiety to secure an honorable standing in this present world, they cannot stop for an answer.

It is true that many bible-women find but little time to study the scriptures, providential circumstances obliging their sedulous employment necessary to the proper attention an affectionate wife ever manifests for her family. But there remains one high source of communication, unclosed for want of time! I allude to prayer. This is a source of wisdom improvable at any time, condition, circumstance, or position of body, when our hands are employed with temporal pursuits. Praise the Lord, that this avenue to wisdom is ever open, and, like the devoted Hannah, we may call down blessings which will greatly facilitate our usefulness.

Would that all personal charms were used like those of Queen Esther who, when God's people were endangered, not only freely sacrificed her charms, but risked her own life also. Upon receiving the sorrowful tidings of the destruction of her people, her pious soul immediately conceived the utility of fasting and prayer. She seemed to understand wherein the great strength of God's people lay, and solicited her people to concentrate their petitions in one unbroken column to His throne who was able "to turn the hearts of men as the rivers of water are turned.' She had evidently tried the efficacy of prayer ere this; perhaps, when she saw herself about to be orphaned and death encircling her dear parents; perhaps, at that opportune moment, she learned to lean on an Almighty arm for support.

For the sake of excluding monotony, what now if we bid a sudden adieu to beauty and princely thrones, and hastily glance at woman in the domestic vale of bible life.

Rachel and Leah built their house in the isolated retreat of domestic life. Not adapted to publicity their virtues shone most in private. Their wise and affectionate regard for their husbands—their faith and sympathy blended with his in the true worship of the eternal—their decision in not mingling with the godless throng—their discreet management of their culinary and domestic concerns, doubtless held an important influence in building the house of Israel. Ruth 4: 11. The last mentioned item may appear to some of small moment to be placed in the scales of godliness, but it evidently was not so considererd by inspiration. In portraying the properties of a good wife, it shows us that "she looketh well to the ways of her household and eateth not the bread of idleness." It shows also, that such an one unites energy, industry and affection, to provide her family against inclement weather. "She seeketh wool and flax and worketh willingly with her hands. She is not afraid of the snow for her household; for all her household are clothed with scarlet, (or double garments.")

And why should that excellent gift of discreet housekeeping, or as the apostle has it—"guiding the house"—be lightly estimated when so much comfort is involved in its proper execution? What facilities for moral, mental, and physical happiness does the neat and proper adjustment of food, furniture, clothing, in fine, all that pertains to housewifery, afford a whole family! If everything wears the plainest and most simple impress, the good housewife possesses a talisman that clothes all with such an air of comfort and neatness as shall cause the heart of a godly husband to swell with emotions of gratitude and delight as he [illegible] nature's necessary separation and re-[illegible] will "her children rise up and call her blessed."

Says the inspired penman, "every wise woman buildeth her house; but the foolish plucketh it down with her hands." Also, that she will be a means of elevating her husband, unless she unfortunately possess a Nubal! If so, with Abigail, let her act judiciously and firm to maintain the right. In portraying a good wife, why does inspiration point out her husband as occupying an honorable position, unless her virtues had been a means of promoting him with the honored of God? Thus, "her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land."

Certain it is if all our temporal and spiritual duties are properly performed, there is no time for vain thoughts, idleness, or being "busybodies in other mens' matters."

Parental Government.

BY ZETA.

(Concluded.)

In my former numbers I have only glanced at a few of the many important duties of parents to their children, nor could I allude to all particulars in many articles more. But there are a few items more to which I wish to cite parents and teachers, and leave the subject. It is highly important first, for parents to understand right principles, and especially the foundation of right principles, and wrong ones also. Do you want your children cruel, tyrannical, boisterous, warlike, and hard-hearted? All good-minded persons will say no. Well, what does most to make children so? I answer. There is a system in full use in society which does more to create the above named dispositions than many are aware of. Many well-desiring persons do not look from cause to effect, and are constantly sowing seed which brings forth a harvest of sorrow and anguish to the good, but of shameless and devilish boastings from mere worldlings. How thoughtlessly do many mothers and nurses implant the habit of revenge, and excite the passion of anger in the heart of the child. For instance. The child gets its hand pricked with a pin, or injured otherwise; the pin is addressed as a wicked thing, is taken, bent up, thrown into the fire. Other inanimate things are treated in a similar way, when injuries are received by them. The child hits its head against the table or chair. The mother scolds the article, and pounds it with her hand or something else, to make the child think she is punishing it. The child soon follows the example, grows up with a revengeful spirit—a tyrant, ready to crush every opposing thing, fighting and often killing his fellows.

Again. Thoughtlessly, children are taught to amuse themselves by tantalizing whipping and abusing the household pets. They next go the yard, or field, and gratify their strengthening passions by chasing, goading, and stoning cattle and horses, killing birds and fowls, &c., for amusement. Then they enlist to put everything in distress to give them pleasure.

Again, children are often punished with swords, pistols, and other carnal weapons, in imitation, and shown how to use them; by experimenting on the cat, dog, or on each other, while the principles of bravery are taught them. They are soon eager to enter the war field, or navy, and often go to shed the blood of their fellows. Cock fighting, bull-fighting, dog-fighting, boxing, &c., are often preached and encouraged by what is called civilized society, and children taken to such scenes of amusement, and animated by the zeal of their parents or guardians to think it fine sport. Duelling often germinates in this soil. Cold-heartedness, cruelty, brutal passions, and vile affections originate in such things; yes, and many children are thus thoughtlessly "trained up" to a ruinous end.

Another deadly evil arises from the reading and course of instruction most children receive. It begins with little primers often presenting some brave story, or cruel torture, or war principles, or knavery, fraud, or fool-hardy adventure, which is eulogized as worthy example Longer books come next, filled with biographies of dead heroes, covered with the praises of the honorable, held up as the saviors of society, and as the fathers of the country. Speeches on war to excite all the hateful passions, on the art of battle, to call forth all the energies of the mind to study it. Histories of wholesale murderers, written by those who spice all their acts of violence with enconiums, and crown them with earthly glory, where infancy only belongs. Such books, of a thousand shades, are feeding our children, young and old. Many of them sanctified by ministers, many of them baptized in the imposing titles of Rev. and D. D. in the title page, as author, or compiler, who uses pious words of regret for the necessity of such horrors as he records, while he screens the actor with a shroud of honor, and raises a halo of glory over his tomb. I do not say that history should not be written, but I rejoice that it is; yet, I believe, the style of much of it sends forth deadly poison to the youthful reader. While history of nations, of men, and war, should be published, no glory, honor, or praise should be bestowed upon any act of blood or violence, no enconiums on those who have been raised to eminence by the calamities of others. A veil of horror, of grief, and regret, should cover the face of such evils, while they are held up to be deplored, and shunned by all men. Children should be taught that all fighting among the animal creation, whether by bears, tigers, dogs or men, infamous, injurious, devilish, and leads to death,—is the results of sin, and is always conceived in sin, and is always among men, carried on in sin, and can only end in destruction. When children are "trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." they will be thus instructed. The gospel is free from all such evils.

Let parents think of these few evils pointed out, and remember that what is sown will be reaped. If you want good children, gentlemen and ladies, and ripe christians, teach your children to "abhor that which is evil, (always,) and cleave to that which is good."

Behold He Cometh.

EDWIN BURNHAM.

What is it that I hear? There is a sound in my ears like the sound of the distant rolling of His awful Majesty's chariot wheels coming to visit the nations and redeem His chosen! What means the low, distant, solemn, awful murmuring sound of moving among the most mighty nations of the earth? Why will peace no longer dwell among them? They cry peace, but, behold, confusion! They refuse to drink of the mingled cup which the mighty God hath prepared for them, but, lo, they must drink! Has not the time almost fully come for the avenging One to sprinkle the blood of the wrathful winepress upon His garments? It is the day of His faithful preparation. The Lord God of hosts mustereth the hosts to battle! O earth, thy doom is well nigh come! O Gentiles, your time is almost filled up! The faithful hear the footsteps of their God approaching! The great event of all events casts its fearful shadow before it. The lamp of Prophecy, to the faithful student, casts now a brilliant light. This is no time for compromise. We are almost at the end of the reign of nations. Believe it, O believe it, fainting, trembling, fearful wondering soul. Were you doomed to a much longer disappointment your God would signify to you: He would not leave you in sorrow for unanswered prayers and disregarded desires. What, shall we ask of Him bread, and He give us a stone? Shall we ask of Him fish, and He give us a serpent? Shall we ask of Him an egg, and He give us a scorpion? Shall we ask of Him for truth, and He give us perpetual error? NEVER! NEVER!! He may leave us in a partial condition of error, for the time being, but, "the meek will he guide in judgment—the meek WILL He teach His way" "We have not followed cunningly devised fables." No, no.

"God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain."

We have had error—perhaps we have some now—perhaps much—but, glory to the eternal God of truth, we are on the road of patriarchs, prophets, wise men, apostles, martyrs and the general host of God; and we are not here by our own seeking: we would not have been here if we had consulted our own will: God has led us here in the course of His own operation with us; and He will take care of us. I believe it, glory to God! I must believe it—I will believe it—it is condemnation and perdition for me to believe anything else. I do not mean that God has led us to say and do all that we have said and done. Far from it. Much that has been said and done broods as a cloud of darkness on our numbers. But light, clear, brilliant, heavenly light, has been sown for us, and has sprung up in our steps. We have said, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of Mary and the Son of God, will come again, literally and personally, to earth, the second time. THIS IS TRUE. We have said, the evidences of His immediate coming are scattered thickly through heaven, earth, and ocean—in state and church—among the nations, the masses, and all relations of society. THIS IS TRUE. We have said, it is our position to prepare for and wait for His coming. THIS IS TRUE. We have said, without His coming, and the resurrection of the dead, we are without hope of eternal life. THIS IS TRUE. We have said, when He comes He will raise the dead, judge the world, redeem His people, damn the wicked, regenerate the earth, make all things new, and reign on David's throne forever. THIS IS TRUE. We have said, "Cast not away your confidence." Keep the word of Prophecy like a lamp in darkness. Hold fast! BEHOLD HE COMETH!!

The Bridegroom comes!
His saints are glad.
And mourning ones,
No longer sad,
Look up and sing—
Welcome their King,
Who comes to quell
The powers of Hell;
And rule the earth,
His right of birth.
Thrice welcome, Lord,
We long for thee;
Fulfill thy Word,
And set us free!

For the Crisis.

The Time.

ROBERT HUMPHRIES.

Although there have been many mistakes in our investigation of prophetic time, yet, the word of God stands sure, and that word declares that at "the time appointed the end shall be." God has said that not one word which proceedeth out of his mouth shall return to him void. At the appointed time the vision will speak and not lie.—The 2300 days is the time appointed. They are not yet ended, because the little horn is not yet broken without hand; neither has the Judgment set nor the books been opened.

The passing of so many times has tried the faith of some, but that should not in the least hinder any further investigation. Remember that there is a blessing pronounced on those that wait and [illegible] the 1335 days. But if those were not to be understood, then this revelation to man is in vain. The 1335 days form the last part of the 2300, because, it appears to me, they alike bring the judgment.

That the 2300 days began with the 20th of Artaxerxes, there can be no doubt; that the date in our Bibles, which is 445, is incorrect, will be easily seen from the following calculation:—

The 7th of Artaxerxes is proved, by Ferguson's astronomy, to be 457 B. C., and if so, the 20th of Artaxerxes must be 444 B. C.

Thus 7th of Artaxerxes—		457	B. C.
8th "	"	456	"
9th "	"	455	"
10th "	"	454	"
11th "	"	453	"
12th "	"	452	"
13th "	"	451	"
14th "	"	450	"
15th "	"	449	"
16th "	"	448	"
17th "	"	447	"
18th "	"	446	"
19th "	"	445	"
20th "	"	444	"

Thus, commencing the days in 444 B. C., they must terminate somewhere in this present year, 1857.

I do not see how any one who professes to be looking for the coming of the blessed Lord, can have an unwillingness to look at the time of his coming, which in his goodness it hath pleased him to reveal.

Let us beware of that sin which so easily besets us—the sin of unbelief in the word of the Lord.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JANUARY 28, 1857.

Question.

No. I.

A correspondent asks, "What shall be understood by the word soul?"

We will first give a theological answer to the above question, and then one from the Bible. A distinguished minister of the gospel, when preaching on the immortality of man, said:

"In one sense the body is a mere piece of mechanism, which in our present imperfect state, the spirit uses for the execution of its purposes; the arm, for instance, is a lever,—the muscles are the cords which move it, and through the nerves, what we call the will,—which is only the soul acting,—regulates their contraction and extension; so that when I overcome the law of gravity by lifting a weight, it is really my soul and not my body which lifts it. . . . This motive power is however, in itself, an independent thing, and exists as such, whether the mechanism, through which and upon which it acts, be disarranged or not; and even the destruction of the latter does not affect the former. The soul of man is the motive power, the real entity; its present development depends upon the condition of physical organism, but not its existence. . . . The soul, by inherent energy, triumphs over the decaying structure which it inhabits, and only seems to need a better mechanism, to achieve nobler works than it ever did before. . . . It is this spiritual organism, which sees and hears and feels, which suffers and enjoys, which thinks and wills and executes: which is in short, the real man. As perfect a picture may be formed upon the retina of the eye after death as before; as complete a vibration produced upon the drum of the ear; but nothing is seen or heard because the man has gone."

Ques. If the soul can hear without material eyes and ears, why do we have them? If it can feel without the nervous system, what need of having one?

Another writer in one of the religious journals says, that the brain is to the man, what the key-board is to the organist. The man is said to be seated in the brain and plays upon its various organs, like the one who plays upon the organ.

Ques. Did we ever think of calling the organ, the man? Do we name it James, Thomas or Henry, and then address it as an intelligent being?

Again we are told,—

"The soul lives in the body just as a man lives in a house. When the house is carried away by a flood, or burned up, or it becomes old and falls to pieces, or anything else happens so that the man cannot live in it any longer, he chooses a house somewhere else and goes to live in it. So your soul must move away at some time and leave the body."

We will now look at the definition or description of the soul, or man, as given by popular writers, and then we may be prepared to examine the Bible on this important subject. The popular theory is summed up thus:

1. "That man while on the earth, has a perfectly organized body."

2. "That besides his body, man has also a rational soul."

3. "That this soul is immaterial, uncompounded, indivisible, indissoluble, indestructible, intangible, spiritual, simple is not extended, without exterior or interior surface, and can never come in contact with matter."

4. "That this soul, from its essential nature is immortal, and independent of the body; and therefore, that it can exercise the functions of life, of the understanding, affections and will, without the concurrence of the body, and does indeed perform these functions while the body is mouldering in the dust."

5. "That these souls continue in a state of conscious enjoyment or suffering, between death and the resurrection; the good going to paradise or heaven, where Christ is, and the wicked to hell."

6. "That the resurrection refers only to the body, the soul having never died."

7. "That the wicked as well as the righteous, from the necessity of their own immaterial natures, will live forever."

We wish our inquirer to look over No. 3 again, and see if it is not the best definition of nothing, that he ever read; and yet this is the description of what is said to be the real man!

In our next we purpose to give a Bible answer to the question of our correspondent.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The Lord willing, we propose to hold a general Conference in Boston, at Chapman Hall, Chapman Place, commencing Tuesday evening, Feb. 10th at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

Our brethren and sisters, who attended the conference two years since at the same place, will recollect that it was one of great interest and profit, and that no effort was spared by the church in Boston to make it pleasant for those who come to enjoy that religious feast; and we trust that those who may be pursuaded to come to the one now proposed will not go away disappointed.

The object of the meeting is to make an effort to arouse the Lord's children to greater activity in his vineyard, and to afford mutual strength and comfort to each other. The apostles and primitive christians had such conferences, and were rewarded with rich blessings. We are confident that the time has come when we should make an extra effort to awaken new interest in our fellow men in the great work of preparation for the future world.

Brethren and sisters, come up to the feast, for we expect special help from the Lord of hosts.

We are anxious to meet once more in conference before our Master calls for an account of our stewardship. We very much need the benefit of a mutual interchange of thought and feeling.

We therefore earnestly entreat our brethren and sisters to make this meeting a subject of special prayer. Let us meet not as sectarians, to advance party interests, but as Christians, united in love, to promote the best good of our fellow men.

The opposer of all righteousness is making most alarming inroads upon the cause of truth, and shall we sleep till he has bound us hand and foot? Shall we flee and faint because our enemy is strong, or shall we like Caleb and Joshua be willing to meet, in the strength of the Lord, all that can come against us? God has committed to our trust, truths which, if faithfully employed, present an impassable barrier against the last-day errors, and the onward march of man's great enemy, and shall we hide them under a bushel? Brethren, arouse for the conflict! The victory is sure. Our King will prevail. Sleeping soldier, awake and gird thine armor!—"Fight the good fight," and soon our waving palms will proclaim the holy triumph upon the hills of glory!

In behalf of the church,

Enduring Unto the End.

EDWIN BURNHAM.

Now comes the trial, dear brethren and sisters, deep, severe, fiery, dreadful—a kind of last edition of martyrdom. Will you endure it? will you stand by the cause? or will you sell your eternal birthright, connected with it, for the gratification of a moment's relief from the cross it imposes? A good soldier shows himself such on the field of battle—in the very heat of the onset. A good sailor shows himself such, on board his tossing vessel, in the midst of the fury of the raging storm. A true friend stands by the object of his love in the time of contempt, scorn, reproach, and adversity. Shame on the man or woman that will abandon the most important, the dearest of all questions because of suffering and trial. Look at that father—does he abandon the child of his love because of pain, of labor, of suffering of any kind? and is not the great, the solemn, the awful question of the fiery revelation of the Son of God from heaven, to judge the human race, of more importance than the lives of a thousand children?—Will a man abandon the effort to reach a happy and welcome home, when he has been long absent from such a home, merely because it costs him labor and suffering to get there? Never. He will endure what is equivalent to death itself, cheerfully, for such an object; and is not a home in the ever glorious kingdom of God, with angels, and holy beings—a home free from death, from all that afflicts and annoys, of more importance to be gained than a short lived home on this sin-cursed and groaning earth? What examples of endurance do we have on record for our consideration! Noah endured an hundred and twenty years at least. And against what odds did he endure! A world on one hand, combined with hell, and on the other, a single man,—but he was helped by a mighty God! See, in the case of Enoch, a man, in the midst of all corruption of his times, year after year, for three hundred years, walking steadfastly with his God. See, in the case of Abraham, a man in the morning of life leaving home, friends, connections, and objects endeared to his sympathies, and moving from place to place, among strangers, and sometimes enemies, unsettled and uncertain in matters of this life, a pilgrim, till the years of hoary age, and yet he was the friend of God. We have but a very few years of pilgrimage to endure, and that too in the midst of some, at least, of like holy faith.

Nay, let us thank and praise God that we are permitted to endure a few years of trial for His name. Our trial is not the trial of those who dwelt in "dens and caves of the earth," and were clad in the skins of sheep and goats.

We do not pour out our blood as the rivers, and ride on the fiery wheels of torment, as millions have done before us.—Come, let us eternally fix our minds—WE WILL INHERIT THE KINGDOM OF GOD!

Ordination.

At a meeting of the Church of God at Willing, N. Y., Jan. 11, 1857, according to previous arrangement and appointment, our beloved brother, Wm. H. Rogers, was ordained to the work of the Ministry of the Gospel of Christ, with the Bible for his creed, and God for his guide.

We think the cause of truth is advancing here, and the prospect looks cheering.

Be Gentle.

Yes, not quite so rough and boisterous; don't you know that there is some delicate human crockery about you? You may break more in a minute than you can mend in a month. You may have befooled yourself into the idea, that your harshness is a certain sign of greatness, but there you are quite mistaken. The truest-tempered blades have the smoothest edges, and the razor that has an edge like a handsaw is good for nothing but pulling hair.

Your roughness is no sign of superior courage, bravery, or independence. The waves fret, and foam, and howl, but the mighty rock stands still and keeps very quiet. Little men may be savage; great ones are kind.

Beneath your "dignity" is it to be gentle and careful of others' feelings? Well, really, your dignity is equal to that of the jackass, who, when he danced among the chickens, said, "Let everybody look out for his own legs." You see you have illustrious compeers in your course and impetuous purposes. You want to be a whirlwind do you? Well, go it, but mind one thing, while a breeze is a blessing, a whirlwind may be a curse. Dew-drops bless the little flowers and cause all nature to seem brighter, but a hail storm pelts everything down into heaps. "Melt up some of your hail-stones and give it to us in rain-drops" say the little pleading plants.

Be gentle, you teachers and preachers,—we like the sincere milk of the word, but we don't want it curdled by your cross looks, neither do we want it rammed down our necks in the shape of icicles, or flung in frozen chunks at our poor devoted heads;—hand it out sweet and warm, and in an eatable and drinkable condition, and we'll let you see how much we like it.

Be gentle. Jesus was gentle, as he carried his weak lambs in his arms. Paul was gentle when he conducted himself as a nurse among little children. David was gentle when he behaved and quieted himself as a weaned child. John was gentle, and he said—"Love one another." Be gentle then, I say, for one cup of the pure waters of Christian gentleness is worth all the puffing, frothy bombast ever generated in your big-feeling self. Come, let's be gentle; we'll try, won't we? H. L. H.

Tower of Babel.

We notice an interesting article in the Boston Traveller, from their Syrian correspondent, in which it is stated that Mr. Place, the French Consul in Mosul, who, some two years since, made important discoveries in ancient Nineveh, has now probably found the wonderful tower of Babel. The correspondent says:—

The village of Arbela, so famous in history for the decisive battle fought near it by Darius and Alexander, is only a few days' journey from Mosul, to which Mr. Place, wearied with the monotonous wonders of Nineveh, set off with his accustomed enthusiasm in search of new discoveries, in a region celebrated in classical history. On his way an incident occurred, which proves to what a degree the statements of history respecting the locality are the simple truth. The escort of Mr. Place dismounted when they reached the field of Arbela, following the example of the Consul, who wished to study the battle-field; and this he was obliged to do standing, as Turkish etiquette permits no one to remain seated in his saddle. Soon, however, he mounted again, in order to scour the plain, and the escort did the same, except a single Turk of enormous proportions, who followed on foot, puffing and bathed in sweat. Mr. Place, pitying him for his sad plight, asked him if he did this because he preferred walking to riding.

"By no means," replied the Turk; "but I am unable to remount my horse, because I need the help of a stone in order to regain my stirrup, and who can find a single stone in all the plain of Gingarnella?"

Now it is well known that Darius employed 300,000 men for many days in levelling this plain and in breaking whatever would interpose an obstacle to his cavalry and chariots of war. In the centre of the old battle-field of Arbela rises a hill of colossal dimensions, whose object the party vainly conjectured, thinking it might be a tomb, or a triumphal monument, or more likely both. Unfortunately they had not time to examine it, nor the appliances necessary for exploring it.

Passing on, Mr. Place and his party at length discovered what they believed to be nothing less than the veritable remains of the Tower of Babel—the wonder of wonders, and the grandest spectacle which the eyes of men can contemplate in this age of the world. This proud tower, which was built in defiance of Heaven, and aimed to pierce the very skies, has lost in the course of ages its cloud-reaching elevation. Six of its eight stories have fallen and crumbled into dust; but the two which remain are so high that they may be seen for fifty or sixty miles around. The base of the tower is quadrangular, and each side about six hundred feet long. The tower is made of bricks of the purest clay and of a white color, which is a little shaded with a yellow tint.

Under a clear sun, and as a whole, this ancient monument of human skill and daring presents a fine blending of colors which sets the painter's pallet at defiance. Before being baked, the bricks had been covered with characters traced with the accuracy of the hand of a writing-master. Near the top of the letters the straight strokes were adorned with flourishes resembling the heads of nails. All was neat, regular and severe; and, indeed, those who saw these specimens of ancient caligraphy affirm that the fathers of the human race wrote a better hand than their children.

Another curious fact arrested the attention of the exploring party. The sacred record runs thus: "And it came to pass as they journeyed from the East that they found a plain in the valley of Shinar, and they dwelt there. And they said one to another—Go to, let us make brick, and burn them thoroughly; and they had brick for stone, (or instead of stone) and slime had they for mortar." Modern skeptics may ask: Where could these builders obtain all this bitumen? for a vast quantity must have been demanded to meet the wants of so many trowels. It is a singular coincidence that Mr. Place discovered a fountain at a small distance from the tower, whose waters flow in such abundance as almost to form a river. The stream would force its way into a river in the vicinity, did not the people hasten to set the bituminous flood on fire, when they tranquilly wait till the fire is extinguished for the want of aliment. Thus the old fountain still pours out inexhaustible quantities of bitumen, or slime, which supplied these old builders in their vast enterprise. Bitumen also adds to the durability of bricks, as well as firmly consolidates them in masonry. Could anything be added to the marvel of the coincidence? Thus travels and expeditions in Assyria become Biblical corollaries, and new proofs are never wanting of old truths.

Among the interesting discoveries of Mr. Place were certain inscriptions on fillets of gold, silver and copper, and also upon a metal now unknown, and which has somewhat of the appearance of ivory. It has been submitted to the experiments of an intelligent metallurgist, and its qualities will soon be ascertained.

Some very curious photographs, taken by the expedition, completed their labors, one of which was of the ruins of the palace of the famous Queen Semiramis. This ancient monument, situated on the height of a mountain raised by the hands of men, overlooks the awful solitudes which surround Lake Van—a body of water six or seven times larger than Lake Geneva.

It is not strange that a gentleman who had seen and handled some of the articles brought from the tower of Babel by Mr. Place, should be excited as he says he was: "In relation to archæological news I take the liberty to inform you that I have just seen the oldest things of the old world. Indeed, I do not know that I should be more surprised by seeing the fragments of the ark itself. Fancy to yourself that I have just touched, and held in my hand, and turned and turned again in every way, a little morceau of the Tower of Babel! This trinket of moulded clay, illustrated and baked by the sons of Noah, has passed from the plain of Shinar to the chapel of St. Mesmin, and is the fruit of the strokes of the hammer in the hand of Mr. Place, our learned and enterprising Consul, to whom I am indebted for a sight of this precious little relic, about which cluster so many grand souvenirs."

I will only add, that if your readers wish to obtain a distinct and accurate idea of the region referred to, in which lies the battle-field of Arbela, and the plain of Shinar, they should open their Atlas and survey the country between Mosul on the Tigris, and Lake Van, southeast of Mount Ararat. It was very natural that the sons of Noah, descending from Ararat, should commence their agricultural labors in the fertile and well watered plain of Shinar, lying to the east, where in terrible remembrance of the flood they vainly and impiously attempted a work which should protect them from the recurrence of the disaster.

Good Nature.

BY J. A. FERRIS.

"Then gently scan your brother man,
Still gentler, sister woman;
Though they may go a little wrong,
To step aside is human."---Burns.

To be sure it would be delightful to live in a world where all the inhabitants were holy and just to our taste, and where we ourselves were the perfect, amiable creatures we would like our associates to be. But since this delectable state of society is not to be looked for in this life, let us try to make up what is wanting, both to ourselves and others, by our own good nature; remembering, that many things which look unlovely to us, are not at all so in the eyes of our Heavenly Father, and that were we possessed of the divine faculty to look upon the heart, instead of the outward appearance, many of our present likes and dislikes would be entirely reversed. For instance, there is Mrs. A.—you have no doubt of her piety towards God, or her affection for yourself; and yet you complain that her person and manners are so very disagreeable, that you can hardly tolerate her. If she only had the delicacy of feeling to be conscious of her defects, and keep at an endurable distance, but she is so caressingly affectionate, that you are obliged to treat her with coldness, in order to get rid of the infliction. And then she will appear so nervously sensitive about it, that her society is really an annoyance. Then, there is Miss B.—I have no doubt but she is sincerely penitent, and truly seeking the Lord, and yet I cannot forget what I have been told of her. But she attaches herself to me so confidingly, that I dare not treat her with coldness for fear she may be discouraged. If she would only be content with asking my counsel and prayers, and not expect a kiss every time we meet! How I wish no one had ever informed me of her past misdemeanors; then she would have been quite agreeable, but now these things will rise up before my mind and excite in me a feeling of repugnance.

But there is Miss C.—She is not pious—never seems to think of God, or of her duty to him; in short, I don't suppose the idea of duty ever enters her thoughts, that is, to make it the regulating principle of her life. She follows her own impulses—loves self, and gratifies self. I presume she never practiced a real voluntary act of self-denial in her life. And yet there is something so irresistibly pleasing in her address, that we love her involuntarily. Well, there's no harm in admiring a smooth and delicately veined scale of chaff, provided our tastes are so regulated that we do not undervalue the outwardly defective grain of wheat, after satisfying ourselves that the germ is sound; because, when once sown, it will spring up and bear fruit as soon as the grain most perfectly organized.

The Lord help us to be good-natured, and to overcome all unnecessary fastidiness.

For the Crisis.

Who would not be a Christian?

How endearing the name to the people of God, and the relation they sustain to the Lamb slain for the redemption of man, and to all the holy Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, and all the good that have ever lived from righteous Abel to the present hour. "Heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ," to a glorious and incorruptible inheritance, where all blights of sin are forever wiped away. The cold chills of death are never felt---the sorrows of bereavement are forever passed---the trials of earth over,—and the consummation of their hope at last come! Inheritors of a kingdom---a renovated earth, associated with the innumerable, immortal, blood-bought company of God's own divine selection, of every age and from every clime—the redeemed of the Lord, the holy of earth, the white-robed multitude, the elite of all nations. The once tempted, despised, self-sacrificing, but overcomers of the world, who are now permitted to enter the eternal city! Behold its majestic walls, its magnificent structure, gates of pearl, street of gold—the great metropolis of earth, built by the Holy One—the great I AM—the Architect of worlds!! And all this wealth, honor, and heaven-prepared felicity they are to enjoy commensurate with the existence of the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity."

Who, then, would not be a christian, and share in the blessings of the world to come? O how unlike this present, wicked, sickly, death-doomed world! Who would not bear the reproach of a christian here for the honor there? Who would not face the storms of earth for the celestial joys of that Eden-home? Who would not be a warrior here and conquer there?

If we would seek honor here, where can it be found? Shall we go to the battle field where "every battle of the warrior is with confused noise and garments rolled in blood?" Shall we listen to the roar of cannon, the clash of arms, and then behold thousands of our fellow beings weltering in their own blood, hear the curses of the wounded, the groans of the dying, witness the orphan's tears, the pallid cheek and wasted frame of the sorrow-stricken and widowed heart—all this misery sorrow and death, to sustain the honor of a judgment-bound world? Shall we seek riches hoping for honor here? they are soon left for others, and we are carried lifeless to the cold and silent grave, where naught can awake us from our slumbers but the trump of God? Shall we desire the honor of kings here? If obtained, soon the king of terrors upon the pale horse strikes the fatal blow and we fall prostrate at the conqueror's feet. Do we seek the friendship of the world? it is is but an empty name, and an enemy to God.

The friendship of true friends we love, but alas! death calls suddenly, and they are summoned away to the cold embrace of death, and we are left alone to shed the bitter tear and consign them to the tomb. O earth! what art thou but one vast theatre filled with the wickedness of man—the sorrows of the afflicted—the tears of bereavement—the groans of the dying, and the bones of the dead; with here and there a christian warrior having on the armor of God, possessing intrepidity of character, braving the wickedness of this sinful world with this motto inscribed on his noble brow,—perseverance to the end! onward to battle! victory in the name of the Lord!

There is something grand and majestic in the thought of being a warrior for God—tossed on the ocean of temptation—patiently bearing the storms of persecution with a faith that says, "we shall triumph at last, in the kingdom of God."

But, again, I ask, who would not be a a christian at this eleventh hour! Standing as we are on the eve of the judgment—a moment, and all is over---a few days more and a world lost!

"The righteous saved the wicked damned,
And God's eternal government approved."

Up then, christian soldier, gird thyself, fight manfully this last battle, and the prize is won! S. G. Mathewson.

For the Crisis.

Fear Not!

Why should you fear? Who should you fear? What should you fear? Are there many furious foes? Are there dangers on the right and the left? Are your ways dark and slippery? Is your heart polluted by the poison of unbelief? Is your faith weak and faltering? Fear not.

O, trust in the living God who na made heaven and earth. Cast thy burden upon the Lord and he shall sustain thee, he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved. He shall deliver thee in six troubles, and shall not forsake thee in the seventh. He shall cover thee with his wings and under his feathers shalt thou trust; his truth shall be thy shield and buckler. He is mightier than the noise of many waters. His ways are wondrous and hidden, but his purposes shall ultimate in the creature's good and in the Creator's glory.

His love forbids my anxiety,—his promises sweep away my doubts. O, my doubting, trembling heart, lean upon the everlasting arm; cast all thy care upon Him who hath borne thy griefs and carried all thy woes. My soul, hope thou in God trust in him; believe his promises. Fear not!

From Sr. A. Crabtree.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—While many of you on this beautiful Sabbath morning meet together to worship God, I am deprived of that privilege, and so I seat myself to address you through the medium of the Crisis.

For some time past I have been away from the society of those who are looking for the return of the Savior, and I often feel lonely and sorrowful. O, I shall be glad when we meet in the earth renewed, to part no more, for here

"I walk alone and oft am sad, Oft falls the briny tear;"

but in that world to come there will be no lonely pilgrims, no farewell words, and no parting hands given, but we shall be with Jesus to part no more forever.

I prize the Crisis very highly, now I am separated from the brethren and sisters. It seems like hearing from home to read the soul-cheering communications that weekly fill its columns; and though the most of those who write are strangers to me, I love to think that if faithful to God, I shall one day meet them in that better land, even Paradise restored. Dear Brn. and Srs., be faithful, and do not, in this perilous time, yield in any measure to the suggestions of the enemy. There are temptations thrown around us on every hand to lead us away from the path of truth, and only those who watch and pray will escape that snare that is coming on the earth. We are going home; soon these scenes of trouble and anxiety will be ended, and we shall walk the golden streets to the new Jerusalem, and ever be with Christ, in that city, beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth.

Oftentimes, amid the cares and perplexities of life, when almost ready to give up in despair, has the thought of a home in heaven nerved me on to duty, to strive to do my Master's will while I stay here, knowing that I shall soon exchange the cross for the crown, and be rewarded with all God's faithful children. I believe that it is no vain thing to serve God, and I would that all men would come to Him and be saved, for there has been a fountain opened for sinners in which all may be cleansed; were it not so I should have no hope, but now my hope is all in Christ, and I can say with the poet—

"I the chief of sinners am,
But Jesus died for me."

We are doing our work for eternity, and my prayer is, that all may realize the value of the passing moments. Soon the day of mercy will be over, and the writer and reader of these lines, will have their final state fixed, either with the saved or lost.

"He that winneth souls is wise," the Word of God says, and may we all seek for that wisdom that will enable us to lead precious souls to Christ. Thousands are going down the broad road to ruin; and shall they see those who profess to believe in the fearful retribution of the wicked spoken of in God's word, utterly regardless of their spiritual welfare? God forbid. The church must and will shine as a light in the world. May God help us to labor more faithfully for the salvation of sinners. O for more of the mind that was in Christ, who left all the glory with the Father, to suffer and die, that a way might be opened for those who would come to Him and be saved.

Dear brothers and sisters, let us thank God for the mediations of the Son. Be faithful, and soon we shall reign with Him who died for us. Your sister, striving to be found accepted of God,

AMELIA CRABTREE.

We prove the strength of our affection for persons, by being willing to participate in their sufferings as well as joys.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. H. Hodgdon.

BRO. GRANT:—Though still a pilgrim and a stranger away from home, yet I am striving, by the help of grace, to press my way onward to the promised land.

I thank my heavenly Father that I ever heard the sound of a soon coming judgment, and that my heart was inclined to give heed to it, and seek a shelter from the gathering storm before it should burst upon the world; otherwise, I should have loved this sin-cursed earth, sought its pleasures, and shared its destruction.

When the sound of the Lord's coming in '54 fell on my ear, like Peter I was following afar off; suddenly I was aroused to look into my own heart, and see if I was ready to meet Him. I saw that I was not, and could not rest until I had renewed my covenant, and made an entire consecration of my heart to that God before whom I must soon stand in judgment, and found in Him a hiding-place. Then I could listen with joy to the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand: and a heavenly peace such as I had never known before, filled my soul at times, in view of what I expected was so soon to be realized by the little flock.

But as time passed on, like many others I was sadly disappointed; yet, I felt that though human deductions had failed, the promise—"I will come again"—was still sure, and I could rely on it without fear; and glory to God, I expect if faithful we shall soon realize its fulfillment in the appearance of our King to the joy of His people, and the shame and confusion of His enemies.

O blessed day! My heart looks forward with joyful anticipation, with an earnest longing for the ushering in of that glorious day, of which prophets and apostles have spoken,—

"When Christ shall reign o'er all the earth,
And give the promised rest,"

to His weary people who have long been waiting for redemption; when the millions who have fallen by death's relentless hand shall be released from their long captivity, awakened by that voice which will shake the heavens and earth, and come forth to life and immortality in the earth renewed.

Brethren and sisters, we are almost there. O let us be watchful and prayerful, and be faithful to our heavenly Leader: for a little while longer, and we shall enter the promised land.

From your unworthy sister,

H. H. HODGDON.

Obituary.

Fell asleep, Dec. 9th, 1856, Gertrude W., youngest daughter of Bro. and Sr. Eggleston, of Willing, N. Y., after a short illness of typhoid fever, aged 2 years, 8 months.

'Trudie was a dear, lovely child—the household treasure. But while fond parents, brothers and sisters, heard the delightful echo of her harmless, childish mirth, she was rudely smitten by a withering blast of earth, and painfully yet hopefully, they saw her die and sink to the blessed rest of sleep in Jesus till the increasing perils and woes of these latter times shall pass over, and usher in the resurrection morning, when the divine nature will be imparted to all who are in Christ, both those whom personal sin has never separated from Him, as well as those who by faith, repentance and immersion into Him have been "converted and become as little children."

Though severely tried with sickness and the loss of this loved one, this dear family's cup of affliction was not yet full. In that circle of stricken friends at Gertrude's funeral sat one affectionate sister with others deeply mourning, yet consoled by an intelligent Christian faith in the "one hope," which was to be the solace of a large number of mourning friends at her own burial within the space of three brief weeks! For MARY E. EGGLESTON died, Dec. 26, 1856, aged 16 years, of typhoid fever.

When in her 10th year, through proper parental instruction, Mary embraced the Savior, and manifesting remarkable religious intelligence and interest, was baptized, thus becoming a member of the church of God in this place; in which she continued a meek, interesting and exemplary Christian till her death.

"That life is long which answers life's great end."

In her brief day of life Mary had chosen the good part which should never be taken from her; laid up a treasure in heaven, and gained the love and esteem of all who knew her. Her remembered example will be in the minds of all, especially of a large circle of young friends, a substantial praise of that Biblical religion which made her life so lovely and her death so hopeful. May we emulate her virtues, following her as she followed Christ. It is true—Mary's gone. But, praise the Lord, she sleeps in Jesus under God's covenant of a resurrection to life everlasting. Soon, if faithful, we shall greet her again in endless life; for that sown in weakness must be raised in power—that sown in corruption must be raised in incorruption—at the last trump!

Let it here be written for the truth's sake, that this stricken family obedient to the faith once delivered to the saints, comfort themselves, not with the heathenish notion that departed loved ones are now cherubic immaterialities somewhere flitting ghostily in boundless space; but with the well-grounded "hope of the resurrection" at the coming of the great Life Giver! not with fabulous words of Platonic philosophy orthodoxically trimmed; but with the unfailing assurances of the gospel of Christ; such as "these words" of Paul, 1 Thess. 4: 13–18—which Mary herself dearly loved and trusted in, and from which a discourse was preached at her funeral. The Christian resignation and faith manifested by Bro. and Sr. E. under their sore afflictions and bereavements is worthy of all emulation, and has taught the writer in his youth a lesson of the sustaining power of the gospel which he will never forget. May grace from above be given to their surviving children, leading them on to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord, waiting for the glorious advent of Him who is the resurrection and the life.

WM. H. ROGERS.

Willing, N. Y., Jan. 18, 1856.

Fell asleep, in Portland, Me., on the morning of the 13th inst., Richard Waldron, aged 75 years.

The subject of this notice (my father,) suffered with a lingering disease of the heart for many years, the nature of which has never been satisfactorily understood. The last two weeks of his life he was confined to his bed. He died rejoicing in the hope of salvation, and now sleeps in Jesus, awaiting the sounding of the last trump, which will awaken the saints to eternal life. Many have been my afflictions through life, but I have always found the Lord a present help in time of trouble May we all be prepared for the future, and at last enter that land of rest which remaineth for the children of God.

THE CHRISTIAN.

VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

Is the breast of the christian all cheerless?
Is his pathway all dreary and lone?
Is he joyless, and hopeless, and friendless?
Ah no—he is heir to a throne.

On the earth he may toil as a bondman,—
His brave heart is never enslaved;
He is free from sin's terrible thraldom,
And fears not the lash or the grave.

Bright links in the chain of the bondman
Are twined, and the hot briny tear
Grows diamond and gem, in the sun-beam
Of love from his Father most dear.

There is melody sad in his wailing,
Exquisitely touching and sweet;
'Tis an answering echo from heaven,
As suf'ring and sympathy meet.

Though his home may be the mad ocean,
'Mid peril, and danger, and storm;
He trusts in his God in commotion;—
His anchor holds steady and firm.

Death's darts may be hurled at the christian,—
With calmness he meets the last test;
His faith in a bright resurrection,
Brings sunshine and joy to his breast.

The fair bud that has slept in his bosom,
And nestled so close to his breast;
(When called to resign the sweet blossom,)
Is laid down in hope to its rest.

He may weep o'er the grave of the loved one,
That suffered its brief hour of pain;
But knows when the sepulchre's open,
'Twill bloom in bright Eden again.

Domestic Summary.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

ARRIVAL OF THE GEORGE LAW.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13. Steamer George Law arrived this morning, from Aspinwall, bringing California dates of Dec. 20.

The Supreme Court of California has declared the entire State debt unconstitutional, excepting $300,000, and recommends the adoption of the debt by the Legislature and that the question of repudiation be submitted to the people. No transfer of stock has been made since the decision.

The people are opposed to repudiation, and meetings have been called in various parts of the State, to give expression to the public opinion. At a meeting held in San Francisco, resolutions were passed, pledging the redemption of the debt by the people. The amount is over $3,000,000.

FROM NICARAGUA.

Advices from San Juan del Norte are to Dec. 22. No tidings had been received of Walker for some days previously.

A letter from Granada of Dec. 1, states that the Church of Gaudaloupe was still held by 200 Yankees, who refused to surrender at the summons of Gen. Bloss.

They were to be attacked immediately, after which the bulk of the allied army would proceed to operate with Gen. Canas against San Juan and Virgin Bay.

The loss of the fillibusters since Nov. 24, was stated at 300; that of the allies small.

Private letters state that the Indians at Ometere, had risen against Walker, and killed 15 fillibusters.

Walker, with 150 men, had attempted to take Granada, but was repulsed.

The two hundred men hemmed in at the Church of Gaudaloupe, Granada, were destitute of water, and were subsisting upon their horses. They, nevertheless, obstinately refused quarter offered them by Belboso.

LATER.

Advices are received from Rivas to Dec. 5. Walker had arrived within one league from Rivas, and was preparing to attack Gen. Canas, who had 600 men well supplied with provisions and munitions.

A few skirmishes had taken place between the advanced guard.

Walker's men are said to be badly off, with scarcely any thing to eat, and dying daily from dysentery.

IMPORTANT FROM KANSAS.

Assembling of the Free State Legislature—Arrest of Seven Members by U. S. Authority.

TOPEKA, Kansas, Jan. 7.

The State Legislature opened yesterday, and, after a short session, adjourned until to-day, as neither Gov. Robinson nor Lieut. Gov. Roberts have been here.

Gov. Robinson has resigned. Lieut. Gov. Roberts is in the Territory, but has failed to attend. Much dissatisfaction prevails in consequence.

Yesterday a U. S. Deputy Marshall, under a writ from Judge Cato, arrested seven members of the State Legislature. The writ has upwards of thirty names attached to it. More arrests will probably be made. This is another effort to kill the Free State movement.

Judge Curtis, of the Senate, will deliver a message, as acting Governor, to-day,

There is an almost unanimous determination that the Legislature shall go on with its work. It is doubtful whether they will be able to do so.

Foreign News.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMERICA.

The News from China Confirmed—The Americans Engaged in Hostilities Against the Chinese.

HALIFAX, Jan. 19.

The Royal Mail Steamship America, Capt. Ryrie, from Liverpool, Saturday, Jan. 3, arrived at this port at 5.15 P. M. yesterday.

ASIA.

Details of the Indian mails are at hand. Bombay dates are Dec. 3, and Hong Kong Nov. 15.

No news had reached India from the Persian expedition, but the 78th Highlanders, and other reinforcements were to be forwarded.

A letter in the Indian papers attracts attention, describing Bushire, which, the writer thinks, can offer no defence, but the further advance of the British force towards Shiraz would be impossible, the only road being through three mountain passes, not fifteen feet wide, and impracticable for the passage of artillery. The total distance is only 143 miles.

Dost Mahommed is very busy with warlike movements, but takes the opportunity of asking the British to restore Peshawer to him and his family.

Details of China news confirm the recent telegraphic despatches, viz.:—That on the 8th of Oct., the Chinese having taken twelve Chinese seamen from a coaster under the British flag, were called on by the British Consul for reparation. They personally insulted the British Consul, who called in the assistance of Admiral Seymour. The Admiral brought the British squadron, viz.: Calcutta, — guns; Sybil, 44; Nankin, 50; Comus, 14; steamers Niger, 14; Executioner, 14; Barracouta, 6; Sampson, 6; Hornet, 17; Carremadle, 3.

The Admiral demanded that the "Yeh," the Chinese Viceroy should apologise and salute the British flag. The Viceroy refused. Therefore, Oct. 24th, a fire was opened on all the forts, and all were captured by the seamen and marines, except one, abreast of which, twenty-three war junks were anchored.

The junks were afterwards engaged and destroyed by the Barracouta.

Some of the forts were burned, and others were occupied by detachments of the Royal Artillery.

One hundred and seventy-one guns were spiked.

Some days elapsed, but the viceroy would not apologize. He however sent to the Admiral twelve prisoners purporting to be the seamen taken from the ship, but they not being the same men, the Encounter on the 27th opened fire on the city walls and Viceroy's palace, the Royal Artillery co-operating from the captured forts, while the Barracouta steamed up a branch of the river and threw shell into the forts on the heights.

On the 29th, the city wall was breached, and stormed by marines and sailors under Com. Elliott.

The Viceroy's palace was also carried, but the British retired at nightfall.

Nov. 3d and 4th, the old "Cuy" was shelled, and on the 6th, the Barracouta destroyed the junks above mentioned, receiving eighty shots in her hull and rigging.

On the 12th, the Bogue forts, at the entrance of Canton river, were taken.

On the 15th, the Chinese had remanned the barren forts, and fired into the mail steamer Canton on her way down.

The British loss in the above operations, was trifling.

The British and American ladies were removed from Canton, and sent Oct. 23d, with the treasure, to Hong Kong.

A detachment of marines, from the U. S. ship Portsmouth, assisted in guarding the factories.

The accounts of the Americans' proceedings are not full. It is, however, announced that the American steamer was fired into by one of the Chinese forts in Macao passage, whereupon the U. S. frigate Portsmouth immediately proceeded to destroy it, and also notified to the Chinese authorities that, unless instant reparation was made for the insult offered to the flag, hostile operations would be commenced.

The San Jancinto, after landing Dr. Parker at Macao, Nov. 11, returned to Wampoa, and is anchored off French Island, with the Portsmouth and Levant.

The British Consul Parkes, under date of Nov. 15, officially informs the European community that the Admiral does not deem it expedient to say what further measures he will adopt, but sees no immediate prospect of restoration of quiet.

The mail steamer, when leaving, met a French frigate approaching the scene.

THE SWISS DIFFICULTY.

Hopes of peace now preponderate, but warlike preparations continue with vigor.

It is said a French Army of 60,000, under General Canrobert, will be assembled on the eastern frontier to meet any emergency.

Berlin reports, probably exaggerations, indeed assert that the French will actually occupy Neufchatel and Geneva.

The Pays de Vaud also adds, with some probability, that France and Austria are united in intention to seize the opportunity of the imbroglio to wring from Switzerland a concession that her territory shall be no longer a harbor for political refugees.

The 2d of January was the day specified for the march of the Prussians against Switzerland, but it is postponed till the 5th, and some say till the 15th or later.

The Swiss will put the prisoners on trial on or about the 15th.

THE CONGRESS AT PARIS.

The Plenipotentiaries of the Powers which signed the Treaty of Peace, met at Paris on Wednesday noon, at the Hotel of Foreign Affairs.

A PRAYER.

R. L. H.

God of the earth, before whose throne
A guilty world ere long must stand,
Whose eyes shall wait on thee alone,
Whose hopes shall rest upon thine hand.

God of the earth which soon shall be
A molten sea before thy face,—
Now may we refuge find in thee,
Then triumph in thy wondrous grace.

God of all flesh, who in thy hands,
Holdeth all souls and all their powers,
O grant us grace, and when we stand
Before thy throne, may life be ours.

God of salvation, hear our cry!
O show thy power, thy love, thy grace:
And when thou bring'st salvation nigh,
Give us with all thy saints a place.

HAST THOU NO PRAYER?

C. H. FULLER.

Hast thou no prayer, when blessings fair
So richly rare,
Are thine to share?
Hath life so dear, 'mid gladsome cheer,
No ill to fear,
Still lurking near?

Shall joyful hours fore'er be ours,
And sweetest flowers
Adorn our bowers?
Shall grief away, still every day,
Will we delay
To God to pray?

Should we be dumb, while praises come
In gentlest hum,
From nature's tongue;
While o'er the ground, and all around
Glad echoes bound
In thankful sound?

Dear brother, mine, are trials thine?
Then thou st a mine
Of precious kind.
From chast'ning springs most joyous things,
And ever clings
The peace it brings.

'Tis love revealed to servants sealed,
Then joyful yield—
Of sin be healed;
And patient plod this sin-cursed sod,
And praise thy God,
E'en for the rod.
While here we roam
Let sorrows come, like surging foam,—
We'll soon be home!

Probation and its Dicipline.

BY L. PLUMBER.

Among the various ways that God has taken to show his mercy to us aside from the gift of his own son, none stands out more prominently than the shortness of the time allotted to us for probation. The man of the world who, in all his plans and purposes, measures his existence by the length of his natural life may see a long period before him in his three-score years and ten, but the man who has begun to count time as God counts it, will soon discover that like the flower of the field, so he flourisheth. In the morning it groweth up, and in the evening it withereth. "My days are like the shadow that declineth," are the words of contemplative David, and Job says of them, that they flee as a shadow and continue not. Paul speaks of light afflictions which continue but for a moment, and Peter compares it to grass that withereth and is gone. Yet so brief a period as that is all that God in his mercy uses for our probation and trial. But in that brief period our destiny for eternity is settled. Are we called to endure affliction and sorrow? An eternal weight of glory, where tears are wiped from all faces, is presented as ours a little in the future, if we in calm submission commit all to God. Are we houseless, and homeless? The blessed assurance—"I will not leave you orphans"—"In my Father's house are many mansions." "I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself,"—is sufficient to console every confiding heart who has learned that this is not our rest, but we seek one to come. Thus our very sorrows help make up the needed character and fit us for probation's close. So it is of but little consequence what our condition or circumstances are here, if in the end we have eternal life. With this view of the subject the apostle Paul exhorts his brethren in bonds, not to be mindful of their condition here. "Art thou called being a servant? care not for it; . . . . for he that is called in the Lord being a servant is the Lord's free man."

In probation we are subjected to tests and proofs, so that our real character may be developed. We have opportunity to learn "how to be abased, and how to abound; how to be full, and how to be hungry; to have an abundance and to suffer need;" and happy are they who can endure all these, through Christ strengthening them. Affliction is one of the most common modes of trying and proving us. The probation of one is closed up by death, which serves as a chastisement and trial to another, who may look upon it as an enemy. Now is temporal death after all, so much to be dreaded and looked upon as an enemy, that the christian would chose life under all circumstances rather than death? Ask the martyrs, whose flesh has consumed away while they endured the tortures of the man of sin.—Ask the aged christian who has reached the time of life when desire fails, and the grasshopper is a burden—Ask the young disciple who has given all for Christ, and whose consecration is so complete that his heart's language is, "ready for the yoke or the altar."—Ask the apostle P ul in the midst of his usefulness, and you find him in a strait betwixt two, not knowing which to choose, life or death; but when his labors were finished and his work all done, we hear him triumphantly exclaim, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand;" the battle is fought, the victory is won, he has overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil, and, henceforth there is laid up for him a crown of righteousness which shall be given him in that day.

It seems to me that as the tired laborer whose day's work is done, welcomes the quiet of the bed-chamber and the repose of the bed, that he may rest and be refreshed for the breaking of another day, so the christian who has finished his work, welcomes the repose of the grave till the morn of eternal day shall break upon him, and bring him in the vigor of eternal youth to enjoy that for which his probation was spent.

But the greatest benefit is derived by the bereaved, who, like Job can say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." To such an one there are passages of scripture, the import of which could never fully be known before, appropriated to them, and by special grace made their own, that often produce more real joy than was ever found in any other part of their discipline. For, "there is a secret in the ways of God with his own children, which none others know, that sweetens all he does." Take for example, the experience of a young woman who lost a father she ardently loved, as related by her to another in like circumstances as a means of comfort. "For sometime after my father's removal, I was strangely withheld from sorrow. A strong hand seemed upon me, that I could not mourn; and this blessing, and this grace, the tempter converted into poison I became distressed because I did not mourn, until I grieved the sustaining Spirit, and two or three times the restraint was removed, and I was permitted to feel such overwhelmning, crushing sorrow as words cannot express. I sunk in terror, and looked to Heaven in thankfulness for that sustaining power, and in earnest prayer for its return Mercifully it was given, and with it I became more calm and thankful than in my brightest days of earthly sunshine."

Thus all things are made to work together for good to them that love God. Thus probation continues, and closes with the promise of eternal life to be given when He who is our life shall appear, if we by patient continuance in well doing seek for it.

Roxbury, Mass.

The Present.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."

Many of us will, undoubtedly, lie down in the grave, at least for a little season; it may be before another year shall have rolled round, aye, or month, or week, or day. Now is the only time of which we have any promise.

For the two last years, I have felt that time is short—"that our days are as an hand's breadth"—that I would at least, do what I could; and this pleasant morning, I would like to go with words of encouragement, to every home, and every heart, where the Crisis may go; yes, more than that, I would go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, telling them Christ died to redeem just such sinners as we are. I feel to be a sinner saved by grace, through faith. Truly, faith grows stronger—my hope grows brighter, as I near the promised rest,

"Where the many mansions be,
As I near the great white throne,
Near the crystal sea."

Brothers and sisters, how is it with you? have you on the wedding garment? are you clothed with the righteousness of Christ? have you the love of God in your hearts? do you feel in your heart to go out after poor perishing sinners, to lead them to the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world? Time is short; therefore, let us be doing with our might whatever our hand findeth to do. How many poor broken-hearted ones there are to be healed; how many bowed down, and discouraged, to be raised up. If freely we have received, let us freely give. Let us seek to imitate the blessed Jesus, who went about doing good. If we love the Lord with all our heart, and our neighbor as ourself, we shall not be idle; whatever the Master saith unto us, that shall we do knowing that we shall reap, if we faint not. How much the Christian has to encourage him to persevere, even unto the end. Crowns of glory, the blessed Jesus will place upon our heads at that day, and not upon ours only, but upon all them that love his appearing. Who does not love the appearing of the Savior, the crowning of all our hopes, the ending of all our fears? His own hand shall wipe tears from off all faces.

Let us be faithful until death, that we may receive a crown of life.

The Lord's Supper.

BRO. GRANT:—I am glad that some of my brethren and sisters are bestirring themselves on this all important subject. I am persuaded that this high-bought privilege has been too much neglected by the church in general. It is high time that we were up and doing. The Master is coming soon. Let us see to it, that his house is set in order. In the first place, we must ascertain where the house is disordered before we can prescribe a remedy, or show that the practice of administering the ordinance now-a-days is based upon assumption, entirely different from that upon which the ordinance was instituted. To comprehend the subject correctly, we must go back to the time when Christ first appointed this commemoration.

The sacrament of the Lord's supper was instituted by Christ, the night before he was crucified. He and His disciples had just partaken of the paschal supper, which reminded them as Jews, of their national deliverance, through the power of Jehovah, from their bondage to the Egyptians, and which was at the same time implicated with the remarkable circumstance that their first-born children were preserved in life, while the destroying angel visited with death every house in Egypt, which had not its doors sprinkled with the blood of the paschal lamb.

After the ceremonies pertaining to the paschal supper had been finished, and in immediate view of his own death which was now close at hand, our Savior gave a morsel of bread and a sip of wine to each of his disciples, with an express direction that they should for the future, from time to time, commemorate his death, by a similar observance. "For," says the Savior, "this bread (mark, unleavened bread) represents my body broken for you, and this wine (not fermented) my blood shed for you for the remission of sins" "This do," says he, "in remembrance of me."

I think we can detect something here that is out of order. Let us see to it, brethren, that we have everything according to the pattern. "A lamb without blemish"—bread without leaven (corruption); wine, the pure blood of the vine not fermented, intoxicating wine; that is not in accordance with the pattern, for the wine drank at the passover, we have reason to suppose, was not fermented. The Jews at the passover were commanded to have no leaven in their houses, and they, from that day to this, understand the term "chomits," in Hebrew, to signify "leaven," "vinegar," and every kind of fermentation. It refers alike to the panary, the vinous, and the acetous fermentation, which refer just as much to fermented liquors as to fermented bread, and therefore at the Passover were exceedingly careful that no fermented wines should be among them. And for fear any of their wines should have undergone any kind of fermentation, the vinous, acetous, or putrefactive, they manufactured a new wine from the "passa uva," or dried grape, which they were assured could not be subject to any kind of fermentation. It is therefore, certain that our blessed Lord did not use a fermented alcoholic liquor at the first sacrament.

And shall we, down in the last moments of time, commemorate our Savior's dying love, by substituting in place of the fruit of the vine, an emblem which is emphatically one of the greatest curses of the earth?

Jesus is coming soon, brethren, to occupy the vacant chair that has been so long empty. What will he say if he should find some of us at his table, partaking of the intoxicating cup to show forth his death, until he should come? We think that he would turn away and say, "I never knew you."

Then let us see to it that we have everything according to the pattern; let us banish from the table of the Lord the intoxicating cup, and substitute in its stead the pure fruit of the vine. At this season of the year we cannot obtain the new fruit; then let us do as did the Jews, and the early Christians, make a wine from "passa uva," or dried grape, by pouring on them boiling water, and then straining; then we can be assured that it will not be subject to any kind of fermentation, believing this to be the kind of wine that our blessed Lord used at the first sacrament. It is in allusion to this wine made from raisins, and which was much inferior to the pure juice of the grape, that our Lord says, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." As though he had said, now we drink "passum" wine, made by pouring water upon dried grapes; then shall we drink virgin wine, the blood of the grape of Paradise—the nectar of heaven. O! it will be joyful when we drink of the nectar of heaven in paradise restored. Jesus himself will serve us. Glory be to God! I long to be there!

DIVINE ORDER.

'Tis first the true, and then the beautiful,
Not first the beautiful, and then the true;
First the wild moor, with rock, and reed, and pool,
Then the gay garden, rich in scent and hue.

'Tis first the good, and then the beautiful,
Not first the beautiful, and then the good;
First the rough seed, sown in the rougher soil,
Then the flower-blossom, or the branching wood.

Not first the glad and then the sorrowful,
But first the sorrowful, and then the glad;
Tears for a day, for earth of tears is full,
Then we forget that we were ever sad.

Not first the bright, and after that the dark,
But first the dark, and after that the bright;
First the thick cloud, and then the rainbow's arch;
First the dark grave, then the resurrection light.

'Tis first the night, a night of storm and war;
Long night of heavy clouds and veiled skies;
Then the fair sparkle of the Morning-star;
That bids the saints awake and dawn arise.

Corespondence.

From Sr. M. M. W.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in the Lord, journeying with me through this vale of tears to a land of rest and immortal beauty, under the peaceful administration of the Son of God—be of good cheer, your sorrows will soon end in the elysian joys of the restitution. The night has been long and painful, but the morning cometh speedily.

Nearly six thousand years have elapsed since the lone captive daughter of Zion launched out upon the rough billows of time, to bare her brow to the sorrows and storms of this life's rolling sea; but blessed be God, she is nearing the shore, where her conflicts will all end. The signs are fulfilled by which we know that the Lord is near, even at the door.

Dear children, when we compare the past movments on time with the word of the Lord, we can say with a cheerful heart, the Lord's spirit has been with us; and now let us hold fast whereunto we have attained, that no man take our crown, for our salvation is now nearer than when we first believed. And to such as are of a fearful heart I would say in the language of inspiration, "be strong, fear not; behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense: he will come and save you." With perfect confidence in His word we have at different times expected that sweet release would be granted us from all our sorrows, trials, and perplexing scenes of this mortal life; it seemed but a step as it were between us and the untold glories of the world to come; but alas! we were destined to be disappointed. O may we learn patience and obedience by the things we suffer, reckoning that the sufferings of this present life are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Our hope is not realized, we are still in the enemy's land, under the blighting robe of the curse, still sighing with a groaning creation, waiting for the "adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." Well, dear children, we will sigh on a little longer, and deliverance will come. The day begins to dawn—the day-star is arising in the hearts of God's dear children, and soon the Son of righteousness will arise with healing in his wings; when he will tread the pathway of heaven to our globe again, to wipe away the curse, to replace the diadem that was removed from Zedekiah, the last king over Israel—restore the kingdom—take the crown, and away the peaceful sceptre of righteousness over the world.

O, dear Brn. and Srs., may all our powers be engaged in striving to gain an entrance there, where death will be swallowed up in victory, when the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces, and the rebuke of his people shall be taken away from off all the earth:

"Fly lingering moments, fly, O fly!
Dear Savior, quickly come.
We long to see thee as thou art,
And reach that blissful home."

My dear fellow pilgrims, worn and weary by the roughness of the way, weep on, sigh on, pray on, hope a little longer; weeping endureth but a night—joy cometh in the morning. "Let not thine heart envy sinners, but be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long; for surely there is an end, and thine expectations shall not be cut off."

Dear sinner, one word to you. "Prepare to meet thy God! You are treading on the last precious moment of probation; the last call of mercy is lingering for you; come to Christ, and be saved in the day when he appeareth.

Your sister waiting for redemption,

Syria and the Holy Land.

It was foretold of Jerusalem, that she should be a city of heaps, and it is literally fulfilled. Immense heaps of rubbish meet you everywhere. The church of England people, when laying the foundation of their church, had to dig through a heap of rubbish fifty feet in depth before they came to the rock. It is peculiarly a city of heaps.

Suppose you enter a large town and go into one house and find nobody there, then into another, and another, and so on, finding all empty. You go to the markets, to the halls, to the churches, and find them quite deserted, nobody to be seen. Will you not be astonished? There is a town in Syria, with its houses, theatre, columns and gate-ways all there, but without a single inhabitant. That town is the wonderful Petra, the capital of Edom. The town is built at the foot of a hill, on a slope rising up from the valley. It was foretold of Edom that she should be made bare, and that no man should live in her. Can the fulfillment of this be all fiction? Can it be mere chance?

We come now to a point still more striking. Where Jericho once stood, the wild Bedouin encamps. It is an excellent site for a town for business, for commerce, for agriculture, and nobody lives there. You have read of the cluster of grapes which the spies which Joshua sent forth, brought from the brook of Eshcol. You talk of your grapes. Why, we would not call them grapes at all in Syria; we would not give them even to pigs! Our grapes are as large as walnuts, very juicy, and grow in great abundance. I remember my brother John and myself bringing home a bunch one day, on our way from school, which was so large that we were obliged to carry it home on a stick between us.—Thousands of pilgrims visit Jericho every year, and it would therefore be an excellent place for a hotel. If a large hotel were built, other houses would necessarily follow, and a town would soon rise up, but notwithstanding this, and all the natural advantages of the place, no hotel is built. Two American farmers went to Syria some years ago to settle. They went over the whole country, and visited Jericho, but finally settled, one of them in Etam, and the other at Jaffa. I asked them why they did not settle in Jericho. They said they did not know. I asked them if it were not a good place for business, if they could not have made money there. O yes, they said, plenty of money could be made there,—excellent stand for business. I asked them again, why they did not settle there. Their answer was, "Sir, we cannot tell you why we did not settle there." But I can tell you, friends. The Lord says, "Cursed is the man that rebuilds Jericho," and no man dares to rebuild it.—Ex.

The Coming and Kingdom of Christ:

BY TWENTY THOUSAND BAPTISTS IN 1660.

[The following confession of faith, signed by John Bunyan and forty other elders, deacons, and brethren, and approved by more than 20,000 others, was presented to King Charles II., in London, 1660. They declared, "We are not only resolved to suffer persecution to the loss of our goods, but also life itself, rather than decline from the same." Where are the Baptists of 1660?]

ART. 22. "We believe that the same Lord Jesus who showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs, (Acts 1: 3,) which was taken up into heaven, (Luke 24: 51,) shall so come in like manner as he was seen to go into heaven, (Acts 1: 9—11):—'And when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory.'—Col. 3: 4. 'For the kingdom is his, and he is the governor among the nations,' (Psa. 22: 28,) and 'king over all the earth,' (Zech. 14: 9,) 'and we shall reign with him on the earth.'—Rev 5: 10. The kingdoms of this world (which men so mightily strive after here to enjoy) shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ.—Rev. 11: 15. 'For all is yours,' (ye that overcome this world,) 'for ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's.'—1 Cor. 3: 22, 23. 'For unto the saints shall be given the kingdom, and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven.'—Dan. 7: 27. Though, alas! now many men be scarce content that the saints should have so much as a being among them, but when Christ shall appear, then shall be their day, then shall be given unto them power over the nations, to rule them with a rod of iron.—Rev. 2: 26, 27. Then shall they receive a crown of life, which no man shall take from them, nor they by any means turned or overturned from: for the oppressor shall be broken in pieces, (Psa. 72: 4,) and their vain rejoicings be turned into mourning and lamentations, as it is written.—Job. 20: 5—7."

"We believe that there will be an order in the resurrection; Christ is the first fruits, and then next, or after, they that are Christ's at his coming; then, or afterward, cometh the end. Concerning the kingdom and reign of our Lord Jesus Christ, as we do believe that he is now in heaven at his Father's right hand, so we do believe, that, at the time appointed of the Father, he shall come again in power and great glory; and that at, or after his coming the second time, he will not only raise the dead, and judge and restore the world, but will also take to himself his kingdom, and will, according to the Scriptures, reign on the throne of his father David, on Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, forever."

"We believe that the kingdom of our Lord will be an universal kingdom, and that in this kingdom the Lord Jesus Christ himself will be alone, visible, supreme Lord and King of the whole earth.

"We believe that as this kingdom will be universal, so it will be also an everlasting kingdom that shall have no end, nor cannot be shaken; in which kingdom the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus shall receive the end of their faith, even the salvation of their souls: where the Lord is they shall be also.

"We believe that the New Jerusalem that shall come down from God out of heaven, when the tabernacle of God shall be with them, and he will dwell among them, will be the metropolitan city of this kingdom, and will be the glorious place of residence of both Christ and his saints forever, and will be so situated as that the kingly palace will be on Mount Zion, the holy hill of David, where his throne was." [Crosby's Hist. of Bapt., vol. ii., App. 85.

"Since you would know by what name I would be distinguished from others, I tell you I would be, and hope I am a Christian; and I choose, if God should count me worthy, to be called a Christian, a believer, or any other such name which is approved by the Holy Ghost. And as for those factious titles of Anabaptists, Independents, Presbyterians, or the like, I conclude that they came neither from Jerusalem nor Antioch; but rather from Hell and Babylon, for they naturally tend to divisions. You may know them by their fruits.—JOHN BUNYAN."—Ancient Landmarks.

WORTH KNOWING.—To ascertain the length of a day or night, at any time of the year, double the time of the sun's rising, which gives the length of the night, and double the time of its setting, which is the length of the day.

This is a little method of "doing the thing" which few of our readers have been aware of.—Christian Herald.

"O! what a weariness it is to live amongst men, and find so few men; and amongst Christians and find so few Christians; so much talk, and so little action; religion turned almost to a tune and air of words; and amidst all our pretty discourses, pusillanimous and base, and so easily dragged into the mire, self, and flesh, and pride, and passion domineering, while we speak of being in Christ, and clothed with him, and believe it, because we speak it so often and so confident."—Leighton.

He that cannot forgive others, breaks the bridge over which he must pass himself; for every man has need to be forgiven.

The christian is not ruined by living in the world, which he must needs do while he remains in it, but the world living in him.

Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

The Gospel.

No. I.

"For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith."

However little the Gospel of Christ is esteemed in the world, it is certainly the most gracious and important dispensation of God towards the sons of men; or else, our Bible is mere extravagance and a fable; for the Bible speaks of it with the highest encomiums, and the sacred writers are often in transport when they mention it. It is called the "gospel of the grace of God;" (Acts, 20: 24;) the "gospel of salvation;" (Eph. 1: 13,) the "glorious gospel of Christ;" (2 Cor. 4: 4,) "the gospel of peace;" (Eph. 6: 15;). It is "the wisdom of God in a mystery;" (1 Cor. 2: 7;) "the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations;" "the ministration of the Spirit" and of "righteousness," which far exceeds all former dispensations "in glory;" (2 Cor. 3: 8, 9;) and it is represented as the only scheme for the salvation of sinners.

When the wisdom of the world had used its utmost efforts in vain, "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believed." 1 Cor. 1: 21. And in our text it is called "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, whether Jew or Gentile;" and St. Paul declares that he would not be ashamed of professing and preaching the gospel of Christ, even in Rome—the metropolis of the world—the seat of learning, politeness and grandeur. He represents it as a catholicon, equally adapted to Jew and Greek—to the posterity of Abraham and to the numerous Gentile nations, and equally needed by them all. Now this must be all extravagance and ostentatious parade, unless there be something peculiarly glorious and endearing in the gospel. It must certainly give the most illustrious display of the divine perfection; it must be the most grand contrivance of infinite wisdom; the most rich and amazing exertion of unbounded goodness: and particularly it must bear the most favorable aspect upon the guilty sons of men, and be the best, nay, the only scheme for their salvation.—And what are the glorious peculiarities, the endearing recommendations of this gospel? One of them, in which we are nearly interested, strikes our eyes in the text. "For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith." Here let us inquire into the meaning of the expression, and point out the connection. I believe the righteousness of God has generally one uniform signification in the writings of St. Paul; and by it, he means that righteousness, upon the account of which a sinner is justified, that righteousness, for the sake of which his sins are forgiven, and he is restored to the divine favor. In short, it is our only justifying righteousness. It may be called the righteousness of God, to distinguish it from our own personal righteousness. "For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." Here, the righteousness of God is directly opposed to, and distinguished from their own righteousness. The various descriptions of this righteousness, and of justification by it, which we find in the apostolic writings, may assist us to understand the nature of it; and therefore, it may be proper to take one general view of them.

It is frequently called "the righteousness of Christ," and it is said to consist in his obedience; "by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." Rom. 5: 19. Now obedience consists in strict observance of a law; and, consequently, the obedience of Christ, which is our justifying righteousness, consists in his obedience to the law of God; hence, he is said to be "the end of the law, for righteousness, to every one that believeth." Rom. 10: 4.

To be justified by his righteousness is the same as to be justified by his blood; (Rom. 5: 9,) to be reconciled to God by his death; (v. 10,) from which we may learn that the sufferings of Christ are a principal part of this righteousness, or, that he not only obeyed the precept but also endured the penalty of the divine law in our stead; and that it is only on this account that we can be justified. This righteousness is called "the righteousness of God without the law;" (Rom. 3: 21,) an "imputed righteousness without works." Rom. 4: 6. And it is plain from the whole tenor of his Epistle, and that to the Galatians, that the righteousness by which we are justified, is entirely different from our own obedience to the law; and hence, we may learn, that our own merit or good works do not, in whole or in part, constitute our justifying righteousness; but that it is wholly and entirely the merit of Christ's obedience and suffering. This righteousness is often called "the righteousness of faith;" (Rom. 3: 22,) "even the righteousness of God which is by the faith of Jesus Christ." Ch. 4: 11, 13; also 10: 6; and Phil. 3: 9. "Not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith." From whence we may infer, that faith has a peculiar concurrence of instrumentality in our justification, by the righteousness of Christ. I need not enlarge on this point; for, to be justified by faith in Christ, in his blood, by believing in Christ, and the like, are such frequent Scripture expressions as to put the matter out of all doubt.

The text further observes, that in the Gospel this justifying righteousness is revealed to faith; that is, in the gospel it is clearly discovered, proposed and offered, as an object of faith. The light of nature is all darkness and uncertainty on this point; it can only offer obscure and mistaken conjectures concerning the method of pardon and acceptance for a guilty sinner; it leaves the anxious conscience still unsatisfied and perplexed with the grand inquiry,—"wherewith shall I come before the Lord?"—"how shall such a guilty creature as I, re-obtain the favor of my Sovereign?" It may suggest some plausible things in favor of repentance, as the only method of pardon; it may flatter the sinner, that a God of infinite goodness will not rigorously execute his law; it may draw a veil over the attributes of his justice, and thus build the hopes of the sinner upon the ruin of the divine government and the dishonor of the divine perfection.

But a method of justification by the righteousness of another, by the obedience and death of the Son of God, by his perfect obedience to the law, and complete satisfaction to justice instead of the sinner; a method by which sin may be pardoned, and in the mean time, the honor of the divine government be advanced, and the divine perfections gloriously illustrated: this is a mystery which was hid from ages and from generations; this was a grand secret which all the sages, philosophers, and sons of men, who had only the light of nature for their guide, could not discover, nor indeed, so much as guess at. This scheme was as far above their thoughts as the heavens are above the earth. Nothing but infinite wisdom could effect it. Nothing but Omniscience could reveal it.

In the writings of Moses and the prophets, we meet with some glimmerings of it; some few rays of Gospel light were reflected back from the Son of righteousness through the dark medium of three or four thousand years and thrown upon the minds of the people of those dark ages in the sacrifices, which seem to have been instituted soon after the first ray of gospel light dawned upon our world, in that gracious promise—"the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head;" and afterwards, in the sacrifices and types of the law. Also, the Old Testament writers seem to have caught a glimpse of this light; and hence the apostle says, "the righteousness of God is witnessed by the law and the prophets." Rom. 3: 21. But it is in the gospel alone that it is explicitly and fully revealed; in the gospel alone it is proposed in full glory, as a proper object for a distinct, particular, and explicit faith. Hence, we may easily see the striking connection of the text. You may connect this sentence—"for therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith—with the first part of the foregoing text—"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ—and then the sense will be;—"no wonder I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ among Jew or Gentile, and even in Rome itself; for it makes a most glorious and important discovery, in which they are all concerned; a discovery which the Jews with all the advantages of the law and the prophets, could not clearly make; a discovery which the Greeks, with all their learning and philosophy—and the Romans, with all their power and improvements could not so much as guess at:—and that is the discovery of a complete, God-like righteousness, by which the guilty sons of men of every age and nation under heaven, may obtain justification from all their sins;—a righteousness which is a sufficient foundation for the hopes of sinners, and gives the most majestic view of the great God;—a righteousness without which, Jews and Gentiles, and even the Romans themselves in the hight of Empire, must unavoidably and eternally perish." Such a glorious and divine righteousness does the gospel reveal; such a benevolent, gracious, and reviving discovery does it make.

And who would be ashamed of such a gospel? "For my part," says St. Paul, "I am not ashamed of it, but would boldly publish it unto kings and emperors, to sages and philosophers; and whatever sufferings I endure for its sake, still I glory in so good a cause." Or, we may join this clause—"For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith"—with the last part of the preceding verse—"For it is the power of God unto salvation," &c.; and then the connection will run thus; "the gospel of Christ, so destitute of all carnal and secular recommendations, is sufficiently recommended to universal acceptance by this, that it is the only powerful and efficacious expedient for the salvation of all such as believe it, whether they be Jew or Gentile. And no wonder it is attended with this divine power and efficacy, for in it and in it only, the righteousness of God is revealed to the faith and acceptance of a guilty world."

No religion but that of a mediator can provide or propose such a righteousness; and yet, without such a righteousness, no sinner, whether Jew or Gentile, can be saved. And on the other hand, the revelation of such a righteousness directly tends to promote the important work of salvation, as it encourages the despairing sinner, and inspires him with vigor. It lays a foundation for the honorable communication of the influence of the Holy Spirit, without which the work can never be effected.

There is one other thing of importance to be understood, and that is this, that the righteousness of Christ, on account of which we are justified, signifies the obedience and sufferings of Jesus Christ, to answer the demand of the law, which we had broken. He obeyed the law, and endured its penalty as the surety or substitute of sinners. Isa. 53: 4—12. That is, he did all this, not for himself, but for them or in their stead.

I shall now proceed to explain the nature of justifying faith, as I understand it, and show the place that it has in our justification. You see I do not propose to explain the general nature of faith as having for its object the word of God in general, but as it has a peculiar instrumentality in our justification; and in that view it is evident that the Lord Jesus, our Savior, who died for sinners, is its peculiar object. Hence, a justifying faith is so often described in Scripture in such terms as these; believing in Christ, faith in his blood, &c.; and the righteousness of Christ by which we are justified, is called the righteousness of faith, the righteousness which is of God by faith. Therefore, a justifying faith in Christ includes these two things—a full persuasion of the truth of that method of salvation through the righteousness of Jesus Christ, which the gospel reveals,—and a hearty approbation of and consent to that method of salvation.

1.—A justifying faith includes a full persuasion of the truth of that method of salvation through the righteousness of Jesus Christ which the gospel reveals. Faith, in its general nature, is the belief of a thing upon the testimony of God; consequently, faith in Christ must be the belief of the testimony of God concerning Him, in the gospel. Hence, faith is said to be receiving the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son; and unbelief, on the other hand, is not believing the record which God gave of his Son. 1 John 5: 9, 10. St. John tells us, that the substance of the record or testimony which God gave of his Son is this, that God hath given unto us eternal life and this life is in his Son.—That is, God in the gospel testifies, that he hath established and revealed a method of bestowing immortality and eternal life upon guilty sinners, who were justly condemned to death. And he further testifies, that it is only in and through his Son Jesus Christ that this life and blessedness can be obtained—it is only through him that it can be hoped for, and nothing but horror and despair appears from any other quarter. Now faith is a firm persuasion of the truth of this gracious and important testimony; and as the foundation of all is, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God—the true Messiah promised as the Savior of sinners—hence it is, that believing that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, &c., is so frequently the definition of faith. The scheme of salvation through Jesus Christ, supposes that all are sinners, exposed to condemnation, and unable to make satisfaction for their offences, or merit the divine favor by anything they can do or suffer; and represents the Lord Jesus as substituting himself in the place of the guilty, bearing the punishment due their sins, and obeying the law of God in their stead; and represents our injured Sovereign as willing to be reconciled to such of his guilty creatures, on this account. But then, that in order to enjoy the blessings of righteousness, they must, as guilty, helpless sinners, place their whole dependence upon it, as their only ground of justification, and that though they should always take God's righteous law as the rule of their lives and abandon good works, yet, they must not make these, in the least, the ground of their hopes of pardon and acceptance.

For the Crisis.

All for God.

Bid everything stand aside for God. Let nothing get between you and Him. Fix your eyes and heart on Him alone. Go where He calls without hesitation or fear. Trust Him in everything. Cast all care upon Him. Hope in His mercy tho' He slay you. Make up your mind, come what will, I will serve the Lord. Yes, make up your mind fully, if I perish at last, I will serve the Lord.

The Two Brides.

—OR—

The True and False Church.

BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

Beloved in CHRIST, and unto all who have ears to hear, greeting:—We purpose in this article to present a few thoughts which may tend to lead those at least whose constant inquiry is—"What is truth?"—unto a more thorough investigation of this interesting theme. And in the prosecution of our feeble labors we crave your patience and special attention. In the outset, suffer us to recall to your remembrance, "that the Kingdom of God is not in word," simply, i. e., the presentation of "the truth of the gospel" "is not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." Neither is it in handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God."—Then, "if our gospel be hid," it is most certainly "hid to them that are lost." 1 Cor. 2: 4: 2 Cor. 4: 2—3.

In the first place, then, we shall endeavor to show from Scripture (the only true criterion to judge from), that herein are recognized two brides or churches of Christ—one merely presumptive or illegal, the other apparent and real.

2nd. We shall endeavor to show the most distinctive features which characterise the true and false one, and in this we shall be able to ascertain for ourselves, to which church we belong,—a matter of no little importance, as must be conceded by all.

3d. We design to speak from the testimony and authority of the divine oracles, of the doom of the false church, and the ultimate, supernal blessedness of the true one. And here it may be proper to remark, ere we proceed, that the church in Scripture is generally presented under the figure of a woman; the real one, by a pure and virtuous female, the fictitious by a meretricious and defiled one. The relations existing in connubial life; the varied changes common to that condition of being, are not unfrequently used to represent the varied changes realised by the church. Again, one individual may stand as a representative of the entire body, and often, when addressed in Scripture (irrespective of sex), is applicable to the church. This should be borne in mind as we pursue our investigations.

We now proceed with our first proposition, namely; that there are two brides or churches brought to view in Scripture, the faithful and hypocritical. By divine aid, we intend to contemplate that which is spiritual, celestial and invisible—a regenerated or new birth Church—a church begotten by the Holy Ghost, and incorruptible word of God "which liveth and abideth forever;" possessing no dazzling exterior, no outward pomp or splendor, but a hidden, living, divine principle within, whose origin is heavenly, and destiny, glory. One which is built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone, while it is formed exclusively of "lively stones," and not made simply of dead material or "untempered mortar"—built up a spiritual house, composing, collectively, "a habitation of God through the Spirit," and in the purpose of God, will finally "shine forth as the sun" in the Kingdom of her illustrious Lord and Sovereign. Ps. 45: 15; 1 Pet. 3: 4; Col. 3: 3; Matt. 13: 43; Isa. 60: 1—3; Eph. 2: 20, 21; 1 Pet. 2: 5; Cant. 6: 10; Rev. 21: 10, 11.

How diverse from that church which is entirely superficial, glittering to the sight, appearing "beautiful outwardly" while within it is not unlike whited sepulchres which usually contain a fullness of dead men's bones. Matt. 23: 27, 28; Rev. 17. 4: 18: 2.

The real church is presented in one place by the Revelator, who describes her chasteness, loyalty, and determinate adherence to her Lord, thus,—"These are they which were not defiled with women;" (i. e., free from every human device and system furnished or contaminated with the mistress upheld by the "many waters," of which we shall speak directly,) "for they are virgins." "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth," guileless, and "without fault." Rev. 14: 4, 5. She is designated by the most endearing names language is capable of producing, such as, the "Espoused," the "Chaste virgin," the "Betrothed,"—"Turtle Dove," "Darling," "King's daughter," "Garden inclosed," "Spring shut up," "Fountain sealed," "Spouse," "Prince's Daughter," "Beloved" "Dove," "Undefiled," "Choice one;" in a word, the "ALL-FAIR," and "SPOTLESS" one! Such beautiful expressions are made use of to denote Christ's true "Bride, the Lamb's wife." 2 Cor 11: 2; Hos. 2: 19, 20; Ps. 74: 19; Ps. 22: 20; Ps 45: 13; Cant. 1: 14; Cant. 6: 9; Cant. 7: 1.

While the other is called "THE GREAT WHORE, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH." This is enough; we will search no more for titles by which to designate her. There are many other terms in Scripture used, of a kindred nature, but let this suffice.

We now come to notice the characteristics which respectively distinguish them. The Savior says, "by their fruits ye shall know them." This is the infallible rule by which we determine their claims, (1 Cor. 4: 5,) and this will include three specific points, their positions, works, and utterances.

The position of the Espoused, is like "a city set on a hill"—"the light of the world"—"the epistle of Christ, known and read of all men"—"the salt of the earth"—shining as lights in the world, ever irradiating the light of the glorious gospel to all who have a disposition to become illuminated with its hope-inspiring rays. Matt. 5: 14; Matt. 5: 13; Phil. 2: 15.

As to her works, she is a co-worker with God, and by her good works glorifieth him. She is RICH in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; "working the work of the Lord"—"well reported of good works"—a doer of the word, not merely a hearer, ever demonstrating her sincerity and unshaken fidelity to her Lord in shewing her faith by her works. 2 Cor. 6: 1; 1 Tim. 6: 18; I Tim. 5: 10.

Such, in brief, is the position of the true church in regard to action, while her doctrines are pure and immortal; not found however in books of discipline, Athenasian, nor Nicene creeds, catechisms, liturgies; neither in the numerous bodies of divinity, in the holy Scriptures—in the sublime discourses of Jesus and his apostles. Now look for a moment at her utterance in regard to duty. Her language is, "Lord, WHAT WILT THOU HAVE ME TO DO?" Distrustful of her own ability to know, she is seen confiding in and "leaning upon her beloved." "Clothed with humanity," she seeks, like the gentle Mary of Bethany, a place at Jesus' feet, to learn of him. Acts, 9: 6; Luke, 10: 30. In regard to her attachment to him and his word, language like the following is expressive of the same;—"With my whole heart have I sought thee." "My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath at thy judgments at all times"—"the law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver." "O how I love thy law! it is my meditation all the day." "Whom have I in heaven but thee, and there is none on earth I desire besides thee." "I love thee, Lord;" and it is not only "in word," but "in deed and in truth." And like a young hart which panteth in its extreme thirst "after the water brooks," so do her dearest affections go out continually after God. Ps. 119; 42: 1; 84: 2.

Her utterances of aim and purpose are thus summarily and beautifully portrayed. "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." Ps. 27: 4. Meanwhile, the name of Jesus to her is sweeter than music, possessing a charm like the richest perfume, [illegible] internal senses; yea, "as ointment poured forth;" he is in her estimation the chief [illegible] among ten thousand, "the one altogether lovely," while her undivided devotedness leads her to cheerfully forsake all, for her loyal Lord. Cant 5: 10, 16; Ps. 45: 10, 11; Matt. 19: 29; Phil. 3: 8.

In regard to the return of her Lord, she is impatient; she longeth, earnestly desireth, "his appearing," nay, prayeth for his coming. "Return, O, Lord," my soul thirsteth for God, for the living God!"—"O that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down." She wrestleth and agonizeth, and will not desist even until "THE DAY BREAKETH." Her importunity here, is admirable; "continuing in supplication and prayer night and day."

"And they cried with a loud voice, saying, how long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" "And shall not God avenge his own elect which cry day and night unto him?" And "the Spirit and the Bride, say, come." While to the last annunciation to the church—"Surely, I come quickly," hear her, "Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus." Ps. 6: 4; Isa. 64: 1; Gen. 32: 25, 26; 1 Tim. 5: 5; Luke 18: 7; Rev. 6: 10; Rev. 22: 17, 20.

Now mark the pretendress, or "strange woman"—the harlot—mother of the Apocalyse, with whom the kings of the earth and great men have committed fornication. Hear her. "I have decked my bed with coverings of tapestry, with carved works, with fine linen of Egypt. I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes and cinnamon. Come, let us take our fill of love, until the morning, let us solace ourselves with loves, for the good man is not at home, he is gone a long journey;" (see Gen. 32: 25, 26; Luke 19: 12,) affirming "in her heart I set a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." Prov. 7: 10—27; Rev. 18: 7. Her position is no less deceptive than conspicuous; for while she is carried "upon a scarlet-colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns," adorned in superb and costly habiliments, she alternately assumes the garb of "an angel of light," and thus by "enticing words and fair speeches" proselyteth the unwary as members to her pernicious system which rendereth the victims thus taken captive, two-fold more the child of hell than herself. Rev. 17: 3; 2 Cor. 11: 14. 15; Matt. 23; 15. We previously alluded to her extensive paraphernalia—the pomp and splendor of her exterior, wherein lies, in a high degree, the charm of her proselyting power. Now let us see what the beloved John says, in reference to "the great whore which sitteth upon many waters," touching this matter.

"So he (the angel) carried me away in the Spirit into the wilderness; and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast. . . . . . . And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornications." Rev. 17: 3, 4. While with this captivating apparel, we learn from the 22nd v. of the 18th chap., that the syren strains of instrumental music are made a part of her form of worship for the allurement and gratification of her devotees. "That at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye fall down and worship the golden image," &c. Dan. 3: 5. But let this suffice. We glance at her works. "They are evil and only evil continually," whatever specious form they may from time to time assume, they are "works of the flesh"—"works of darkness"—works which belie her pretentions—"works of the devil." Gal. 5: 19; Eph. 5: 11; Tit. 1: 16; 1 John, 3: 8. Indeed as to their heinous nature and extent, let the loud and mournful cry of the martyrs, proceeding from the altar, and the pages of past history tell. And that they are works of the most bloody, murderous, and cruel character, we learn distinctly from what the vision unfolded to the astonishment of the Revelator. Listen to him;—"And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." Rev. 17: 6; 18: 24. And we should not omit to mention, that while her works are of this cruel and destructive kind, they are not less wonderful and deceptive. You will observe she presumptively claims a place in God's Kingdom, from the fact of her expertness in prophesying, i. e., "handling the word of God deceitfully," and expelling devils in the name and under the garb of being Jesus' elect; performing "many wonderful works;" accomplishing these marvels too with all the adeptness and wily "wonders, and with all deceivableness in them that perish," &c. "And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire to come down (apparently) from heaven in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by means of those miracles which he had power to do." Matt. 7: 22; 2 Thess. 2: 9, 10; Rev. 13: 13 14.

Now notice, her aims, desires, and purposes are altogether "earthly, sensual and devilish;"—a lover of pleasure, not of God—professing love and honor to Him however, but her "heart is far from" him; (Matt. 15: 8,) having "a form of godliness" merely, and, like the church of Sardis, a name to live but dead—a worshipper of "the golden image," sacrificing at the temple of Diana, paying her devotions to the god Mammon. She loves the world and "the things that are in the world;" she is wedded to its pleasures, married to its dazzling allurements, its sinful charms, foolish customs, vain, gaudy and evanescent fashions. 2 Tim. 3: 4, 5; Dan. 3: 10; Jer. 10: 3; 1 Cor. 7: 31.

Her sentiments in regard to the coming of the Lord Jesus as rightful sovereign, are summed up in a few words. Indeed, she has substituted for his personal advent a kind of a spiritual, mysterious appearing, which is, when thoroughly analyzed, a perfect nonentity, and a base perversion of "the words of the living God;" and while she holds to this fabulous theory, which so exactly comports with her entire character, her language is,—"We will not have this man to reign over us." Nay, more; the sublime doctrine of Messiah's "coming in the clouds of heaven" is pronounced by her, blasphemy, through one of her mouth-pieces centuries ago; and here it is worthy of remark, that the second advent was first preached more directly in the christian dispensation, by the Son of God himself, and at the time condemned in an agony of rage by a high priest as heretical and blasphemous. See Matt. 26: 64, 65. Look at this circumstance, together with the fact that she is ever and anon fulfilling prophecy by the inquiry, in a reproachful and taunting mood,—"WHERE IS THE PROMISE OF HIS COMING?"

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 4, 1857.

Question.

No. II.

A correspondent inquires, "what is meant by the soul?"

In our last number, we gave a theological answer to the question, and found, according to popular theology, that the soul is the "real man," and lives and suffers or enjoys after the physical organism is destroyed, and is not subject to death, being immortal, and consequently, the resurrection refers only to the body. We now proceed to give a Bible answer to our Brother's question, and leave our readers to judge whether modern theology and the Bible are in harmony.

The first time the word soul is applied to man, is in Gen. 2: 7, where we have an account of his creation. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

In this passage where we have its primary use, when applied to our race, it evidently signifies the whole man. It is used in this sense many times in the Bible. Paul says in Acts 27: 37, "and we were in all in the ship, two hundred threescore and sixteen souls." After they had run the ship aground, these souls all escaped to land, "some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship." In 1 Pet. 3: 20, we read, that "eight souls were saved by water," when Noah and his family were preserved from destruction in the ark, at the time of the flood. No one can suppose for a moment, that the souls in these passages are like the ones described in the theological definition, which are "immaterial, uncompounded, indissoluble, indivisible, intangible, without exterior or interior parts;" but real, material men and women. These souls ate. Says Paul, in Acts 27: 37–38, when speaking of the two hundred threescore and sixteen souls that were shipwrecked,—"when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea." Lev. 7: 18, "the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity." We remark again, such souls are very different from those that are "without body or parts," described in modern theological works.

We would say then in answer to the question, "what is the soul?"—that primarily it means the whole man, and a living man is called a "living soul" and a dead man a dead soul, if we follow the literal rendering of various passages in the Bible.

There are three words, in the old testament, rendered soul; viz, n'sha-mah, n'dee-vah, and nephesh. The first is translated soul, but once, and is found in Isa. 57: 16; the second, once, and is found in Job. 30: 15. With these two exceptions, nephesh is the only word in the old testament rendered soul, and is found 828 times, is translated in 44 different ways, and is 33 times applied to beasts. Psukee in the N. T. corresponding with nephesh in the O. T. is the only word rendered soul, and is translated in 8 different ways. In Lev. 21: 11; Num. 6: 6–7, 10; and Hag. 2: 13, the phrase "dead body," is from mooth nephesh, which means dead soul, when literally rendered from the Hebrew scriptures. When a man has the breath of life in him, he is a living soul; and when it is taken from him, he becomes a dead soul. Hence, we read in the account of the creation "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." In recording the manner in which man dies, David says,—"thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust." Ps. 104: 29. Again he says,—"his breath goeth forth, he (man) returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4. These scriptures make the point plain, that, the giving of the "breath of life" makes "a living soul," and taking it away, a dead soul.

Having shown that the word soul primarily stands for the whole man, we defer further remarks until our next.

Chickopee Falls.

Our second visit to this place was not a whit behind the first. Deep interest is awakened in the community upon the great truths of the Bible that have long been buried beneath the rubbish of Papal theology. Notwithstanding effort was made to keep people away from our meetings, Market Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity with attentive listeners.

We had an interesting love feast Lord's day morning. A large number were up from Springfield in company with Bro. Ladd, who has just buried his affectionate companion. She died happy in the Lord, and quietly sleeps in Jesus.

At 6 o'clock, before assembling for our public meeting, Lord's day evening, we met at Bro. Smith's to commemorate the death and sufferings of our dear Savior; and I think I never enjoyed a more heavenly one, or felt more sensibly the approval of the Lord. The scene will be long remembered by those who were present. A table was spread, around which sat about thirty of Jesus' friends. We used *un*leavened bread and the pure juice of the grape. We have long been satisfied that none other should be used, and that the sacrament should be observed in the evening; that a suitable place should be prepared where we can sit down to the table, not in the promiscuous congregation, but where none are present but those who are followers of Christ.

I am convinced that there is not sufficient importance attached to this ordinance, nor to the manner, time, and place for its observance. I am happy to learn that our brethren and sisters are awaking to a careful consideration of the subject.

At half past 7 o'clock, we met again at Market Hall, which was densely filled by those who seemed to be real lovers of truth. Many from the different churches were present, who treated us and the truth with respect, and are anxious to hear and learn more fully the reason of our hope, being satisfied that it is not without foundation. We are fully satisfied that light and truth are spreading in that region. The Macedonian cry is echoing all around. Let the children of the Lord arise, and in his name "fight the good fight of faith."

Worcester.

We have some good news from Worcester. The Lord blessed us in a signal manner by comforting the saints, and raising up those who were cast down by the enemy of all righteousness.

Our meeting, Lord's day, Jan. 18, will be remembered with much gratitude by many present. The Holy Spirit was truly our comforter. The weather was cold, but our hearts were warm with Jesus' love. We commenced at half past 9 o'clock in the morning with a christian love feast, and closed in the evening with the sacrament of the Lord's supper, which brought most vividly before us the sufferings of our Savior,—causing his saints to both weep and rejoice. We parted with a firm determination to live better than ever.

We think the religious aspect of things among our brethren and sisters in Worcester has not been better for years, than at the present time. Roots of bitterness have been extracted and the wounds healed by the love of God; party feelings have been exchanged for christian affection; intolerance, evil-speaking and surmising have been substituted for that charity that thinketh no evil, suffereth long and is kind. Hard sayings have been recalled, heart-felt forgiveness bestowed in return; the brow clouded with sadness has been lit up with the sweet smile of heavenly peace. We think there has been joy among angels during the last few days on account of what they have seen in Worcester. May the peace of God abide on them.

The church in Thomas St., enjoying the labors of Bro. D. T. Taylor, has been favored with the outpouring of the spirit of the Lord, and some twenty or more have been either converted or reclaimed from a backslidden state during the past few months, and the interest still continues. Before the revival commenced, special prayer meetings were held for this object, and the Author of all good has been pleased to answer. Let us all follow the example, remembering that our labor in the Lord is not in vain. If we ever intend to make an effort to save our fellow men, it is time to begin.

A Call.

The brethren in Dartmouth, Mass., earnestly request Bro. Hemenway to come and hold a series of meetings in their place, and visit from house to house as in days past.

This morning, Bro. David Wilson's son, and his brother's son, both lay in the embrace of death. We hope Bro. Hemenway will go immediately if he possibly can. He is requested to answer through the Crisis.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The Lord willing, we propose to hold a general Conference in Boston, at Chapman Hall, Chapman Place, commencing Tuesday evening, Feb. 10th at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

Our brethren and sisters, who attended the conference two years since at the same place, will recollect that it was one of great interest and profit, and that no effort was spared by the church in Boston to make it pleasant for those who came to enjoy that religious feast; and we trust that those who may be pursuaded to come to the one now proposed will not go away disappointed.

The object of the meeting is to make an effort to arouse the Lord's children to greater activity in his vineyard, and to afford mutual strength and comfort to each other. The apostles and primitive christians had such conferences, and were rewarded with rich blessings. We are confident that the time has come when we should make an extra effort to awaken new interest in our fellow men in the great work of preparation for the future world.

Brethren and sisters, come up to the feast, for we expect special help from the Lord of hosts.

We are anxious to meet once more in conference before our Master calls for an account of our stewardship. We very much need the benefit of a mutual interchange of thought and feeling.

We therefore earnestly entreat our brethren and sisters to make this meeting a subject of special prayer. Let us meet not as sectarians, to advance party interests, but as Christians, united in love, to promote the best good of our fellow men.

The opposer of all righteousness is making most alarming inroads upon the cause of truth, and shall we sleep till he has bound us hand and foot? Shall we flee and faint because our enemy is strong, or shall we like Caleb and Joshua be willing to meet, in the strength of the Lord, all that can come against us? God has committed to our trust, truths which, if faithfully employed, present an impassable barrier against the last-day errors, and the onward march of man's great enemy, and shall we hide them under a bushel? Brethren, arouse for the conflict! The victory is sure. Our King will prevail. Sleeping soldier, awake and gird thine armor!—"Fight the good fight," and soon our waving palms will proclaim the holy triumph upon the hills of glory!

In behalf of the church,

CHAPMAN HALL.

For the benefit of those coming to the Conference, we would say, that Chapman Hall, in Chapman Place, is near the City Hall, Tremont Temple, and Tremont House.

For the Crisis.

One Thing.

H. L. HASTINGS.

To accomplish anything we must have an object in view. We must keep our eye upon that. If we stand between two objects we attain neither. If we run two ways we reach nowhere. If we aim at nothing we hit it. A man to be great in any respect must concentrate his powers. Will, thought, judgment, strength, and desire, must all be fixed on one thing. Divide him and you conquer him; concentrate his powers and he becomes invincible. Let Alexander fill his heart with one thing, and he conquers the world. Let Hannibal fill his mind with hatred to the Romans and he will cross the Alps to compass his design. Let the man of genius undertake one thing, and though he pass through years of toil, disappointment, and privation, yet, at last, he triumphs and exults in his success. Thus all great objects have been achieved; thus all sublime purposes have been accomplished.

Let a man but set his whole being to one work,—let him pursue it with all the energy of his mind,—let him follow it with all the tenacity of life, let him war against every obstacle,—let him sneer contempt in the very face of impossibility,—let him thus pursue his way, and ten chances to one he shall triumph at last, and if he triumph not, yet his failure shall have triumph even in that. This unity of purpose, so important to the successful prosecution of any great enterprise, is seen in the most eminent of the servants of the Lord. Thus said David, "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to inquire in his temple." Ps. 27: 4. Other purposes were incidental, other plans were subordinate, other desires unimportant; but one thing he would desire and seek that he might dwell in Jehovah's presence—not in an earthly temple, for David slept with his fathers long ere the summit of Moriah was crowned with the house of the Lord; but his eye wandered away to his father's house, the eternal dwelling place of the just, where the beauty of the Lord should be manifested, where he should be hidden in a diviner tabernacle than earth contained, from all the assaults of foes; and where, in the glad repose of everlasting blessedness, he should offer sacrifices of joy, and sing forever the praises of the Lord.

Amid the regal pomp of Jerusalem, amid the splendor of his court, amid the wealth which surrounded him, amid the "pleasant places" in which the "lines" that marked his heritage had fallen; still he could say, "I am a stranger with thee and a sojourner, as all my fathers were." These things afforded him no permanent pleasure. His heart thirsted after the living God, and longed to tread his holy courts. And in this hope, and with this desire, he ran the race of life, and while serving his generation by the will of God, he ever pressed onward toward that brighter kingdom and that holier home where he should serve in the perfection of immortality, that Lord who had so crowned him with goodness and with mercy all the days of his life. This one thing was his desire, this strengthened him for life's conflicts; this reclaimed him from his wanderings; this taught his hands to work and his fingers to fight the fight of faith; this gleamed before him like a beacon-light, and steady as a star-beam in the darkness, guided him to his rest.

In the history of Paul, we notice the same fixedness of purpose and a whole being devoted to its accomplishment. Thus, while taking a retrospect of previous labors, toils and sufferings; while contemplating the sacrifices, the trials, the givings up of his past life, he nobly says, "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this ONE THING I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press towards the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Phil. 3: 13, 14. Throughout all his subsequent life this unity of purpose was manifested. One thing engrossed his attention, one thing engaged his heart, one thing demanded his efforts, one thing absorbed his mind. Every course in life bore towards that great object. The heavenly prize; the glorious calling of God in Christ Jesus; the hope of eternal salvation with all its attendant glories, was the one object of his being. For this he counted birth, nationality, reputation, and learning as loss and dross. For this he renounced ease, cast aside dignity, and trampled pleasure under foot. For this he accepted reproach, rejoiced in suffering and gloried only in the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ. For this he endured toils, experienced afflictions, and passed through perils and privations almost beyond belief. For he made his mortal existence one long crucifixion, and shouted in triumph when he finished his course and his life with joy and not with grief.

Thus it was with Paul. One thing was before his mind. The blandishments of beauty, the charms of wealth, the attractions of worldliness, the pomp of royalty, the pageantry of power, the wooings of luxury, the bewildering fancies of philosophy, the seductions of worldly wisdom, all these could have no effect upon his heart. The one great purpose of his being had engrossed all his soul. His eye was blind to worldly splendors, his ear deaf to earthly melody, his heart steeled to sensual seductions; and his mind, his heart, his will, and his whole being was devoted to the great work of securing eternal life.

It was this one thing that gave strength to his hand and courage to his heart. And what a life was his that begun with such a purpose! How laborious, how full of holy zeal, how energetic! how full of tireless activity! No cross was too heavy, no labor too severe, no persecution too hot, no shame too deep, no chains too galling, no danger too imminent, no clouds too dark for him to walk calmly onward to fulfill all the will of God. One thing was before him, and he walked calmly on to accomplish the mighty mission that was appointed for him—the ministry that he had received to testify of the gospel of the grace of God.

The same unity of purpose which was so indispensable in the days of Paul is indispensable also in our days. We need, like Paul, to forget everything else and press forward to gain the glorious prize. We need to devote ourselves to "this one thing." We cannot serve two masters. Away with this mammon-loving christianity, away with vacillation and uncertainty. Hark! "I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold or hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." O, we have too many men who are thus nauseous to God Almighty, and too few whose hearts are hot with zeal and hope and christian love.

We have ministers whose hearts are after money, after honor, after ease, after luxury, after power, after politics, after everything but the one thing. They look for much, they accomplish nothing. We have people that follow the world, that seek for gains, that roll in luxury, that know nothing of sacrifice and nothing of christian toil; they divide their efforts, they fritter away their powers, they are confused in their endeavors; they attempt much, lose all, and will at last be lost themselves. O we need men of some purpose. Men who will follow the Lord fully. Men who will throw themselves, soul, body, and spirit, into the one work of serving God. By serving two masters we please neither; by grasping for two worlds we lose both; by having two objects we fail to accomplish anything. We need to be men of one work, of one purpose, of one aim. We need to give ourselves wholly to this object. The world must stand aside. Its phantoms must be displaced—its glories despised—its wealth sacrificed—its honors cast under foot, and all its cherished splendor hung in infamy upon the cross by which we are crucified to the world and the world to us.

Man of God, remember thy mission. Forget the things behind. Do this one thing. Press to the mark. Stoop not to earth. Thine is an high, an holy calling. Linger not around this world's enchanting scenes; the mark of the prize is before your face. O haste to gain it. There is endless glory around the glittering mark. There is everlasting blessedness presented as the prize. O run the race—the race for everlasting life.

Christian, let not the world beguile thy heart. Let not its frowns affright thy soul. Let not its enchantments stay thy course. Before you is all that you desire. Before you are all blessings, behind you are all woes. O, be men of one holy, mighty work. Lay hold upon the perishing. Pull them out of the fire. Lift up the voice of warning. Cry aloud and spare not. Let your motto be—"One thing I do." Whatever you leave undone, do the work of the Lord!

Man of the world, impenitent sinner, I have a word for thee. You have many objects, many pursuits. But one thing thou lackest. That one thing is of the greatest moment. O, sir, will you neglect eternal salvation? Will you lose the glory of [illegible]? Will you perish? Will you die? The condemnation of death is upon you. The avenger of blood is upon your track. The thunders of wrath mutter deeply in the blackening heavens—the lightnings of vengeance dance along the gloomy sky, and soon, unless saved, you will perish forever. Now, you may escape. Before you is a refuge from the avenger—a covert from the storm. There you may be hidden and be safe. If you linger you perish. If you hesitate you die. If you delay all is lost. One thing alone can save you. Fly instantly to Jesus Christ. Let nothing hinder—let nothing prevent. The world will deceive you; your lusts will ruin you; Satan will entice you; delay will ruin you. Christ, Christ only can save you! He can do it now. He can do it when you come to him. O come to Him now. Let your motto be—"This one thing I do—I press to the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

For the Crisis.

The Lord's Supper.

No. II.

"And he said unto them, with desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer; for I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, take this, and divide it among yourselves; for I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God shall come." Luke 22: 15–18.

In my last epistle, I showed that at the first sacrament our Lord drank an unfermented wine; and we, therefore, who profess to be governed by the literal rendering of the Scripture, ought to follow his blessed example. Not long ago, a reformed drunkard, and apparently a converted man, approached the Lord's table He ate the bread, and drank the wine; but mark the result. The taste of a drunkard for alcohol is like that of the blood-hound for blood; a single sip makes him thirst for more. So here, the wine tasted at the sacred communion revived the old passion, and he who seemed a saint was corrupted, went home, got drunk, and died a drunkard! Surely we ought not to change "the cup of the Lord into the cup of devils."

If such things as the above have once happened, are they not as likely to take place again? Need we wonder at them when we read such passages as the following;—"Wine is a mocker."—"Wine of violence."—"Woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink."—"Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright; at the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." And then, mark the apostolic conclusion. "It is good neither to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth." In the above quotations, wine is represented as a curse, use it as we may. If it be intoxicating wine, it is "a mocker," and the "wo" comes with awful force against those who use it.

But, says our Lord "I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God shall come." Some of my esteemed brethren have asked the question, what difference can it make, if we collect the grapes for ourselves and make the wine from them by fermentation? have we not then the pure blood and fruit of the vine?

I answer, no; for a fermented liquor can never with any propriety be called the blood of the vine. For example. Were we, by some chemical process, to decompose human blood, to dismiss two-thirds of one of its constituent parts, and one-third of another, and then combine the remaining ingredients afresh, we should not be likely to call this new product pure human blood. Yet this is exactly what takes place in the blood or juice of the grape when subjected to fermentation. Suppose three atoms of sugar to consist of three atoms of hydrogen, three of carbon, and three of oxygen. Now mark; in subjecting those grapes of yours to fermentation, the sugar that formed a part of them is decomposed; one-third of the carbon and two-thirds of the oxygen combine, and form carbonic acid, while the remaining hydrogen, carbon, and oxygen unite, and become alcohol or poison. Now, I would ask my dear brother, can this new compound that you have formed by suffering your grapes to ferment, be called the pure blood or juice of the grape? That pure juice which God formed is, by your caprice, formed into [illegible] poison; the one is dismissed to the air, the other retained for the Lord's table, to show forth his death, &c. Thus you converted a good creature of God into an evil, and changed a blessing into a curse. Such wine is a mocker; the curse of God rests upon it; it is good not to drink it, and woe to him who giveth it to his neighbor, or that looketh upon it with approbation.

ARRIVAL OF THE ATLANTIC.

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.

Steamship Atlantic, Capt. Eldridge, from Liverpool 4 P. M. 6th inst., arrived at this port at 6 o'clock.

ASSASSINATION OF THE FRENCH PRIMATE.

The Archbishop of Paris was assassinated while performing religious services in the church St. Etienne, by a discharged priest, named Verges. The assassin stepped forward, and, lifting his cape, plunged a Catalan knife into his heart, exclaiming, "Down with the Goddess!" an expression which he afterwards explained to refer to the doctrine of the immaculate conception. The Bishop fell to the pavement and instantly expired. A Sister of Charity, who had noticed the movement of the assassin, and attempted to throw herself between him and the Archbishop, was wounded in the hand.

Verges was formerly a priest of the diocese of Meaux, and had been suspended for preaching against the dogma of the immaculate conception. He was in the insurrection of June, and on that occasion he received the murdered prelate in his arms. The general opinion is that he is deranged. The crime created a deep sensation at the Tuilleries, and in all classes the same consternation was apparent.

The correspondent of the Globe gives an account, agreeing in the main with the above, but he states in addition, "The grand mass was concluded, and the Archbishop, after heading a procession of the lady patronessess of the Societe St. Genevieve, was about to return into the nave, when an individual rushed up from behind, pushed aside two clergymen, and thrust a dagger-knife through his lungs, exclaiming at the time—"Down with the Goddesses," or, according to another account, "A priest must not be allowed to perish from hunger."

The Archbishop, who was dressed in his pontifical robes, with the mitre on his head, and his crozier in his hand, fell to the ground, murmuring almost audibly, "Le Malheureux." He expired on the spot, and his inanimate remains were first conveyed to the vestry of the church, and were subsequently conveyed to the archiepiscopal palace. The assassin was at once arrested. He is a man in the prime of life, aged 32, with expressive and intelligent features, and possessed of much self-command. The statement that he is insane is false. He at once told his name and profession.

The crime created a deep sensation at the Tuilleries. The Emperor and Empress were about to proceed to a theatre when the fatal intelligence was communicated to them. In all classes of society the same consternation was apparent. The body of the Archbishop has already been embalmed, and it will be interred with great ceremony. This morning the dreadful event was communicated to the Bishop of Tripoli, brother of the deceased, who is in an infirm state of health, on whom it created a terrible effect.

FOREIGN POLICY OF THE POPE.

A secret conclave was held at Rome, Dec. 15, in which the state of the Roman church in Mexico and South America was considered. The Pope complains bitterly of the doings of the new government of Mexico, and declares all the measures which it has taken against the authority of the Apostolic Chair to be null and void. He also denounces those priests who obey the laws of the countries in which they live, rather than the instructions forwarded to them from Rome.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARAGO.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.

Steamship Arago, from Southampton 14th inst., arrived at her dock at 11 o'clock. She brings London dates of the 14th.

The Neufchatel question was definitely settled.

Switzerland releases the insurgent prisoners, and Prussia acknowledges the independence of Neufchatel and suspends all military preparations.

The Russians have met a disastrous defeat near Bayuk, where they were attacked by 10,000 Circassians, and forced to retire with loss of 2000 men, and artillery.

Hostilities continued at Canton, and the Americans have become fully engaged in the struggle.

The French Admiral at Macao had sent orders for all French vessels belonging to his station to join him immediately.

The explanation of the engagement of the American forces in the renewed hostilities at Canton is that the Chinese having offered a price for the English heads, some American heads were sent in by mistake. Nothing further.

It is rumored that Russia has further remonstrated against Anglo-French occupation of Greece.

A second Sub-Marine Atlantic Telegraph Company has been organised in London, to go direct to the shores of the United States.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARABIA.

HALIFAX, Jan. 29.

The Royal Mail Steamship, Arabia, from Liverpool at 1 P. M. on Saturday, 17th inst., arrived here at a quarter before 12 o'clock last night.

TURKEY.

The Porte has approved the financial negociations respecting the new bank, which will therefore commence operations at once at Constantinople, with a capital of eight million piastres.

It is rumored that Mr. Layard has obtained concession for a railroad from Rustchuk to the Gulf of Saros, which the French and English governments favor with a view to military purposes. Gen. Chesney has obtained the concession of the Euphrates Valley Railway. A commission of officers is appointed to prepare a plan for a reform of the Turkish army.

CHINA.

The China Mail of Hong Kong, of Nov. 20th, which contains intelligence four days later from Canton than that brought by the last mail, says—"The principal interest during the week has been the proceedings of the United States squadron, consequent upon the unjustifiable attacks made upon a party of Naval officers and civilians by bravos occupying the barrier forts, and which is likely to involve the Americans, much against their will, in a quarrel with the Chinese."

Domestic Summary.

DEATH OF HON. PRESTON S. BROOKS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.

Hon. Preston S. Brooks strangled to death at seven o'clock this evening. Dr. Boyle, who was called to dress the wounds of Mr. Sumner, was his physician. His disease was croup.

Considerable excitement was produced by this visitation of Providence.

His personal friends seem smitten, while the mass of those who crowd the hotels come to the general conclusion that the wrath of man is avenged in the justice of God.

There are numerous knots of people in each of the hotels, talking about the death of Brooks.

He died a horrid death and suffered intensely. He endeavored to tear his own throat open to get breath.

It is rumored here to-night that Mr. Sumner left Boston to-day. This report, with the fact of Mr. Buchanan's arrival here to-day, and Mr. Brooks' death, gives food to the superstitious.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in death, at Dartmouth, Mass., Jan. 27th, David J., son of Lovice and David G. Wilson, aged 17 years.

He was converted in 1854, and baptized by Bro. Elam Burnham. He has been a faithful, affectionate, and obedient son, beloved by all who knew him. He delighted in pleasing his parents, and sacrificing his own ease to afford them comfort. A prize is taken from the family, but they do not sorrow as those who have no hope.

We felt, while in their house of mourning, that it was better than to be in one of feasting. How true the Bible saying, "the sadness of the countenance makes the heart better."

Christian pilgrims ever find a resting place and a welcome in Bro. Wilson's family, and our prayer is, that it may be an unbroken one in the everlasting kingdom.

Funeral attended by the writer,—text, Job, 14: 14. The day was beautiful, and a large number of sympathizing friends gathered to bestow their last tribute of respect to the youthful dead.

We endeavored to show that death kills the whole man, and that the only hope of his future existence is in the literal resurrection of the material organism that was laid in the grave, which is to take place at the personal coming of our Savior, at the end of the present dispensation.

M. GRANT.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at New Britain, Conn. Dec. 29, '56, Sister Hannah Allen, wife of Bro. Henry Allen, aged 57 years.

Sr. Allen had suffered many years with erysipelas, and latterly, with a dropsical affection. She lived about two weeks after she gave up, and was sensible up to the time that the disease struck the brain. Soon after that she suffered from a paralytic shock, or fit, when reason began to give way, and, for about three days before her death, she was entirely insensible.

She has left four children, with her husband, to mourn her loss; but not without hope of soon meeting her again, where disease and death will never come.

She was formerly a Methodist, but when the cry of the Lord's coming in '43 went through the land she became interested in the glad news. Disappointment came, but it shook not her faith. She embraced the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, with kindred doctrines. The resurrection was her only hope. She looked forward to that time when death shall be swallowed up in victory, and this mortal shall put on immortality.

Our sister sleeps! and thus sleeps a kind companion, mother, and friend. Her house was always a home to the weary pilgrim. Many will remember Sr. Allen, when they see this, who have shared the hospitalities of sister Allen's house in days past; who have been refreshed and strengthened by a friendly, christian reception, and kind and affectionate exhortations to persist in the work of the vineyard.

"The memory of the just is blessed."

A solemn and impressive funeral discourse was delivered to a large and deeply interested audience by Eld. E. Crowell, of Hartford, on the occasion of her burial.

Father Allen, in the hour of affliction and sorrow, should share largely in the sympathies of christian friends

By request, W. S. CAMPBELL.

New Britain, Jan. 20, '56.

Fell asleep in the hope of everlasting life, at Plymouth Mass., Thursday evening, Jan. 1st, '57, Mary, wife of Ezra S. Dimon, aged 43 years.

Sister Dimon was the daughter of Bro. J. K. Cobb. She was early a subject of religious impressions, but being naturally gay and vivacious in her temperament, she continued without hope in Christ till she arrived at mature age. Some ten or fifteen years since, a severe affliction befell her in the loss of two beautiful children, a son and daughter. Then her heart turned to the Source of everlasting consolation. About this time her mind gave attention to religious matters, and she was led to hope in God and to wait for his Son from heaven. Subsequently, she, with a few believers in Plymouth, received occasional instructions from Bro. J. S. White, who resided at Kingston, an adjacent town. But still her heart was not firmly fixed trusting in the Lord; and though she had a knowledge of God's will, yet, the lack of religious privileges, and the surrounding apathy and worldliness almost overcame the holier influences that had lingered about her heart.

In February 1851, the writer visited Plymouth and preached. The deceased was one of the most constant attendants during the meetings held, and during subsequent labors there. She became deeply interested, and after much reflection, she, with her husband, who had long been a member of a congregational church, were planted together in the likeness of Christ's death, in old Plymouth harbor, very near where the pilgrim fathers landed more than two hundred years before. Sr. D. became deeply interested in the work of God. Her talents and zeal were given to this work. Her heart, her hand, her voice and her purse were engaged in it; and though beset with many cares and trials, and though oft bewailing her unfaithfulness and short comings, yet, her whole interest seemed to be to do good and to spread abroad the truth, and bring sinners to Christ.

About three years since a humor which had long been lurking about her system, seemed to fasten itself upon the bronchial tubes and threatened further difficulties. A severe fall about the same time, in some way affected the base of the brain and the spinal marrow so severely, that she never was free from inconvenience resulting from it. Still it was hoped that a constitution naturally vigorous, would overcome disease. But, alas! the expectation was ill-grounded. Her health continued to decline, and notwithstanding everything that skill and kindness could suggest was done, yet it was all in vain. The writer saw her in November last, and had some hopes that she might survive the winter, and possibly recover. She finished the old year and entered upon the new one; but the first day of it closed her career. Two weeks before her death she said to a brother,—"I do not wish to die, but wish to live for my family's sake, as none can care for them as a mother can." Then after a moment's pause, she remarked: "But the Lord has taken care of me thus far, and I can trust him for the future."

At five o'clock Thursday eve, Bro. Dimon returned from his work. She was lying on her bed as usual, and conversed with him. He inquired if she would give up her hope, to get well and have the world, She replied,—"No, and I do not now regret that I have tried to be faithful in a few things." She prayed that she might have grace to enable her to endure with patience.

Little did she imagine that the toil would so soon be done. Little did she think that that "good confession" was her last. While conversing with her husband, she seemed to be trying to cough, but her strength was gone; she looked up as if to say—"I'm dying," and in two or three moments fell sweetly asleep. Thus, though her departure was sudden, she left a most comforting assurance that her [illegible] in peace, and her hope full of immortality. An afflicted family of relatives, comprising father, mother, brothers, sisters, husband [illegible] children, mourn her loss. A happy home [illegible] its light, and the way worn pilgrim who may journey there, will miss one whose presence always made him feel at home. Though for some two years unable to attend the public ministrations of the word, or to lift her once powerful and melodious voice in singing the sweet songs of Zion, yet the little flock in Plymouth will muse in sorrow over the departure of one who, in days past, has joined with them in all the duties of their common religion. The poor will mourn as for a benevolent friend, and the sad will be constrained to seek another comforter. The words of the poet, which she has so often sung, come home to my heart with a consoling power:—

"How blest the righteous when he dies,
When sinks the weary soul to rest;
How mildly beam the closing eyes,
How gently heaves th' expiring breast.

So fades a summer cloud away,
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er;
So gently shuts the eye of day,
So dies the wave along the shore.

Who would not wish to die like those,
Whom God's own spirit deigns to bless:
To sink into that soft repose,
Then wake to perfect happiness."

A discourse was preached at her funeral by Eld. B. E. Batchelor, from Ps. 17: 15. The prayers of the church of God are earnestly desired on the behalf of the afflicted family, that they may all be gathered at last to that world of light and glory,

"Where fears of parting chill, Never, no, never."

BEHOLD! HE COMETH.

EDWIN BURNHAM.

Behold, our Savior comes,
In robes of fire!
While all his waiting ones,
Look, and admire.

Now is the day of doom,
To sinners vile;
No longer find they room
Earth to defile.

Now sing the saints for joy,
And thankfulness;
No more their foes annoy,
And break their peace.

Thrice welcome, blessed day!
We bid it haste;
We would no longer stay
In earth's drear waste.

Come, Lord, and take thy crown,
And sceptre too;
And reign on David's throne—
Make all things new!

We cry, and cannot rest
'Till thou arise,
And take thy high behest,
And earth surprise!

"AS THE HART PANTS AFTER WATER."

[Selected by L. L. D.]

As the hart pants after water,
So my soul pants after thee;
Father, see thy mourning daughter,
Let thy blessing fall on me.
When shall I appear before thee?
Send me comfort from above,
Then with wonder I'll adore thee,
O, my Father, for thy love.

Day and night my tears are streaming,
While they say, "where is your God?"
Let thy countenance be beaming
On my gloomy, rugged road.
O, my God! my soul within me
Surely longeth for thy grace;
Pity me, and sweetly win me,
By the smiling of thy face.

All thy waves are rolling o'er me,
But they cannot drown my soul;
I will set the Lord before me,
Who the billows can control.
I will say to God my Savior,
"Why hast thou forgotten me?"
I repent my sad behavior,
"Let me hide myself in thee."

Words of Jesus.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled."

How oft does the weary pilgrim while toiling on amid the trials and difficulties of this life, "hunger and thirst after righteousness. When the clouds of affliction seem to gather so thick around him, that everything looks dreary; when poverty presses, and friends forsake; when the world frowns, and scoffers grow bold; when the world smiles, and presents its most bewitching charms; when Satan comes with bold attempts, or more subtle art, to tempt his feet from the path of rectitude; when difficulties and crosses arise, and weariness, coldness and stupidity creep round his mind, to deter him from the performance of duty; when he sees the short-comings and missteps of his brethren, and the still greater depravity of his own heart,—'tis then that "he hungers and thirsts after righteosnuess," and raises his heart in agonizing prayer to his Heavenly Father, for that holiness of heart which will enable him to endure all these hardshiphs, when lo! the "Holy Spirit" comes down and fills his mind with sacred peace, and those delightful words of his Savior look precious to him. Oh! that bright promise! how it fills the mind with hope and points to the time when it will be fulfilled.

It cannot be fulfilled in this world, for when he enjoys the most of the love of God in his heart, sin is still with him, although it may seem to be hid for a season, by the manifestations of the Holy Spirit. But let trials and disappointments come, and the stain of sin will soon be seen. No, he cannot be entirely filled with righteousnes, in this world; neither will the depravity of his nature be entirely excluded by it, until "this mortality shall have put on immortality, and this corruption incorruption."

Poor lone pilgrim, art thou toil-worn and weary? do the trials and perplexities of this life, the sin and wickedness around thee, and that of your own heart cause you to "hunger and thirst after righteousness?" Look at that bright promise! read and ponder it over and over again; consider by whom these words were spoken, and for whom they were spoken. Let thy faith rest upon them, and thy hope be brightened by them.

Dost thou mourn over thy present enjoyment when compared with that of some past time? Look, I say, to that promise before referred to, and be thou no more discouraged. Arise! seek thy God in earnest! throw away self and the gratifications of thine own will; give thyself away wholly to Him, and thou shalt have a sufficiency of the "Spirit of God" to sustain and direct, until thou shalt finally overcome, and taste the full salvation of God. Then thou shalt be entirely freed from sin and temptation, and be filled with the righteousness of God.

Religion.

What is it? to oppose everybody that differs with us in opinion and tenet, and feel, if not say it, I am right and everybody else is wrong? Is it to feel that we are a specially favored people, and there is no more light for us nor anybody else, no more to be done in the vineyard of the Lord? I have seen something of such a spirit manifested, but I do not believe it to be of the right kind. I do not believe such a spirit will ever lead us to the portals of immortality. It is not religion, but selfishness—proud presumption—taking the advantage of God's mercies. Humility becomes us very much. Let us abide by the eternal rules of rectitude and try to acquire correct views of the Scriptures of truth, and search for truth as for hid treasures. I do not care whether a brother believes in "Age to come" or not; if he manifest the spirit of Jesus Christ, he is accepted of the Beloved; consequently, I am bound by the rules of the gospel to fellowship him as a brother in Christ, for, says Christ, he that is not against me, is for me. These great "I's" and little "You's" I abhor. O, away with such. Come, let us be good children. Religion does not consist in long faces, but in cheerfulness. Be pleasant, good-natured, courteous, full of love and good works; be kind to those that are not of the same faith with you. "Soft words turn away wrath."

For the Crisis.

"This is not your Rest."

Often has this thought cheered my heart when thinking of the present state of the world, the turmoil, strife and confusion that agitate it almost from one end to the other, both politically and morally, and among all classes of men.

In the political world distress and perplexity are manifest; everything is unsettled and uncertain; a feeling of disquietude and uneasiness is manifest everywhere.

The moral aspect is no more promising; iniquity of all kinds abounds, and is rapidly increasing. Vice, that was once hidden under cover of darkness, now walks abroad at noon day unrebuked. Truly says the prophetic word, "perilous times shall come;" we behold its fulfillment, and were it not that the same Word promises the restitution of all things, and a rest to the children of God, dark indeed would be the future; but while we read of events that were to precede the ushering in of that glorious day, and a heavenly light shows them to be almost all in the past, we know that we are nearing the port of endless rest, and that soon, if faithful, we shall receive the kingdom promised to the little flock.

Having this assurance, we can say, let the wheels of time roll on yet more swiftly, a d though perils thicken round our pathway, if we take heed to the "sure word of prophecy," it will be a light to enable us to see and escape present dangers, and secure an inheritance in that kingdom soon to be established under the whole heaven.

We cannot expect ease or rest in this world, for Christ told his followers—"in the world ye shall have tribulation," and his word has been fulfilled down to this time, and will be to the end; and if we would receive a reward, we must endure to the end of the conflict.

God's people have ever been strangers and pilgrims in this world, looking for rest and reward in the world to come. Abraham could not feel at home, even in the promised land, but was looking forward to a city having foundations for his home and rest; and a countless multitude of his posterity, following his example, confessed themselves strangers and pilgrims on the earth, unmindful of the country they left behind, for they sought a better one. Their faith took hold of the promise of a heavenly land, the fulfillment of which they will soon realize. The millions too, of martyred ones, who were "faithful unto death," willingly gave up their lives in hope of a resurrection to immortality, and "a crown of life."

And now, living here in the "time of the end" where such a flood of light shines on the written word that faith seems almost changed to sight, we can look back through the past history of the church, and think of the multitudes who are sleeping in the dust of the earth, and beneath the rolling waves of the ocean, and thank God that in a little while they are coming up to realize the hope in which they fell asleep. Soon will Machpelah's cave echo the voice of the Archangel, and Abraham will live again to behold the city for which he looked when on the earth, and to receive his promised inheritance.

Job, who has long been waiting for the last tempest of wrath to be past, will hear the call and be ready to answer. David, the singer of Israel, will awake to tune his harp anew, and praise God in sweet immortal strains. Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, all will be there. Many who have been sleeping but a little while, will suddenly awake to life again, and find themselves in the general assembly of the redeemed, and enjoying the promised rest, forever safe from all that could harm or annoy.

O, if we may but be accounted worthy to join that blood-washed company, to see our dear Redeemer and triumphant King, to range the blissful fields of the renewed earth, and know that it will never again be blighted by the curse, it seems as though we shall forget entirely the trials we have passed through in this world; or if remembered at all, it will be to praise Him who saved us from falling.

O for grace to endure a little while longer, until our coming King shall appear to gather his elect, and give them the promised rest.

Fly lingering moments, fly, O fly,
Dear Savior quickly come;
We long to see thee as thou art,
And reach that blissful home.

For the Crisis.

Short Sayings.

When people have peace in their own minds, they delight to promote peace everywhere else.

When persons are at war with themselves, they manifest a disposition to be at war with every one else.

We cannot manifest our love and friendship for people in any way so effectually, as to show them the danger into which their faults and wrongs will conduct them.

Nothing will create affection for persons so effectually as to bestow favors upon them; for it is consistent that we should love those whom we adorn.

If we are supine in the things of God, we are like beggars dying with hunger, refusing to take the trouble to eat when the food is put to their lips.

Corespondence.

For the Crisis.

From Sr. M. E. Dodge.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—I am still striving to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith I have been called, "with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." I expect ere long if faithful, that all the tried, tempted, and wayworn pilgrims will inherit a land where the inhabitants will not say "I am sick." Oh, what a blessed day that [illegible] be, and may the time speedily come [illegible] the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion [illegible] they shall obtain gladness and joy, [illegible] sorrow and mourning shall flee away.

My husband and myself, and another Bro. and Sr. have lately come into the West; we are all alone in the faith, and have no preaching only what we hear through the Crisis; and I feel to thank the Lord that we have such a worthy paper through which we can hear from those of like precious faith. It is a paper which has done me much good in times past, and my prayer is that it may be guided by the spirit of the Lord, and be filled with such food as will keep the children in a waiting position, that they can at any time lift up their heads and rejoice, knowing their redemption draweth nigh. May our dear editor be filled with that Spirit which raised up our Lord Jesus from the dead, that it may quicken him to eternal life at His appearing and kingdom.

I do verily believe the kingdom is soon to be established in all its beauty and holiness; and if we expect to enter therein, we must live pure and holy lives, for none but the pure in heart will see Jesus as he is, and be made like him. Oftentimes, when I look around me and see the world going on in its wickedness, and apparently ignorant of those things which are in reserve for the good and the blest, it makes me feel weary and sad; but, praise the Lord, the time is soon coming when sin and its influences will be destroyed. Now, dear Brn. and Srs., let us, who profess to be looking for the return of the Nobleman, lay aside "the sin that doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith," who is able to save all those who put their trust in him. Let us watch and be sober, putting on the breastplate of righteousness, and for an helmet the hope of salvation; so when the chief Shepherd shall appear, we may receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

From your unworthy sister trying to overcome.

For the Crisis.

From Sr. Nellie Waite.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been for some time seeking an opportunity to say a few words through the Crisis, to the flock of God scattered abroad. Since the first of February last, I have been confined at home by sickness, and have not once had the privilege of meeting at the house of God. I was sick early in the spring, and in April, my husband was taken sick with the brain fever, and inflammatory rheumatism which has rendered him helpless for the last eight months, and he still remains so, with the exception of his left arm. Truly, our afflictions have been severe. His sufferings have been more than tongue can describe; and while passing through trials sore, and grievous to be borne, we have looked forward to that better country where trials will never be known, and where none will suffer from the ravages of disease.

I would say to the afflicted and tried ones, be of good cheer! our disappointments and afflictions, if faithfully endured, will only make us richer in the kingdom of God. My prospect has been in a measure darkened, but through God's mercy I hope yet for former blessings, and if I never realize them, I hope for the greatest of all blessings—an inheritance finally among the saints in light. About four months ago we received your paper through the influence of Bro. Munger, and it has indeed been food for the hungry. It has always strengthened our faith to read the messages it contained; and these, with the encouragement we have received from brethren and friends in our own vicinity, have added much to our consolation.

We would say to the brethren, who love to visit the sick, they will find us on the corner of Public, and Perry Avenue sts., Providence, R. I.

Yours in the blessed hope,

NELLIE WAITE.

Trials of Ministers.

1. When I see a vast work before me, and my health enables me to do but little for souls—I am tried.
2. When I have health and time to labor for God, but the niggardly spirit of men, and of some professors, withholds the necessary support of myself and family, and thus hedges up my way—I am tried.
3. When I see brethren biting and devouring one another, by evil speaking, brawling, and the prospect is they will be consumed one by another—I am tried.
4. When men are so worldly and wicked, that they seldom come to hear God's word, and when they come, hear as though it were only designed to lull them to sleep—I am tried.
5. When I labor long and hard for the good of souls, and see little or no fruit—I am tried.
6. When the fair fruit of ministerial labor is blasted by the introduction of false doctrine, the prevalence of temptation, or an unlucky circumstance—I am tried.
7. When called to part with those whose joys and sorrows have been my own, and who have liberally shared in mine—I am tried.

INJURIES.—If a bee stings you, will you go to the hive and destroy it? Would not a thousand come upon you? If you receive a trifling injury, do not go about the streets proclaiming it, and be anxious to avenge it. Let it drop. It is wisdom to say little respecting the injuries which you may have received.

LINES.

A. B. DRAPER.

Through deep tribulation, sorrow, and pain,
The chosen of Jesus their heritage gain;
The path is quite narrow and strait is the way,
Through perils and dangers which lead us to Day.

Our Leader has triumphed o'er Death and the grave—
He's now interceding, lost sinners to save;
But few now believe the report that is given,
Few will be ready for the kingdom of Heaven.

The love of this world hath long blinded their eyes,
Like Muckrake in Bunyan, they heed not the prize;—
O, let us press onward the prize is in view,
Our precious Redeemer will carry us through.

The children of Zion will soon gather where They'll evermore be as the pure angels are;
Where pride cannot enter to banish all joy,
Nor the slanderer's tongue, our peace to annoy.

Justice and righteousness shall then bear the sway,
And naught that can harm will be feared in that day;
Then let us be patient, the billows may roar,
But never can reach us on that blissful shore.

WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

What dost thou see, lone watcher on the tower?
Is the day breaking? Comes the wished-for hour?
Tell us the signs, and stretch abroad thy hand,
If the bright morning dawns upon the land.

* * * * * * * *

It breaks! it comes! The misty shadows fly!
A rosy radiance gleams upon the sky;
The mountain-tops reflect it calm and clear;
The plain is yet in shade, but day is near!

Pray and Never Faint.

OR, THE EJECTED MINISTER.

Mr. Heywood being brought into the greatest want of the necessaries of life, told his wife, one day, that he would leave with her and the children, three shillings, which was all the money he had in the world, and try to get some work as a day-laborer. After commending them to God, and praying for divine direction, he called at a number of houses the first day, but could find no employment. He spent the first night in a barn, and was engaged in prayer the greater part of it. In the morning he again set out with an empty stomach; and soon arrived at Lord ——'s, where he inquired of the servants if a laborer was wanted?

They answered, "No."

As he was returning, however, from the hall, one of the servant girls said, the shepherd had just before left his place, and if he understood how to take care of the sheep, she thought he might meet with employment. Mr. Heywood immediately engaged in the service; and was informed he was to sleep in a little cot erected for the shepherds, at some distance from the house; but that he was to come, once a day, for what he wanted to the hall.

A few mornings after, two of the servant girls, apparently by accident, rose two hours before the usual time, and as there was no one at hand to fetch up the cows, they went into the field for them. But when they drew near to the shepherd's hut, they were struck with the sound of a man's voice, and, to their no small astonishment, found it was that of the shepherd engaged in prayer to God. At this they were much affected, and, for several weeks, unknown to Mr. Heywood, they used to rise at four o'clock to go to the cot to hear the shepherd pray, which exercise he was wont to be engaged in every morning till five o'clock.

After Mr. Heywood had been in this situation a few weeks, the lady of the family was taken ill, and was expected to die. A clergyman was sent for, but was that moment mounting his horse with a view to spend the day in hunting. However, he sent compliments, and said that he would wait on her ladyship that evening. Lord —— seemed much distressed, and expressed an earnest desire to get some one to pray with his lady.

Then one of the servants, who had listened to Mr. Heywood's prayers, said, "I wish your lordship would consent to let your shepherd be fetched to pray with her ladyship," adding, "for I do not believe that there is a man in the world who can pray like him."

"The shepherd pray? What! can the shepherd pray?"

"Yes, my lord, and I wish you would condescend to let him be sent for, and then you will hear him yourself."

"Mr. Heywood was immediately called, and his lordship asked him if he could pray? to which he replied, "That man who cannot pray, is not fit to live!"

"Well," says his lordship, "follow me and pray for my lady who is at the point of death."

After a few words spoken to her ladyship, Mr. Heywood poured out his soul to that God whose he was, and whom he served, and immediately his prayer was answered. For with astonishment she cried out: "Is this a man or an angel? for I am quite well!"

When prayer was concluded, Lord —— asked him whether he was not one of the ejected ministers? and Mr. Heywood acknowledged that he was. His lordship then declared, that from that moment, instead of being employed as the shepherd of his sheep, he should be the shepherd of his soul, and of the souls of his household.

God the Rewarder.

To look entirely to God for a reward for doing right, requires both faith and great courage. It is difficult for the best of christians to expect no reward of any kind from the world or their fellow men. Some men so much desire the fame of a martyr, that they would almost be willing to die as martyrs for the sake of that fame which follows the heroic death of one who dies for his religion. Men will as soon do right as wrong if they can only be properly rewarded for it. Some men can forego riches, others worldly honors. But few can be found who are willing to forego both; and the instances are very rare of men or even christians who are willing to forego these and at the same time that reputation which their self-denial for the gospel's sake usually brings. In fine who is there who is willing to do right and look alone to God for his reward?

We think it will require a greater force of religious principle than is usually found in most christians to divorce one's self entirely from all expectation of ever receiving reward from our fellow men. To expect through a long life, to do right and at any and every sacrifice, and then not only receive no earthly reward, but have our acts believed by our fellows to be wrong, and also believed to be influenced by the worst of motives, requires that spirit which Paul possessed when he was willing to forego all these and count them but dung that he might win Christ. Paul thought it a very small thing to be judged by man or man's judgment; none of these things moved him. Paul had offered himself a sacrifice to Christ, and was willing to look to Christ alone for his reward, and forego all earthly considerations; hence he said there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness. Here was true moral heroism.

Many youth are ambitious to stand high in the estimation of their fellow-men. And to attain this they would devote themselves to all those noble and high-minded pursuits from which such an estimate is usually attained. But where is the youth who is ambitious to stand high in the estimation of his God? Who is willing to devote his life and energies to the great cause of truth, and receive for it simply the approbation of his God?

The true spirit of christianity is found only in him who is willing to make the sacrifice. The effort in this 19th century is to substitute sham for reality; that inasmuch as the original cost of a bogus metal is infinitely less, could it only be made to appear as well, such an appearance would be a desideratum. To that degree has this order of things extended, that the process has become infinitely popular, and he may be assured that he is engaged in a thankless undertaking, who tears aside the garments of sham in which things are enveloped, and lays bare the naked truth. Wherever and however men have set up their images, (the objects of their worship,) their wrath is sure to wax hot against him who dares tear them down.

Whoever, then, is engaged in the cause of truth may be sure that he will be hated. "He that would live godly must suffer persecution," but let not the godly one hope to obtain the reputation of a martyr; if he hope this he ceases to be godly, and will surely be disappointed.

But are not the rewards of God sufficient? Is it not reward enough to receive the approbation of a righteous God, and be participator in those joys which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard?—Chris. Phil.

Comforts of Ministers.

1. When I see the work of God going on extensively and gloriously, by means of God's appointing, and in his own way,—I am comforted.
2. When I get food and covering for myself and mine, though with my own hands, and know that God approves and blesses me—I am comforted.
3. When now and then a sinner comes to God, though many stray from Him—I am comforted.
4. When I have love in my own heart, and see it in a few others—I am comforted.
5. When I consider that faithful, persevering labor for souls is never without fruit in some way, sooner or later—I am comforted.
6. When I consider that some fruit of my trials and deprivations will appear in everlasting glory—I am comforted.
7. When I anticipate meeting the saints, with whom I have labored, suffered, rejoiced and wept on earth, in the eternal kingdom above (in the new creation)—I am comforted.

Self-righteous.

It is no uncommon thing for men to flatter themselves that God cannot be displeased with them because they have omitted to do a great many bad deeds, which they would have done, had they not been restrained by the fear of the law or of public opinion. The soundness of such morality is very well exhibited in Lessing's parable of "The wolf on his deathbed."

"A wolf lay at his last gasp, and was reviewing his past life. 'It is true,' said he, 'I am a sinner, but yet, I hope, not one of the greatest. I have done evil, but I have also done much good. Once, I remember, a bleating lamb that had strayed from the flock, came so near me, that I might easily have throttled it; but I did it no harm.'

"I can testify to all that," said his friend the fox, who was helping him to prepare for death. "I remember perfectly all the circumstances. It was just at the time when you were so dreadfully choked with that bone in your throat."—Ex.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Bible Women.

WHAT POSITION SHOULD BIBLE WOMEN OCCUPY IN THE CHURCH OF GOD?

BY B. MATHEWSON.

No. III.

They should endeavor to fill that situation in which the providences of God may have placed them according to the best of their ability, and use those talents or gifts with which their Creator has endowed them, for the edification of the church, whether it be prophecy, exhortation, or any other gift. 1 Cor. 14: 12, 26.

To edify, says Mr. Webster, is to build up in moral and religious knowledge, faith, holiness, &c. That there have been WOMEN from the time of Moses until the present, possessing the gift of prophecy, the abundance of scriptural examples together with profane history and our own observation demonstrate beyond dispute. But ere we proceed farther let us settle what the gift of prophecy is. Says Mr. Webster, "it is to foretell future events, to preach, to instruct in religious subjects, to exhort," &c. Though this is not inspiration, yet we shall find this explanation quite in harmony with inspired Apostles. Says Paul, "he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort." Says John, "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." That the office of a prophet and a prophetess is the same, the Bible, lexicographers, and common sense, readily concede. The only distinction being the sex, one is a male the other a female. That the mention of female prophets is abundant under the sanction of high heaven, both in the Old and New Testament, no Bible reader will pretend to deny. The question now in point is, shall the gifts of prophecy and exhortation be used for the edification of the church when found invested in the female sex? Or shall they be carefully concealed in a napkin and deposited for safe keeping, only to be brought to light at that day when requisition for the proper improvement of each talent shall be made by the great Donor himself. Luke 19: 21.

Let us understand how the church came in possession of the several gifts mentioned in 1 Cor. chap. 12: 14. Did each individual take the one they most admired, that would be most agreeable and contribute most to their individual happiness? Nay, verily. Hear the language of inspiration: "For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit;" also that prophecy, gifts of healing, &c., are bestowed by the same agent; "the self-same spirit dividing to every man severally as he will," and not according to the fancy or desire of the individual! Question. Did the Spirit of God make a mistake when it conferred the gift of prophecy on Miriam, Huldah, Deborah, Anna, Phebe or Philip's four daughters and many other Bible women as well as those of more modern date? Perhaps some will feel shocked at the broaching of so blasphemous a question, but I do insist that either the Spirit did make a mistake or females are to use those gifts graciously bestowed on them by the Spirit for the edification of the church. Because, according to the scriptures, it is never allowable for any to possess talents unimproved.

Yet objections exist in the minds of some against woman's preaching. And what moral or religious subject does not meet with objections? But the great and only standard by which to try doctrine or character is the scriptures or truth. Yes, says an objector, "scripture is what I shall use to confront the public speaking of females." In face of so many females occupying the public office of a prophet, they affirm that at least the New Testament prohibits women exercising any public gift; that it commands them to observe profound silence in the church, urging for proof, 1 Cor. 14: 34. This is the text I shall use to show that the apostle referred back to the "law," to show that the same customs and regulations were to be observed relative to this matter in the christian that had previously existed in the Jewish church; which gave man the right to dispute with his fellow man in public, but forbade the same to woman for several reasons which we will consider hereafter. As 1 Cor. 14: 34, and 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12, are the principal, and I believe the only scriptural objections urged against the public religious labor of females, I fear not to look them fairly in the face, feeling confident that the scriptures do not contradict themselves, but they form a strait and perfect chain when every link is properly placed. We will first look at 1 Cor. 14: 34. "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law." That the apostle here has no reference to preaching, praying, singing or exhorting in the church, (which is an assembly of believers without regard to number, whether it be two or three, or a hundred;) can be fully substantiated. That he here refers to a particular kind of speaking altogether unlike the exercising of either of the aforementioned gifts can be fairly shown to any candid believer in the scriptures. This peculiar speaking in the church, which inspiration here forbids christian women, is the interrupting of a public speaker by asking questions, making objections, altercatings, refuting, &c.; not exhorting or imparting information, but asking questions to obtain it, which is made plain by the following verse:

"And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." We know that the object of women's prophesying, exhorting, or praying in the church, is not to "learn," but to edify the church. But when women do not perfectly comprehend a public speaker, that they should state their objections and ask for information at home, and not in a public meeting, is the gist of the apostle's prohibition in the aforementioned texts. According to Dr. Adam Clarke, it was both lawful and customary for a man who did not understand a public speaker to ask questions, or if the argument adduced appeared faulty, to state objections, &c.; but for a woman to dispute in a public meeting with a man gave them too bold an appearance, and if both sexes were allowed this privilege it would be likely to produce confusion by interrupting the speaker too often, and as man is the head it is a position altogether most proper for him to occupy.

In the last clause of the 36th ver., the apostle refers to the law to show that the same regulations were to be observed relative to the public labor of females in the christian that had existed in the Jewish church. If then the "law" is to afford us an example in this matter, let us for a moment take a retrospective glance at it. And what do we find under the law? We discover an abundance of female prophets; (please keep the signification of prophecy before the mind,) woman acknowledged by God as a leader of his people; another occupying the office of chief magistrate over the whole church of God, and filling that office in a manner that did great credit to herself and people, and gained the approbation of Heaven; a third giving counsel to the High Priest in a time of great emergency, and much more that goes to prove that woman was not under the law to restrict any talent she could use for the edification or benefit of the church of God.

A few words relative to the prophetess Huldah's giving counsel to the High Priest with others at their request. It is evident that neither the King, Scribe, or High Priest manifested misgiving relative to the receiving instruction from a female prophet! And they were persons who would be likely to understand the "sphere" of woman! The King Josiah was one of the most godly of Judah's Kings, and very zealous in maintaining the law of God. While repairing the Temple under his reign, there was found a lost roll of God's law upon which the pious king hearing read was much distressed, because his people had grievously transgressed the same. In deep anxiety for the spiritual welfare of his people, he besought Shaphan, the Scribe, Hilkiah the High Priest, with other important personages to inquire of the Lord for him. They immediately repair to Huldah, the prophetess, who dwelt in a college at Jerusalem to inquire what was to be done at this trying moment. Without hesitation she imparts the necessary instruction, which appears perfectly satisfactory, and they brought the word to King Josiah as being the word of the Lord, as the sequel proved it to be. Please read the full account in 2 Kings 22: and 2 Chron. 35. Thus much for the prohibition in Cor.

We will now introduce 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12. "Let the women learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." Is it not evident from the introduction of this subject that it is a perfect parallel with Cor. referring to christian females congregated in a public assembly for the purpose of learning? that while thus situated, they are not to teach, as the Syriac hath it, and 'be assuming over the man;" even if conscious of superior light on the subject, they may not impart it to man at such a moment, but manifest submission by silence, because to dictate or "teach" a man thus situated would give her an arrogant appearance over man, which constitutes the chief prohibition in the text. To prove that man should be first or head, two reasons are here adduced, viz.: that he was formed first, and that the woman was deceived; therefore, she is to remain second in the scale until the restitution. But because "the husband is the head of the wife," does that prove she is not to be a help-meet in prophecy, exhortation and prayer, for the edification of the church? nay, verily; in the chapter containing the last mentioned prohibitory scripture, the apostle would have both men and women pray "everywhere," lifting up holy hands, &c.

Those who believe the prohibition of the apostle binds woman to strictly observe silence in the church, should recollect such prohibition would debar them from singing; and if they ever make melody in their hearts unto the Lord by uttering musical modulations of the voice, they must do it at home or at least when they are not congregated with the church! Yes, if silence in the church at all times is the meaning of the apostle, then females may not participate in singing; the music of their voices must be hushed in the sanctuary, for the apostle recognizes this gift as "speaking," and that too in a manner imparting instruction. Read his language verbatim:—"Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. Speaking to yourselves in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord."

When persons particularize the New Testament as emphatically restricting the public labor of females, they forget (if they ever knew) that the scriptures would have been broken had woman refused to exercise the gift of prophecy under the new dispensation! Look, if you please, at the day of Pentecost, and tell me how Joel's prophecy could have been fulfilled if woman had been silent?

What Bible reader and believer can but marvel, to hear the great apostle to the Gentiles quoted as authority for allowing women, yea commanding them to bury their talent instead of using it for the edification of the church, when he evinced such solicitude not only to have them help in the church by using all their gifts, but manifested an interest to have their personal appearance becoming and prepossessing, probably that their gift might be duly appreciated. For a prophetess, or a private woman, possessing christianity to appear in public slothfully or immodestly attired, would not honor God, as it would have an appearance of evil contrary to that neatness and industry characterizing a christian woman. Though "gold, pearls, and costly array" are plainly forbidden her, yet propriety and good order should be observed in the dress of Bible women, for in so doing they honor God. Why will persons, professing to believe the apostle Paul was inspired by God when he gave a standing rule for the personal appearance of females when engaged in praying and prophecying in the church, make him plainly contradict himself by saying he strictly commanded such not to speak at all? Is it not by far, more consistent with Bible and common sense that it was on the particular occasion before referred to he commanded females to observe silence, than that he should forbid in one place what he recommends in another? Let us be careful to preserve the jewel of consistency!

The Gospel.

(Concluded.)

A justifying faith more peculiarly signifies a hearty approbation of and consent to this method of salvation by the righteousness of Jesus Christ. To believe the gospel as a true history; to believe it as a true theory with languor and indifference is not enough. This, indeed, is the common, popular faith of our country, and it generally prevails where the profession of christianity has become fashionable; but, alas! it is not that faith by which we can be justified and saved. A hearty approbation of the way of salvation through Christ; a willing, delightful dependence of the whole soul upon his righteousness; a free, vigorous choice of it, and a cheerful consent to all the terms of the gospel, this is essential to such a faith. It is the greatest inconsistency to suppose that it is sufficient to believe the gospel with a lukewarm indifference, or a careless assent, or that our faith in Christ should be merely a constrained necessity. He is the beloved Son of God in whom he is well pleased; and we must be well pleased with him too, before we can expect salvation by him. To receive a scheme which God had so much at heart; a scheme, for the accomplishment of which Jesus bled and died; a scheme on which our everlasting salvation depends, and without which we are undone forever; I say, to receive such a scheme as this with a languid assent,—what profaneness and impiety! Hence, it follows, that faith supposes the supernatural illumination of the mind and renovation of the heart by the power of divine grace. Alas! while Nature is left in its original darkness and depravity, it has no such views of the way of salvation through Christ, nor any such delight in it; and there are many, I fear, even many professors of religion, that secretly wonder what peculiar wisdom and grace there should be in the gospel, and why God should commend it so highly, and saints should be in raptures when they speak of it; for they can discover no such blessedness in it; their hearts are cold and careless about it.

The way of salvation through the righteousness of Christ, is something quite unnatural and mortifying to the sinful sons of men; they have no relish for it, nor aptitude or inclination to seek salvation in this way; it is much more natural for them to seek some other, though it should be much more painful. They will submit to the heaviest penances, afflict themselves by fasting, perform all the duties of religion in order to work out a righteousness of their own, and they are as fond of the covenant of works to obtain life, as if it had never been broken; but tell them of a free salvation purchased by Jesus Christ, and offered in the gospel; tell them that it is only on account of his righteousness that they can be pardoned, and that all their personal good works, however necessary for other purposes, must all stand for nothing in this affair, they are amazed and wonder what you mean; it is strange, unintelligible doctrine to them, and their hearts rise against it. Hence, many a believer has found it was easier for him to work up his heart to anything than to believe in Jesus Christ, and that God alone could enable them to do this; but when God works in him the work of faith with power, he opens his understanding to see a surprising glory in the mediatorial scheme of salvation, and gives him a heart to relish it; and without this, no recommendations of this plan, no speculative conviction in its favor, can gain the cordial approbation of the sinner. I shall now endeavor, in a few words, to point out the peculiar place which faith has in our justification.

We shall observe then, that as the righteousness of Christ is the peculiar ground of our justification, so the grace of faith has a peculiar reference to that righteousness. It is as it were the bent of the soul toward that peculiar object. Repentance has sin for its object; love, the intrinsic glory and communicated goodness of the divine nature; charity and justice have reference to man, and none of these objects are the proper grounds of our justification; consequently, none of these graces which terminate upon them can have any direct concurrence in it. But our justifying righteousness is the immediate, direct object of faith, therefore, faith must have a special instrumentality in our justification. And from what has been said about the nature of faith, there appears to be a peculiar propriety in conferring this honor upon it. It is certainly fit we should believe in Him who is our Savior, and it would be absurd to apply to him in that character while we suspected him to be an impostor. It is fit we should approve of the righteousness by which we are justified, and heartily consent to that scheme by which we are saved; and on the other hand, it would be highly preposterous to believe that we should be justified and saved by a Savior in a way we despised. These considerations show not only the wisdom but the grace of the constitution. Approve of the Savior, and you shall be saved; trust in his righteousness, and you shall be justified; consent to the covenant of grace, and you shall inherit all its blessings. And can we desire lower or easier terms? This approbation, this trust, this consent, is faith. Now we can see the peculiar place it has in our justification.

Let us proceed a step farther, and we shall see that no righteousness but that which the gospel reveals is sufficient for the justification of a sinner. In order to form a right judgment of this matter, we must place ourselves in a proper situation, and view it in the light of God's word. Is a blind, self-flattering sinner, who does not see the strictness of the law and justice of God, or who secretly murmurs at it as too precise and rigid, who does not see the infinite evil of sin, but loves it, indulges in it, and is expert in making excuses for it, and diminishing its aggravations; who forms maxims of the divine government from the procedure of weak mortals in human governments; who compares himself with his fellow sinners and not with the divine purity, and the holy law of God; whose conscience is secure; who places the tribunal of his Supreme Judge far out of sight, and forms his notions of his government, not from his word, but from the flattering suggestions of his own deceitful heart; I say, is such a blind sinner a competent judge in this matter? Is he likely to form a just estimate of the evils of sin, and of that righteousness which will be sufficient for his acquittal before a just and righteous God? By no means. But it is easy for such a one to start objections against this method of justification, and offer many plausible arguments in favor of his own righteousness to extenuate his own guilt. But let him be awakened to see himself and his sins in a proper light, and let him see the extent and purity of the divine law, and make that the only test of his good works; let him realize the divine tribunal, and place himself in the immediate presence of his Judge; let him be put in this situation, and then the controversy will soon be at an end. Then all his high thoughts of his own righteousness are mortified; excuses for his sins are silenced, and he sees his absolute need of a perfect and divine righteousness, and the utter insufficiency of his own. If ever we have placed ourselves in this posture, we have done forever with all disputes on this point; for we must have seen, that no righteousness but that of Christ was sufficient for us.

Let me here introduce a passage from an eminent reformer who had long groped for salvation among the doctrines of merit in the church of Rome, but could find no relief till the gospel discovered this righteousness to him. "It is a very easy thing," says he, "to amuse ourselves with arguments for the sufficiency of good works for justification, while we are ingeniously trifling in schools and colleges of learning; but when we come into the presence of God, we have done with all such amusements: for there it is a very serious affair, and not a ludicrous logomachy, or an idle dispute about words. There, there we must place ourselves, if we would profitably inquire after the true righteousness, and how we shall answer our celestial Judge when he shall call us to an account. Let us represent this Judge to ourselves, not as our fancies would imagine him to be, but such as he is really represented in the Scriptures; as one by whose brightness the stars are turned into darkness; by whose power the mountains are melted; at whose anger the earth trembles; by whose wisdom the wise are caught in their own craftiness; before whose purity all things are turned into pollution; whose justice even angels are not sufficient to bear; who will by no means clear the guilty; whose vengeance, when once it is kindled, burns and penetrates to the lowest hell; let him, I say, sit Judge on the actions of men, and who can securely place himself before his throne of judgment? Lord, if thou mark iniquity, who, O Lord, shall stand? All must be condemned, and unavoidably perish. 'Shall mortal man be more just than God? Shall a man be more pure than his Maker? Behold he put no trust in his servants, and his angels he charged with folly; how much less in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust, who are crushed before the moth.' Job 4: 17–19. God cannot be appeased even with angelic holiness, if their works should be brought to the impartial seal of justice."

And now, with a deep impression of this, with a deep sense of our sins and of the strictness of the divine law, and placing ourselves as in the presence of our righteous Judge, let us inquire what righteousness is sufficient for our justification before him? It may be of service to observe, that there is something singular in the phraseology of Scripture on this point, and different from what is used in other cases of the same general nature. To receive a pardon is a very different thing, in common language, from being justified. When a man is pardoned, it supposes that he has [illegible] the law but that the law is dispensed [illegible] and the penalty not executed; but [illegible]

he is justified, it supposes that he has a righteousness equal to the demands of the law, and therefore that he may be acquitted according to justice. These, you see, are very different things, but in the case before us they are happily united. The sinner is said to be pardoned and justified at once, and the reason of this unusual language is this; the sinner has broken the divine law and has no obedience to answer its demands, therefore, his being freed from sin and the threatened punishment is in this respect a gracious, unmerited pardon. But, by faith he has received the righteousness of Christ, and God imputes it to him as though it were his own, and his righteousness answers all the requisitions of the law, and it has no charge against him, so that in this respect he is justified or pronounced righteous according to law and justice. Hence, it follows from the very meaning of the terms used in this case, that no righteousness can justify us in the sight of God but that which is equal to all the demands of the divine law. It must be perfect and conformed throughout to that standard, for if it be not, we cannot be pronounced righteous in the eye of the law, but the law charges and condemns us as transgressors, and its sentence lies in full force against us. It was from such premises as these that St. Paul reasoned, when he drew this conclusion—"that by the deeds of the law no flesh shall be justified," and that we are "justified by faith without the deeds of the law." Rom. 3: 20, 28. He grants that if any can produce a perfect righteousness of their own, they shall obtain life by the law. "The law," says he, "is not of faith; but the man that doeth them, shall live in them." Gal. 3: 12. But then he proves, that all the sons of men, both Jew and Gentile, have sinned (Rom. 3: 10–19,) and consequently have no righteousness agreeable to the demands of the law. He stops every mouth and brings in the whole world as guilty before God, and hence infers the impossibility of justification by the works of the law; and then, naturally introduces another righteousness equal to all the demands of the law. "But now," says he, "the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, . . . even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all and upon all them that believe; . . . . being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God has set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins, ... that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Rom. 3: 21–26.

O glorious scheme of salvation! O complete, divine righteousness! A righteousness by which Jew and Gentile, the greatest sinner as well as the least may be made divinely righteous, and completely justified, even at the bar of a holy and just God! There let us fix our trust and renounce our own righteousness as filthy rags, for this will be found to be our only defence at the tribunal of the Supreme Judge.

It is the gospel only that reveals such a righteousness as is sufficient for the justification of a sinner. The Jewish religion, as I have observed before, gave several intimations of this method of justification by the righteousness of another. There were many prophecies and types of this import, and this was undoubtedly the original design of sacrifices; for it is quite unaccountable, that ever man should imagine that he could appease the wrath of God, and procure the pardon of sin by offering to him sacrifices of brutes in his stead, unless we suppose that God did at first institute this method, to signify the way in which he would be reconciled to sinners by the suffering and death of another, as a sacrifice substituted in their room. This institution seems to have been immediately after the fall of man, when the first beam of gospel light blessed our world, in that promise,—"the seed of the woman," &c; for we are told that God made coats of skins and with them covered our first parents. Gen. 3: 21. Animal food was not allowed to man till after the flood, and consequently those beasts, whose skins were used for this purpose, were not killed for that use; and we cannot suppose that they died naturally so soon after their creation. It is therefore most probable that Adam had killed them for sacrifice, and that God had commanded him to do this immediately upon the promulgation of that promise, to typify the manner of its accomplishment, namely, by the sacrifice of Christ in the fullness of time. This practice we find continued by Cain and Abel; and thus Noah consecrated the new world after the flood. Gen. 8: 20. JOHN.

"What is the Soul?"

No. III.

In answering the above question of our correspondent, we first gave a theological and secondly a Bible answer. We have found that the primary use of the word soul applies to the whole man, as in Gen. 2: 7.

Secondarily, nephesh, the word rendered soul in the Old Testament, is translated mind, as we often put the mind for the whole man; for instance, we say,—"the great minds of the age," meaning they are great persons in that particular.

Mind is defined to mean,—"intention, purpose, design." Nephesh is also rendered will, Ezek. 16: 27; pleasure, Ps. 105: 2; own, Prov. 14: 10; appetite, Eccl. 6: 7; heart, Ex. 23: 9; lust, Ps. 78: 18; hearty, Prov. 27: 9; discontented, 1 Sam. 22: 2; tablet, Isa. 3: 20; greedy, Isa. 56: 11; and desire, Eccl. 6: 9. It is rendered heart 14, and mind 15 times. It is translated mind in Gen. 23: 8. "And he (Abraham) communed with them, (the children of Heth) saying, if it be your mind that I should bury my dead out of my sight, hear me." Again, the Apostle says in Acts 14: 2, "the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren." Heb. 12: 3. "For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." The Greek word in these passages rendered mind, is the same and only word that is translated soul in the New Testament.

Can we for a moment suppose that the word mind in these passages is something separate from the man, or in other words,—"the real man" who can act independently of a material organism, and is immortal? We might as well claim that the "will," "appetite," "desire," &c., are real men, as to say it of the mind; for they are all from the same Hebrew word, nephesh. These are but attributes of the man, and are frequently personified. If the mind is the immortal part, in what consists the immortality of the idiot who has no mind? Many beasts have more mind than some men, then it follows that they also are immortal, for the fact is incontrovertible, that beasts think. Says Dr. John Mason Good, in one of his lectures before the Surry institution in London, when speaking of matter,—"there does not seem to be any absurdity in supposing it may be capable of thought." Then it follows that the action of a material organism produces thought, and when that organism ceases to act then the being stops thinking; hence David says, speak of man, "his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts PERISH." Ps 146: 4. Man cannot think after his breath leaves him, any more than he could before the Lord breathed it into his nostrils. The giving of the breath of life to men makes them living beings, and when taken away, "they die, and return to their dust," or in other words to the grave, where "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom." Hence it follows, if the mind is the soul, or "real man," he perishes the day he dies, stops thinking, and is put with others who "know not anything." If a passage can be found in the Bible which teaches that the dead do know something, then we should see cause to change our mind, but we have not found one, except what Satan said to Eve,—"ye shall not surely die."

It is often said of the old,—"his body has outlived his mind," i. e., his physcal powers are good, but his mental have ceased to act; while in others certain faculties of the mind are dead, while others remain active; in others, some of the physical organs are completely paralyzed, while others are healthy and active. If the mind is the "real man," and a part of God, as many claim, it is very strange that a part of our Creator should become deranged, and another part be an idiot!

The Voice of the Church.

The Episcopal Bishop of Vermont thus writes in relation to the above mentioned Millennial History:

"REV. D. T. TAYLOR. Dear Sir:—Your request to have a copy of my two discourses on the Second Advent, printed in 1843, is very cheerfully complied with. . . . I have to thank you or your publisher for a copy of your late work, 'The Voice of the Church,' which seems to be a very elaborate and well arranged statement of authorities upon that highly important subject. My other engagements have not allowed of my reading it with the care it deserves, but from the hasty glance which I have been able to give it, I doubt not that it is well adapted to be eminently useful and acceptable.

With my best wishes for your full success in your labors for the cause of divine truth, and with much regard, I remain,

Your friend and servant in Christ,

JOHN H. HOPKINS.

Burlington, Vt., Dec. 6, 1856."

CORRECTION.—The obituary we published last week should read,—Sister Hannah Allen, wife of Bro. Wm. Allen.

From the New Church Repository, (Swedenborgian,) edited by Prof. George Bush.

"THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH.—BY D. T. TAYLOR.—This is the first of our acquaintance with Mr. Taylor, but from his frequent quotations from certain critical and prophetical works of our own, written under 'the dim religious light' of a former dispensation, it would appear that he is not quite so much of a stranger to us. We shall be shy of intruding ourselves upon his notice from our present theological and biblical stand-point, as we should be apt to be regarded as an exegetical renegade from our former positions, and thus lose caste in his estimation, without at the same time rendering him any essential service. But to the book: it is for its object well done. It comprises, in condensed form, indications of all the valuable literature on the theme of the Second Advent in its Millenarian relations. His own opinions lean, evidently, in the direction of the speedy personal advent and reign of Christ on the earth, and it is idle to say that he has not succeeded in proving that the 'Voice of the Church,' as uttered for centuries through her most noted organs, has taught the pre-millenarian theory which he maintains, rather than its opposite as set forth by Whitby, and the mass of commentators since his day. But alas! Cowper's line will occur: 'Each claiming truth, and truth disclaiming both.'"

The above, from the pen of the learned Prof. Bush, is an impartial testimony, for he takes neither of the views alluded to,—he being a Swedenborgian. Hence, his testimony to the character of the "Voice of the Church" is all the more valuable. The work is for sale at this office, and by the publisher, H. L. Hastings, Room 49, Arcade Gallery, Rochester, N. Y. Price $1.00; postage 18 cts. H. L. H.

Who will not be a Christian?

This is the most important question that was ever propounded to this judgment-bound world! Think of the consequences that are pending on its decision. It is deciding for or against our eternal welfare; it is deciding our destiny forever; it is a decision for life or death. And yet God has seen fit to leave this important decision for us to make. Hear Him: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." "And ye will not come to me that ye might have life." "And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Why is it, that a decision is not made at once by those that profess to believe the Bible? They have no promise of to-morrow. Why procrastinate until it is too late? O, how many will stand in the judgment disappointed, condemned, doomed to eternal destruction for not choosing life in mercy's hour! Let us make no delay in securing the approving smiles of Him who alone is able to save.

The love of this fading, sickly, dying world, blinds the minds of thousands while they unconsciously rush on to the brink of ruin. Poor deluded mortals! Part with all the riches, honors, and joys of the world to come for a few days of anticipated pleasure here. And can it be that any will be guilty of such folly, when such rich provision has been made, and an invitation given to all? O, vain man! thou art beside thyself! Leave thy death-doomed course and become a christian hero and share in the blessings of Paradise restored; then tell us if thou hast not been profited by thy warfare here! Let myriads of years roll their rounds, and sorrow's tear thou hast never shed, but upon thine immortal brow is still engraven—life, joy, and happiness are here.

Pride, another insurmountable obstacle in the way of becoming a christian, has its devoted adherents at the risk of losing life eternal, joy and glory ineffable! The fiat of Jehovah has gone forth against the proud. "Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud; for the Lord hath spoken." If this command is disregarded and we indulge in pride, inevitable destruction will be our destiny, for God has declared that "all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." But the question may be asked, who are free from this destructive sin? Let the unerring word answer: "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God. . . . Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth;" "But now being made free from sin and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." Various are the ways that this sin develops itself—too numerous for me to mention. But rest assured, if we are not willing to submit to the requirements of our Heavenly Father, pride has a place in our hearts. And the only way to overcome this sin is by entire submission to His will. "For God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble." "Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time."

But the inquiry may be made, how shall we become christians and live in the favor of God? The Savior said—"I come to do thy will, O God." "For whosoever shall do the will of God the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother." Then if we would become Christ-like we must do the will of God; believe, repent, and be baptized. Have we done this? If not shall we call ourselves christians? Let us take the word of God for our guide for a christian character, and then learn the terms of discipleship. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." "And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Can a man be a christian and love this world? "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Let us examine our own hearts and see if we love its pleasures, honors or riches, lest we be taken in its snare and forfeit eternal life. Can a man be a christian and lay up treasures here? "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." . . . For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." "Shall we talk about a home in the kingdom of God and live in the violation of these commands? I fear we may repent when it is too late! We see, then, that christianity does not consist altogether in talking about getting home, and being in the kingdom of God; but in doing right here. Do we hate our brother, or sister, and profess to love God? "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." Do we talk about having the spirit of God? If so, we have its fruits; "for the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth; proving what is acceptable unto the Lord. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

Who then will be a christian and enter upon the warfare? To such we bid you a hearty welcome upon the battle-field. The world, the flesh and the Devil are our opponents, and the battle may seem severe, but let us take the whole armor of God,—"above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." Let us prove our allegiance to the King of Kings by standing to our posts in these last hours of peril, and soon the conflict will be over, the Conqueror comes, the dead are raised, death destroyed, the earth renovated, and the christian's triumph begins. Amen. S. G. MATHEWSON.

Own Up.

"What! to that child?" Yes, to that child. You was mistaken—the child was right, and all your hard words were wrong, and out of place, if indeed they ever were right, or in place. You see you are wrong, now just go and own up, and ask forgiveness. "What ask forgiveness of my own child?" Yes, to be sure; who else can forgive a wrong done to him? "Well, but I must maintain my parental authority, and dignity." Parental pride and obstinacy, I suppose you mean! A fig for your "dignity," if it puts you up so high that you can't confess a fault. "Well, but my children are under my government." So was the black man's pig under his, and he thought it was a pity if he couldn't whip his own pig, that he had fed and raised himself; even if the poor pig didn't deserve a whipping at all.

Now look here, my good friend, Mr. Scowl; isn't right the basis of all proper law? Have you then a right to do wrong even to your own children? If you accuse them wrongfully, and reproach them unjustly, is that right? "Why, no; and I am sorry that I said what I did." Well, just subdue a little of your infernal pride, that turns angels into devils, and go and tell your boy so. Respect you! I think he will respect you quite as much when acknowledging a wrong, as when persisting in it. Mr. Scowl, what's the reason you haven't confidence in the piety and honesty of your neighbor, Mr. Snooks? Simply because he did wrong? "O no; to err is human." What then? "Why, because he wouldn't own up, when he saw that he was wrong." Exactly so, and that is just what you are trying to avoid doing in the present instance.

Let me tell you, my dear Mr. Scowl, that if you want to convince your son that you neither know, nor care for the difference between good and evil; if you want him to lose all confidence in your sound judgment, and in your moral honesty, you have only to take your present course. If you think you can convince him that you are perfectly infallible, he may then respect you. But if you wish to win the respect of his reason, and thus obtain his confidence and respect, why, do right. And if you err sometimes, then confess it to son or to servant, as readily as to a king. I tell you, Mr. Scowl, you are very ready to say—"I beg your pardon," when you have trod on a neighbor's toe; why not do the same when you have wronged your own flesh and blood? Now, my advice is, that you go and tell that boy that you was mistaken; that you are sorry; that you desire to be forgiven; that you mean to do better, and that you will try not only to tell him what he ought to do, but that by the grace of God you will try to show him how it is done.

Now, Mr. Scowl, I think you will find this plan to work well. Just try it, will you, eh? Go and own up! H. L. H.

Duties of Children.

BY ZETA.

No. I.

Each and every class of mortals is so connected with others as to originate special relative duties. The scriptures are decisive and clear in stating our obligations to one another, in the several qualifications of the human family. Not the least among them is the duty of children to their parents. It is true that this duty is being enforced by parents, tutors, ministers, lecturers, writers and others. It is also an admitted fact by all, that children owe obedience to their parents; still, while it is as clear a fact that a large majority of children, and large children especially, disobey their parents with impunity, it is a subject worthy of attention. My remarks in these articles, will not reach the eye of many small children, yet if they are worth anything, some parents will read them to small children. But there are many old children, and large children; some of them need to think more of their duties to their parents, and superiors. There are, it is true, some bright examples, some noble specimens of good, faithful, obedient children; ornaments they are, to whatever society, or family they belong, whether rich or poor, black or white, in the city or in the country, among the more accomplished, or in the secluded retirements of the forests.

But children are often thoughtless in regard to their best interests. They are often too wise in their own eyes. Parents often neglect to train children as they ought, and some take improper measures to train them. Children of good sense can soon learn to think whether it is best for them to obey their parents. They should learn that they are the rightful governors and should be obeyed. God has constituted this relationship and given a law to control it, so that if parents are incompetent to command, or negligent in training, the child is made responsible as a rational, intelligent being. The Lord has endowed us with a capacity to learn, think, judge and obey the law existing between the child and parent. He or she who neglects or refuses, after a good degree of development of mind, to obey the parent's requirements, dictated in reason, is culpable, and meets the just displeasure of God, and in due time reaps the disapprobation of all good society. I do not know of ever having seen a great man, a good, truly wise, and useful man or woman, who lived a life of disobedience to their parents when with them. Some may have done so, by hearty repentance and great grace from God, to break down and subdue a wayward and stubborn will, grown old and strong in disobedient habits.

In the parable of the sower, (Mark 4: 3) some hearts are compared to "the wayside," "stony ground," or "among thorns." It is my conviction that these are they who lived in disrespect, unfaithfulness, and disobedience to their parents, and consequently imbibe almost every other evil habit which ruins the mind, so that there is no room for goodness.

Who among our children does not cherish the thought that some day, or time in this life, they will choose "the good way," receive the word of the Lord, and be a christian, and be saved in a better world? It may be that many wish to be in advanced age first; some, doubtless, expect to obtain a death-bed repentance, or some miraculous thing to make them christians. Let such remember that the ground must be prepared, so as to be "good ground" to receive seed and produce fruit. Or, to speak plainly, the heart must be cultivated, broken, subdued, and trained to obedience through crosses, disappointments and losses, by the parents, or tutors, that it may be "a good and honest heart" which will, when the word of God falls into it, "bring forth fruit to perfection." But some will meet this idea by saying, "The preparation of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue is from the Lord. This is an important fact, and while the Lord always works by means, He has chosen to discipline the young heart by training it in the school of the parents, whom he commands to "train them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord;" and commands children to obey their parents, that their hearts may be thus fitted to receive and obey the law of God.

Come, children, let us read what the Lord has said to you; perhaps you have heard it often, and learned to repeat it at Sabbath School, and yet it may be you do not obey it. Hear. "Honor thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee, that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." Deut. 5: 16. Paul, the great apostle of Jesus Christ, reckons this the same as a command to obey. Hear him:—"Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. Honor thy father and mother, (which is the first commandment with promise.") Eph. 6: 1, 2. We must learn to honor our parents or we shall not love to obey them.

Hear a word on the other side of this question. "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother; and all the people shall say, Amen." Deut. 27: 16. A fearful thing, children, to disregard the order of God, and to choose our own ways, refusing to give honor to our parents, and to obey them. God's curses are upon such as lightly esteem them. Listen, dear children, to parental instruction; do not be led off from it by the bad examples of others, but remember it "will go well with you" to obey, but it must be ill to do otherwise. If you have failed until you are grown up children, begin now. The Lord bless and help you to do so. We will look into our duties a little farther in another chapter.

The Lord's Supper.

No. III.

"WINE IS A MOCKER."

So says Solomon. But while wine is thus represented as a curse, there are many passages in Holy Writ which speak of wine as a blessing; this, however, is only an apparent, not a real contradiction. The term wine is properly applied both to the good and bad, or unfermented and fermented juice of grape. There is, however, an evident distinction made between the good and bad wine; the one represents the blessings of the gospel, and the other is regarded as a curse. The question is, wherein does the difference consist? Is there any circumstance which will determine the question, and point out the wine which may be used at the Lord's table, and which must not be used? I think the following facts ought to be regarded as a satisfactory answer to the question.

The unfermented, and consequently, uncorrupted juice of the grape is a good creature of God, and well adapted to represent the blessings of the gospel, and the "blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins."

he is justified, it supposes that he has a righteousness equal to the demands of the law, and therefore that he may be acquitted according to justice. These, you see, are very different things, but in the case before us they are happily united. The sinner is said to be pardoned and justified at once, and the reason of this unusual language is this; the sinner has broken the divine law and has no obedience to answer its demands, therefore, his being freed from sin and the threatened punishment is in this respect a gracious, unmerited pardon. But, by faith he has received the righteousness of Christ, and God imputes it to him as though it were his own, and his righteousness answers all the requisitions of the law, and it has no charge against him, so that in this respect he is justified or pronounced righteous according to law and justice. Hence, it follows from the very meaning of the terms used in this case, that no righteousness can justify us in the sight of God but that which is equal to all the demands of the divine law. It must be perfect and conformed throughout to that standard, for if it be not, we cannot be pronounced righteous in the eye of the law, but the law charges and condemns us as transgressors, and its sentence lies in full force against us. It was from such premises as these that St. Paul reasoned, when he drew this conclusion—"that by the deeds of the law no flesh shall be justified," and that we are "justified by faith without the deeds of the law." Rom. 3: 20, 28. He grants that if any can produce a perfect righteousness of their own, they shall obtain life by the law. "The law," says he, "is not of faith; but the man that doeth them, shall live in them." Gal. 3: 12. But then he proves, that all the sons of men, both Jew and Gentile, have sinned (Rom. 3: 10–19.) and consequently have no righteousness agreeable to the demands of the law. He stops every mouth and brings in the whole world as guilty before God, and hence infers the impossibility of justification by the works of the law; and then, naturally introduces another righteousness equal to all the demands of the law. "But now," says he, "the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, . . . even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all and upon all them that believe; . . . . being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God has set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins, ... that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Rom. 3: 21–26.

O glorious scheme of salvation! O complete, divine righteousness! A righteousness by which Jew and Gentile, the greatest sinner as well as the least may be made divinely righteous, and completely justified, even at the bar of a holy and just God! There let us fix our trust and renounce our own righteousness as filthy rags, for this will be found to be our only defence at the tribunal of the Supreme Judge.

It is the gospel only that reveals such a righteousness as is sufficient for the justification of a sinner. The Jewish religion, as I have observed before, gave several intimations of this method of justification by the righteousness of another. There were many prophecies and types of this import, and this was undoubtedly the original design of sacrifices; for it is quite unaccountable, that ever man should imagine that he could appease the wrath of God, and procure the pardon of sin by offering to him sacrifices of brutes in his stead, unless we suppose that God did at first institute this method, to signify the way in which he would be reconciled to sinners by the suffering and death of another, as a sacrifice substituted in their room. This institution seems to have been immediately after the fall of man, when the first beam of gospel light blessed our world, in that promise,—"the seed of the woman," &c; for we are told that God made coats of skins and with them covered our first parents. Gen. 3: 21. Animal food was not allowed to man till after the flood, and consequently those beasts, whose skins were used for this purpose, were not killed for that use; and we cannot suppose that they died naturally so soon after their creation. It is therefore most probable that Adam had killed them for sacrifice, and that God had commanded him to do this immediately upon the promulgation of that promise, to typify the manner of its accomplishment, namely, by the sacrifice of Christ in the fullness of time. This practice we find continued by Cain and Abel; and thus Noah consecrated the new world after the flood. Gen. 8: 20. JOHN.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 11, 1857.

"What is the Soul?"

No. III.

In answering the above question of our correspondent, we first gave a theological and secondly a Bible answer. We have found that the primary use of the word soul applies to the whole man, as in Gen. 2: 7.

Secondarily, nephesh, the word rendered soul in the Old Testament, is translated mind, as we often put the mind for the whole man; for instance, we say,—"the great minds of the age," meaning they are great persons in that particular.

Mind is defined to mean,—"intention, purpose, design." Nephesh is also rendered will, Ezek. 16: 27; pleasure, Ps. 105: 2; own, Prov. 14: 10; appetite, Eccl. 6: 7; heart, Ex. 23: 9; lust, Ps. 78: 18; hearty, Prov. 27: 9; discontented, 1 Sam. 22: 2; tablet, Isa. 3: 20; greedy, Isa. 56: 11; and desire, Eccl. 6: 9. It is rendered heart 14, and mind 15 times. It is translated mind in Gen. 23: 8. "And he (Abraham) communed with them, (the children of Heth) saying, if it be your mind that I should bury my dead out of my sight, hear me." Again, the Apostle says in Acts 14: 2, "the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren." Heb. 12: 3. "For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." The Greek word in these passages rendered mind, is the same and only word that is translated soul in the New Testament.

Can we for a moment suppose that the word mind in these passages is something separate from the man, or in other words,—"the real man" who can act independently of a material organism, and is immortal? We might as well claim that the "will," "appetite," "desire," &c., are real men, as to say it of the mind; for they are all from the same Hebrew word, nephesh. These are but attributes of the man, and are frequently personified. If the mind is the immortal part, in what consists the immortality of the idiot who has no mind? Many beasts have more mind than some men, then it follows that they also are immortal, for the fact is incontrovertible, that beasts think. Says Dr. John Mason Good, in one of his lectures before the Surry institution in London, when speaking of matter,—"there does not seem to be any absurdity in supposing it may be capable of thought." Then it follows that the action of a material organism produces thought, and when that organism ceases to act then the being stops thinking; hence David says, speaking of man, "his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts PERISH." Ps. 146: 4. Man cannot think after his breath leaves him, any more than he could before the Lord breathed it into his nostrils. The giving of the breath of life to men makes them living beings, and when taken away, "they die, and return to their dust," or in other words to the grave, where "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom." Hence it follows, if the mind is the soul, or "real man," he perishes the day he dies, stops thinking, and is put with others who "know not anything." If a passage can be found in the Bible which teaches that the dead do know something, then we should see cause to change our mind, but we have not found one, except what Satan said to Eve,—"ye shall not surely die."

It is often said of the old,—"his body has outlived his mind," i. e., his physcal powers are good, but his mental have ceased to act; while in others certain faculties of the mind are dead, while others remain active; in others, some of the physical organs are completely paralyzed, while others are healthy and active. If the mind is the "real man," and a part of God, as many claim, it is very strange that a part of our Creator should become deranged, and another part be an idiot!

The Voice of the Church.

The Episcopal Bishop of Vermont thus writes in relation to the above mentioned Millennial History:

"REV. D. T. TAYLOR. Dear Sir:—Your request to have a copy of my two discourses on the Second Advent, printed in 1843, is very cheerfully complied with. . . . I have to thank you or your publisher for a copy of your late work, 'The Voice of the Church,' which seems to be a very elaborate and well arranged statement of authorities upon that highly important subject. My other engagements have not allowed of my reading it with the care it deserves, but from the hasty glance which I have been able to give it, I doubt not that it is well adapted to be eminently useful and acceptable.

With my best wishes for your full success in your labors for the cause of divine truth, and with much regard, I remain,

Your friend and servant in Christ,

JOHN H. HOPKINS.

Burlington, Vt., Dec. 6, 1856."

CORRECTION.—The obituary we published last week should read,—Sister Hannah Allen, wife of Bro. Wm. Allen.

From the New Church Repository, (Swedenborgian,) edited by Prof. George Bush.

"THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH.—BY D. T. TAYLOR.—This is the first of our acquaintance with Mr. Taylor, but from his frequent quotations from certain critical and prophetical works of our own, written under 'the dim religious light' of a former dispensation, it would appear that he is not quite so much of a stranger to us. We shall be shy of intruding ourselves upon his notice from our present theological and biblical stand-point, as we should be apt to be regarded as an exegetical renegade from our former positions, and thus lose caste in his estimation, without at the same time rendering him any essential service. But to the book: it is for its object well done. It comprises, in condensed form, indications of all the valuable literature on the theme of the Second Advent in its Millenarian relations. His own opinions lean, evidently, in the direction of the speedy personal advent and reign of Christ on the earth, and it is idle to say that he has not succeeded in proving that the 'Voice of the Church,' as uttered for centuries through her most noted organs, has taught the pre-millenarian theory which he maintains, rather than its opposite as set forth by Whitby, and the mass of commentators since his day. But alas! Cowper's line will occur: 'Each claiming truth, and truth disclaiming both.'"

The above, from the pen of the learned Prof. Bush, is an impartial testimony, for he takes neither of the views alluded to,—he being a Swedenborgian. Hence, his testimony to the character of the "Voice of the Church" is all the more valuable. The work is for sale at this office, and by the publisher, H. L. Hastings, Room 49, Arcade Gallery, Rochester, N. Y. Price $1.00; postage 18 cts. H. L. H.

Who will not be a Christian?

This is the most important question that was ever propounded to this judgment-bound world! Think of the consequences that are pending on its decision. It is deciding for or against our eternal welfare; it is deciding our destiny forever; it is a decision for life or death. And yet God has seen fit to leave this important decision for us to make. Hear Him: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." "And ye will not come to me that ye might have life." "And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Why is it, that a decision is not made at once by those that profess to believe the Bible? They have no promise of to-morrow. Why procrastinate until it is too late? O, how many will stand in the judgment disappointed, condemned, doomed to eternal destruction for not choosing life in mercy's hour! Let us make no delay in securing the approving smiles of Him who alone is able to save.

The love of this fading, sickly, dying world, blinds the minds of thousands while they unconsciously rush on to the brink of ruin. Poor deluded mortals! Part with all the riches, honors, and joys of the world to come for a few days of anticipated pleasure here. And can it be that any will be guilty of such folly, when such rich provision has been made, and an invitation given to all? O, vain man! thou art beside thyself! Leave thy death-doomed course and become a christian hero and share in the blessings of Paradise restored; then tell us if thou hast not been profited by thy warfare here! Let myriads of years roll their rounds, and sorrow's tear thou hast never shed, but upon thine immortal brow is still engraven—life, joy, and happiness are here.

Pride, another insurmountable obstacle in the way of becoming a christian, has its devoted adherents at the risk of losing life eternal, joy and glory ineffable! The fiat of Jehovah has gone forth against the proud. "Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud; for the Lord hath spoken." If this command is disregarded and we indulge in pride, inevitable destruction will be our destiny, for God has declared that "all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." But the question may be asked, who are free from this destructive sin? Let the unerring word answer: "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God. . . . Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth;" "But now being made free from sin and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." Various are the ways that this sin develops itself—too numerous for me to mention. But rest assured, if we are not willing to submit to the requirements of our Heavenly Father, pride has a place in our hearts. And the only way to overcome this sin is by entire submission to His will. "For God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble." "Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time."

But the inquiry may be made, how shall we become christians and live in the favor of God? The Savior said—"I come to do thy will, O God." "For whosoever shall do the will of God the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother." Then if we would become Christ-like we must do the will of God; believe, repent, and be baptized. Have we done this? If not shall we call ourselves christians? Let us take the word of God for our guide for a christian character, and then learn the terms of discipleship. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." "And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Can a man be a christian and love this world? "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Let us examine our own hearts and see if we love its pleasures, honors or riches, lest we be taken in its snare and forfeit eternal life. Can a man be a christian and lay up treasures here? "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." . . . For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." "Shall we talk about a home in the kingdom of God and live in the violation of these commands? I fear we may repent when it is too late! We see, then, that christianity does not consist altogether in talking about getting home, and being in the kingdom of God; but in doing right here. Do we hate our brother, or sister, and profess to love God? "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." Do we talk about having the spirit of God? If so, we have its fruits; "for the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth; proving what is acceptable unto the Lord. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

Who then will be a christian and enter upon the warfare? To such we bid you a hearty welcome upon the battle-field. The world, the flesh and the Devil are our opponents, and the battle may seem severe, but let us take the whole armor of God,—"above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." Let us prove our allegiance to the King of Kings by standing to our posts in these last hours of peril, and soon the conflict will be over, the Conqueror comes, the dead are raised, death destroyed, the earth renovated, and the christian's triumph begins. Amen. S. G. MATHEWSON.

Own Up.

"What! to that child?" Yes, to that child. You was mistaken—the child was right, and all your hard words were wrong, and out of place, if indeed they ever were right, or in place. You see you are wrong, now just go and own up, and ask forgiveness. "What ask forgiveness of my own child?" Yes, to be sure; who else can forgive a wrong done to him? "Well, but I must maintain my parental authority, and dignity." Parental pride and obstinacy, I suppose you mean! A fig for your "dignity," if it puts you up so high that you can't confess a fault. "Well, but my children are under my government." So was the black man's pig under his, and he thought it was a pity if he couldn't whip his own pig, that he had fed and raised himself; even if the poor pig didn't deserve a whipping at all.

Now look here, my good friend, Mr. Scowl; isn't right the basis of all proper law? Have you then a right to do wrong even to your own children? If you accuse them wrongfully, and reproach them unjustly, is that right? "Why, no; and I am sorry that I said what I did." Well, just subdue a little of your infernal pride, that turns angels into devils, and go and tell your boy so. Respect you! I think he will respect you quite as much when acknowledging a wrong, as when persisting in it. Mr. Scowl, what's the reason you haven't confidence in the piety and honesty of your neighbor, Mr. Snooks? Simply because he did wrong? "O no; to err is human." What then? "Why, because he wouldn't own up, when he saw that he was wrong." Exactly so, and that is just what you are trying to avoid doing in the present instance.

Let me tell you, my dear Mr. Scowl, that if you want to convince your son that you neither know, nor care for the difference between good and evil; if you want him to lose all confidence in your sound judgment, and in your moral honesty, you have only to take your present course. If you think you can convince him that you are perfectly infallible, he may then respect you. But if you wish to win the respect of his reason, and thus obtain his confidence and respect, why, do right. And if you err sometimes, then confess it to son or to servant, as readily as to a king. I tell you, Mr. Scowl, you are very ready to say—"I beg your pardon," when you have trod on a neighbor's toe; why not do the same when you have wronged your own flesh and blood? Now, my advice is, that you go and tell that boy that you was mistaken; that you are sorry; that you desire to be forgiven; that you mean to do better, and that you will try not only to tell him what he ought to do, but that by the grace of God you will try to show him how it is done.

Now, Mr. Scowl, I think you will find this plan to work well. Just try it, will you, eh? Go and own up! H. L. H.

Duties of Children.

BY ZETA.

No. I.

Each and every class of mortals is so connected with others as to originate special relative duties. The scriptures are decisive and clear in stating our obligations to one another, in the several qualifications of the human family. Not the least among them is the duty of children to their parents. It is true that this duty is being enforced by parents, tutors, ministers, lecturers, writers and others. It is also an admitted fact by all, that children owe obedience to their parents; still, while it is as clear a fact that a large majority of children, and large children especially, disobey their parents with impunity, it is a subject worthy of attention. My remarks in these articles, will not reach the eye of many small children, yet if they are worth anything, some parents will read them to small children. But there are many old children, and large children; some of them need to think more of their duties to their parents, and superiors. There are, it is true, some bright examples, some noble specimens of good, faithful, obedient children; ornaments they are, to whatever society, or family they belong, whether rich or poor, black or white, in the city or in the country, among the more accomplished, or in the secluded retirements of the forests.

But children are often thoughtless in regard to their best interests. They are often too wise in their own eyes. Parents often neglect to train children as they ought, and some take improper measures to train them. Children of good sense can soon learn to think whether it is best for them to obey their parents. They should learn that they are the rightful governors and should be obeyed. God has constituted this relationship and given a law to control it, so that if parents are incompetent to command, or negligent in training, the child is made responsible as a rational, intelligent being. The Lord has endowed us with a capacity to learn, think, judge and obey the law existing between the child and parent. He or she who neglects or refuses, after a good degree of development of mind, to obey the parent's requirements, dictated in reason, is culpable, and meets the just displeasure of God, and in due time reaps the disapprobation of all good society. I do not know of ever having seen a great man, a good, truly wise, and useful man or woman, who lived a life of disobedience to their parents when with them. Some may have done so, by hearty repentance and great grace from God, to break down and subdue a wayward and stubborn will, grown old and strong in disobedient habits.

In the parable of the sower, (Mark 4: 3) some hearts are compared to "the wayside," "stony ground," or "among thorns." It is my conviction that these are they who lived in disrespect, unfaithfulness, and disobedience to their parents, and consequently imbibe almost every other evil habit which ruins the mind, so that there is no room for goodness.

Who among our children does not cherish the thought that some day, or time in this life, they will choose "the good way," receive the word of the Lord, and be a christian, and be saved in a better world? It may be that many wish to be in advanced age first; some, doubtless, expect to obtain a death-bed repentance, or some miraculous thing to make them christians. Let such remember that the ground must be prepared, so as to be "good ground" to receive seed and produce fruit. Or, to speak plainly, the heart must be cultivated, broken, subdued, and trained to obedience through crosses, disappointments and losses, by the parents, or tutors, that it may be "a good and honest heart" which will, when the word of God falls into it, "bring forth fruit to perfection." But some will meet this idea by saying, "The preparation of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue is from the Lord. This is an important fact, and while the Lord always works by means, He has chosen to discipline the young heart by training it in the school of the parents, whom he commands to "train them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord;" and commands children to obey their parents, that their hearts may be thus fitted to receive and obey the law of God.

Come, children, let us read what the Lord has said to you; perhaps you have heard it often, and learned to repeat it at Sabbath School, and yet it may be you do not obey it. Hear. "Honor thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee, that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." Deut. 5: 16. Paul, the great apostle of Jesus Christ, reckons this the same as a command to obey. Hear him:—"Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. Honor thy father and mother, (which is the first commandment with promise.") Eph. 6: 1, 2. We must learn to honor our parents or we shall not love to obey them.

Hear a word on the other side of this question. "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother; and all the people shall say, Amen." Deut. 27: 16. A fearful thing, children, to disregard the order of God, and to choose our own ways, refusing to give honor to our parents, and to obey them. God's curses are upon such as lightly esteem them. Listen, dear children, to parental instruction; do not be led off from it by the bad examples of others, but remember it "will go well with you" to obey, but it must be ill to do otherwise. If you have failed until you are grown up children, begin now. The Lord bless and help you to do so. We will look into our duties a little farther in another chapter.

The Lord's Supper.

No. III.

"WINE IS A MOCKER."

So says Solomon. But while wine is thus represented as a curse, there are many passages in Holy Writ which speak of wine as a blessing; this, however, is only an apparent, not a real contradiction. The term wine is properly applied both to the good and bad, or unfermented and fermented juice of grape. There is, however, an evident distinction made between the good and bad wine; the one represents the blessings of the gospel, and the other is regarded as a curse. The question is, wherein does the difference consist? Is there any circumstance which will determine the question, and point out the wine which may be used at the Lord's table, and which must not be used? I think the following facts ought to be regarded as a satisfactory answer to the question.

The unfermented, and consequently, uncorrupted juice of the grape is a good creature of God, and well adapted to represent the blessings of the gospel, and the "blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins."

The fermented, or corrupted and intoxicating wine, is not a good creature of God, but a bad, insidious poison, permitted to become such through the neglect of man, in not putting it in strong bottles to prevent fermentation, or by his using means to encourage the corrupting process, thus converting a good into an evil, and changing a blessing into a curse. Such wine is a mocker; the curse of God rests upon it; it is good not to drink it, and woe to him who giveth it to his neighbor, or uses it at the table of the Lord, or looketh upon it with approbation.

I deem it will not be out of place, neither will it be unprofitable, to examine the scriptures on this subject, believing that all scripture "is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." In entering on the subject of ancient wines, I will first examine the words or phrases which are used in the word of God to express wine, or strong drinks.

1.—The most common word, rendered wine in our English Bible, is yayin, derived from the verb yanah—"to squeeze or press," and therefore means an expressed juice. The wine that Pharaoh drank was yayin, or wine, for it was pressed from the grape. Gen. 40: 11.

2.—Tirosh, in the English version, is promiscuously rendered "wine," or "new wine." In Isaiah 45: 8, it alludes to the juice in the swollen or ripe fruit, before it was expressed. "When the new wine is yet in the cluster, one saith, destroy it not, for a blessing is in it." That the wine in the cluster was unfermented, I think no one will attempt to deny; and then there was a blessing in it. None of my brethren who have carefully observed the effects of inebriating wines, will say that there is a blessing in them. Neither will any one, unless he has a diseased stomach, a shattered frame, an injured intellect, inflamed passions, and a premature death before him, for which, in most cases, the unhappy victim is unprepared. The word tirosh is several times in scripture associated with corn, as in Psalm, 4: 7. David, alluding to the joy of the wicked at the growth of their corn and the fertility of their vines, says that their corn and their wine, or tirosh, increased. There, he must refer to the growth of the grape, because he speaks of its "increasing," and the wine does not increase after it is manufactured. In this passage, therefore, as in Isaiah 45, tirosh, or new wine, is used for the grape or fruit of the vine, before it had been gathered, and even before it was ripe. In the same sense the word appears to have been used by the king of Assyria; (Isa. 36: 16,) for in the same speech in which he speaks of a land of corn and wine, or tirosh, he tells the people to "eat every one of his vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one of the waters of his own cistern." Here, the people were to eat of the vine and to drink water. In Joel, 2: 24, and Prov. 3: 10, tirosh is represented as the fresh juice which bursts from the wine-press, and which, therefore, had not fermented, and its fermentation afterwards depended solely upon the will of the husbandman, though the heat of the country threatened it with the acetous fermentation, if it fermented at all; or, on the other hand, the sweetness of the grape, and the thickening of the juice by boiling it down, must have been fatal to the production of an alcoholic drink. If it was really made an inebriating liquor, it was probably adulterated with drugs.

3.—Chamer is translated in Psalms 75: 8, and Isaiah 27: 2,—"red;" and in Deut. 32: 14,—"pure." It is also used for "slime, clay, mortar, and bitumen," and for anything "thick or slimy." In Deut. 32, it means the "pure, thick, or red" blood of the grape. It is no tautology to call the blood of the grape red, or purple, because the juice of that fruit was sometimes white and sometimes black or dark. The arterial blood of our bodies is red, but the venous is called "black blood." (In Isaiah we read of a "vineyard of red wine," evidently alluding to the color of the grape.) "Thou didst drink the blood of the grape," red, pure, or thick. Red was considered the best juice; pure, that which was unfermented and unmixed; thick, that which had been boiled or spissated, or, rather, that the juice was very thick, saccharine, or sirupy. The text, therefore, means thou didst drink the purest, the sweetest, and the richest blood, or juice of the grape. This word, being used with the expression—"Dam Anabim, the blood of the grape," affords very strong evidence that the liquor drank was not fermented, for a fermented liquor can never with any propriety be called "the pure blood of the grape," as I stated in my last.

Again: If chamer means a "thick" wine, it must either refer to a "thick" saccharine juice, or to a boiled wine, which, in either case, would be fatal to fermentation, because the juice of the grape will not ferment if it is too saccharine, nor unless it is as liquid as water. That inebriating drugs might be mixed with chamer, or red wine, none will deny; still, few will assert that "a vineyard of purple grapes," means a cellar of wine poisoned with opium, or that God would call such a liquor the "pure blood of the grape." There is, therefore, nothing in the word chamer to warrant us as followers of Jesus to use fermented wine at the Lord's table, view it as we will.

LINES,

ON THE DEATH OF A SISTER.

I'm lonely now, my sister,
I miss thy friendly voice;
Though other friends surround me,
I deeply feel thy loss.

I'm lonely now, my sister.
For my thoughts in silence trace,
Endearing recollections,
Which time can ne'er efface.

I'm lonely now, my sister.
The tear oft fills my eye,
As thy companion mourneth,
That thou wert called to die.

I'm lonely now, my sister,
Within the house of prayer,
When we meet to praise our Savior,—
Alas! thou art not there.

I'm lonely now, my sister,—
Throughout the wintry gloom,
A voice unwelcome whispers—
"She slumbers in the tomb."

But when the blessed morning
Of resurrection dawns,
O then I hope to meet thee,
With all the blood-washed throng.

The Divinity of Christ.

BRO. GRANT:—The following beautiful extract I copy from Gilfillan's "Bards of the Bible," under the head of "The Poetry of Jesus."—LOUISA J. BEACH.

After following our Savior through his life and mission on earth, from the manger to the cross, and thence to the ascension mount, and showing that every act of his life, both in his public and private ministrations,—his very appearance among men, and the words that fell from his sacred lips, all bore the impress of divinity, he closes thus:—

"'Divine,' indeed! for if any man doubt his claim to the title, let him pass from Christ's pictures of earth to his aspirations after heaven; let him hear the musical pants of this great swimmer, as he is nearing, amid roughest water, the shores of eternity and his Father's bosom. The last words of Jesus are surcharged with feeling for his disciples, forgiveness to his enemies, and desire after renewed communion with his Father. His soul springs up, as he sees his Father's throne in view. Death dwindles as he looks onward. A smile of triumph rests, as by anticipation, upon his lips. 'Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.' His last command is, 'that ye love one another;' his last legacy is 'peace.' He is going to the Father, but leaving the Comforter, and promising to return again; and, ere going, he breaks out into a prayer which, ere it closes, seems to bind in one chain of glory earth and heaven, himself, his Father, and his people. 'The glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one. Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory.' This prayer seems a specimen of his intercessory prayers in heaven. It is the first lifting up of that voice which sweetens the air of Paradise—the first raising of those arms which brighten the very light which is inaccessible and full of glory.

In considering these words, we are strongly impressed with the feeling—this is the conscious link of the spiritual world—the living bond between the Father and his children. The Father can never on earth come nearer to us than him; we can never get nearer than him to the Father. We know not what the eternal ages may develop, or how that mysterious sentence,—'then shall the Son of Man also himself be subject unto him, that God may be All in All,' may bear upon his future mediation; but surely now he stands between us and the beams of divine day, like an 'Angel in the sun.' There is no getting him out of the eye of the world. The poor sinner looks at him, and mourns, yet rejoices. The proud transgressor hates and foams, but cannot help looking at, and thinking of Christ. The infidel, feeling him in his way, invents theory after theory, each trampling down each, to resolve him into clay or mist; but still he stands victorious and serene above them all, inscrutable as an enigma, vast as a God, and warm as a man. The fierce theoretical dogmatist would seek to turn aside that smile, and fix it on the pages of his catechism, and the men of HIS creed; but, like summer sunlight, it scatters abroad, and 'sprinkles many nations.' Many look down, and strive to forget him; some try to look above him into supersolar regions; but in vain. His image pursues them into the depths, or flies before them into the heights of nature. In this age, only a few, even among those who disbelieve his claims, yell out faded blasphemies and foul calumnies against his name. More now, of all kindreds and climes, are beginning to wish this Angel to descend, and are expecting from him—and from him alone—the full solution of the dread mystery of man and the world.

For why? He only understands it. He has passed up every step of the ladder, from the child to the God, from the manger to the throne. He has felt the pulse of all being. He listened to the hearts of harlots and of publicans, and heard humanity beating even there. He looked into the dim eyes of the poor, and saw therein the image of God. Even in devils he found out all that was left of good in their natures, when they confessed him to be the Son of God. While the long hair of the prostitute wiped his feet, which her tears had watered, the eye of the lunatic tarried, at his bidding, from its wild wanderings, and began to roll calmly around him. Herod became grave in his presence, Pilate washed his hands from the shadow of his blood, Peter wept at his look, and Judas died at his recollection. Angels ministered unto him, or sung his praise; the grave was ashamed of hiding his dust; earth threw his ransomed body up to heaven: and heaven sent forth all its guards, and opened all its gates to receive him into its bosom, where it shall retain him till the times of the restitution of all things.

Thus faintly have we sought to depict the character and eloquence of Jesus. Scripture writers did not, nor needed to do it. They never say in so many words, Christ was very eloquent, very wise, very humble, very merciful, or very holy. But they record his sermon on the Mount; they show him taking the Pharisees in their own snare; they register his tears at the tomb of Lazarus; they paint the confusion of the witnesses, who came, but could not bear testimony against him; and they tell of his washing his disciples' feet. We have, alas! no new facts to record of him; and must say of that life, so marvelous, yet human, 'It is finished.' But even as the most splendid object in the sky is perpetually painted yet always new, as the sun is unceasingly rendered back by the wave of ocean, the dew drop, and the eye of man, so let it be with the Sun of Righteousness. Let his blessed image be reflected from page to page, each catching more fully than another some aspect of his glory, till he shall himself stand before the trembling mirror of the earth, 'as he is,' and till 'every eye shall see him.' Then, probably, it may be found that all the proud portraits which the genius of Taylor, and Harris, and Rousseau, and Goethe, has drawn of him, are not comparable with that cherished likeness of his face and nature which lies in the bosom of the lowly Christian, like a star in a deep-sunken well, the more glorious that it is solitary and seldom seen, forever trembling, but never passing away."

Domestic Summary.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.

The steamer Illinois arrived at this port at 10 o'clock. She brings California dates of the 5th, and from Aspinwall to the 10th inst.

The British mail steamer Thames arrived at Aspinwall from Greytown, and reports that Walker, with a force of 500 men, was surrounded by his enemies, who had offered him terms of capitulation, which he would probably accept.

The Panama Star contains details of the seizure of Walker's steamers, but gives nothing of importance in addition to what is already known here.

Two heavy shocks of an earthquake were felt at Panama Jan. 13.

The revolution in Peru has become general, Gen. Vivance having obtained possession of every port on the coast, except Callao.

LONG ISLAND SOUND FROZEN OVER.—For the first time, there is solid ice from the Connecticut shore to Long Island. Persons cross the Sound to Long Island on the ice from Port Chester, Westchester county, N. Y., and also from Throgg's neck, near Fort Schuyler. The harbor at New Haven is frozen as tight as Baffin's Bay. An "unusual circumstance" is mentioned by the New Haven Register. That paper of Monday evening says that "Capt. Merrow, of the schooner Daniel Trowbridge, who has been for a week frozen in near Southwest Ledge, at the mouth of our harbor, reports that nothing but ice can be seen from his topmast, with a spy-glass! that from Faulkner's Island across to Long Island, and from the former to the Connecticut shore, up to Branford, is a solid field of ice. At ebb-tide, a large gap opens at the mouth of our harbor, closing again at flood-tide. Thus Long Island and Connecticut are, for the first time in the memory of man, connected by solid ice."—New Haven Palladium.

A TERRIBLE MURDER IN NEW YORK.—The New York papers contain the details of a most horrible murder committed on the person of Dr. Harvey Burdell, a dentist of considerable celebrity and possessor of a large fortune. The murder was perpetrated in the office of the doctor, in a house in Bond street, and the body had fifteen mortal stabs in it.

REVIVAL IN CONNECTICUT.—There has been a precious revival of religion in a neighborhood near Stonington, Ct.; over 40 persons profess conversion, and about 30 have been baptized, the most of whom have united with the Baptist churches at Stonington Point and Groton. An interesting revival is said to be in progress in the Baptist church in Preston, Ct. Seven persons were baptized there on a recent Sabbath.—Christian Secretary, Hartford.

Foreign News.

ARRIVAL OF THE BALTIC.

NEW YORK, Feb. 5.

The Collins steamship Baltic, Capt. Comstock, has arrived below this port. She brings dates of the 21st ult.

The political news is quite unimportant.

The Swiss question is considered settled, as the Neufchatel prisoners have been liberated.

The event of the most interest is the trial of Verges, the assassin of the Archbishop of Paris. The trial is full of dramatic interest. Verges is condemned.

ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.—A correspondent of the Independence Eagle, writing from Naples of the 22d ult., says:

"Vesuvius was blazing away last night, and was evidently in great force. For the most part one sees only the reflection of the light, which is thrown up from the interior of the crater, but at times it rises up in all its majesty, and illuminates the entire city."

FATHER MATTHEW'S FUNERAL.—The funeral of the Rev. Father Matthew, "the apostle of temperance," took place in Cork, on the 12th ult., and was, perhaps, the most remarkable one ever witnessed in that city. The cortege was more than three miles long and took an hour and a half to pass any particular point. It was attended by the Corporal dignitaries and clergymen of the Established Church, as well as by a vast number of the Roman Catholic clergy, with their bishop at their head, and all the Roman Catholic and a great many of the Protestant gentry of the surrounding country. It was estimated that not fewer than 50,000 people were assembled in and around the cemetery on the occasion; and the deepest sympathy was expressed by the greater number of those present, many of them shedding tears. The Roman Catholic Bishop and seventy priests officiated at the obsequies in the Catholic Church of the Holy Trinity.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, on the 19th day of Jan. 1857, after a long illness with consumption, my beloved companion, Charlotte P. Ladd, aged 43 years. She possessed naturally an amiable and kind, but retiring disposition, strictly conscientious in her deportment. She was beloved most by those who knew her best. She embraced the Savior when about nineteen years of age, and has always maintained her faith, and honored her profession. She has been fully sensible for several months that she must die, and with calm reliance on the dear Redeemer has made full preparation for her end—managed all her affairs with death full in view, and yet without fear and trembling. She bore her illness with remarkable patience and often said she feared that she might become impatient; but she was graciously sustained to the last hour. While commemorating the Savior's sufferings and death, two weeks before her decease, she was greatly blessed as were all who were around her bed. Light from Heaven broke anew upon her soul and from this time until the close of life, the impress of heavenly life was upon her brow and in her heart. She was ready to speak to all of the Savior's love, and praised him constantly while she had strength. It was a great privilege to be with her the last day of her life. Our Heavenly Father restrained Satan from causing pain in her last hours, for which we had most earnestly besought the Lord, and she folded her arms upon her breast after being told that she was dying, saying, "I am all ready." Her last words were—"Oh how good the Lord is—precious Savior,"—and closed her eyes without a struggle or groan.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

I am left with my little family to mourn, but not without hope. Blessed be God, I find now the strength, the solidity of the christian Hope. It is indeed an anchor to my soul. I love it as I never did before, and by the grace of God I will preach it as I never have before. May I be remembered in the prayers of the church, and may we all soon cease our weeping and mourning in the "beautiful world" which shall soon be ushered in. "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

APPOINTMENTS.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The Lord willing, we propose to hold a general Conference in Boston, at Chapman Hall, Chapman Place, commencing Tuesday evening, Feb. 10th at 7 o'clock, and continuing through the week and over the Lord's day.

Our brethren and sisters, who attended the conference two years since at the same place, will recollect that it was one of great interest and profit, and that no effort was spared by the church in Boston to make it pleasant for those who came to enjoy that religious feast; and we trust that those who may be pursuaded to come to the one now proposed will not go away disappointed.

The object of the meeting is to make an effort to arouse the Lord's children to greater activity in his vineyard, and to afford mutual strength and comfort to each other. The apostles and primitive christians had such conferences, and were rewarded with rich blessings. We are confident that the time has come when we should make an extra effort to awaken new interest in our fellow men in the great work of preparation for the future world.

Brethren and sisters, come up to the feast, for we expect special help from the Lord of hosts.

We are anxious to meet once more in conference before our Master calls for an account of our stewardship. We very much need the benefit of a mutual interchange of thought and feeling.

We therefore earnestly entreat our brethren and sisters to make this meeting a subject of special prayer. Let us meet not as sectarians, to advance party interests, but as Christians, united in love, to promote the best good of our fellow men.

The opposer of all righteousness is making most alarming inroads upon the cause of truth, and shall we sleep till he has bound us hand and foot? Shall we flee and faint because our enemy is strong, or shall we like Caleb and Joshua be willing to meet, in the strength of the Lord, all that can come against us? God has committed to our trust, truths which, if faithfully employed, present an impassable barrier against the last-day errors, and the onward march of man's great enemy, and shall we hide them under a bushel! Brethren, arouse for the conflict! The victory is sure. Our King will prevail. Sleeping soldier, awake and gird thine armor!—"Fight the good fight," and soon our waving palms will proclaim the holy triumph upon the hills of glory!

For the Crisis.

THE WORLD AND THE PILGRIM.

WORLD.

Say, pilgrim, whither is thy way?
Why in such haste from day to day?
What wilt thou gain by going thus?
Do not thy purpose hide from us.

PILGRIM.

I go the way my Master leads,
I speed because my Master speeds;
I go to gain eternal joy,—
This is my purpose and employ.

WORLD.

But why not travel leisurely?
Why not with us prolong thy stay?
No need of haste, thy time is long,
Come, wait awhile, it is no wrong.

PILGRIM.

I cannot linger on my way,
My Leader bids me never stay;
I must needs haste, my time is short,
I have no hour for idle sport.

WORLD.

But charms and joys with us are found,
And pleasures in our midst abound;
And we have wisdom, too, profound,
And we are mighty and renowned!

PILGRIM.

I know with you are charms and joys,
And pleasures, glories, glittering toys;
Power, wisdom, wealth, display and pride,
And names renowned on every side.

WORLD.

Then why not turn aside to us?
Why go thy way quite lonely thus?
We bid thee welcome to our fare,
We will our pleasure with thee share.

PILGRIM.

Your joys and pleasures lead to death;
Your boast is vain as fleeting breath;
Your glory all will pass away,
In the fast hast'ning burning day!
When the eternal Judge shall come,
And sit in glory on His throne,
Your kingdoms vast, and empires all,
Shall in redeemless ruin fall.

The Two Brides.

—OR—

The True and False Church.

BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

(Concluded)

We now hasten to speak of the fate of this adulteress—the direful doom of that iniquitous system which constitutes the false bride of Christ. In contemplating her end, well may incorrigible sinners be alarmed, and hypocrites tremble, for all who are impenitent, are found in her, and consequently out of Christ; yes, every individual, both small and great, bond and free, male and female, who have willfully rejected the light of the gospel—hardened themselves against God—"paid despite to the spirit of grace"—trampled beneath their feet in disdain "the blood of the everlasting covenant," and have declared, either by word, deed or action, that they would not have Jehovah's Anointed to reign over them as King, must share in her final overthrow.

And what is her doom? Let the unerring word of God answer. In the first place then, the man devoid of a wedding robe stands forth as a representative of the formal church; and the judicial disposal of that man does most certainly typify her doom. We read; "and when the King came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment; and he saith unto him, friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless. Then the King said to his servants, bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Matt. 22: 11–13. But in the visions of the Apocalypse her end is written in blazing characters. The mighty angel is brought to view, and seen by the Revelator to take "up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea," with this emphatic declaration—"thus with violence shall that great city Babylon, be thrown down and shall be found no more at all." Here are three features connected with her overthrow, to which we would invite special attention. They are these. It will be one of violence; it will be sudden; it will be irretrievable! Amen. Look at the symbol for a moment. A powerful and gigantic angel stands on a high and lofty eminence projecting into the sea; he holds in his iron grasp a stone of vast magnitude; he raises it slowly upward with herculean strength—it is poised high in the air,—anon, it has left his grasp—it descends with terrific velocity—it has reached the ocean's surface. Hark! a crash! the element is disturbed into a mighty whirlpool—a bubble—it sinks down, down into the unfathomed deep—a calm—it is over; "Thus shall Babylon sink and shall not rise." Amen. Jer. 50: 64, Rev. 18: 29. Again. "And the ten horns which thou sawest on the beast, (God's agencies of punishment, and execution of his judgment, see Ps. 17: 13,) these shall hate the whore, and make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine. AND SHE SHALL BE UTTERLY BURNED WITH FIRE: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Rev. 17: 16; 18: 8.

"Great Babylon of ancient fame,
With towering temples grand and fair,
Shall soon have neither place nor name—
And fearful is her doom to bear;
'Mid thunders of the Judgment day,
She'll sink—a wreck—and pass away."

And now, in conclusion, let us turn to the sacred pages, and learn the blessedness which is in reserve for the truly devoted bride, or the real church of the adorable Redeemer. She is destined to be arrayed in queenly apparel—in the ineffable resplendence of eternal glory—clothed upon with immortal beauty. She is to wear a precious diadem of jewels fair, a star-gemmed crown of brilliants, on which mortal eye would never dare to gaze uninvited, bright shining as the sun in his noon-day radiance; thus garnished with paradisiacal loveliness—attired in all the unutterable celestial drapery of heaven, "she shall be brought unto the King"—imposingly conducted there by a glorious retinue—the virgins her companions, "with gladness and rejoicing," even "into the King's palace;" and there, surrounded with an immense and innumerable multitude of angelic beings—myriads of holy intelligences—the redeemed of every age, nation, and tongue—amid the sweet and harmonious strains of cherubic harpers and songs of praise to God and the Lamb, sit down with her Beloved upon His throne and share in His reign and glory. Thus the Bride and the Bridegroom will forever remain, while loud hallelujahs unceasingly resound through his illimitable dominions. Amen. And these in point of duration are eternal; in point of happiness, indescribable; in point of glory, inexpressible.

"For I'm sure if the tongue of an angel I had,
I could not completely the myst'ry describe."

And could Gabriel, the angel of God's presence, now stand among us, methinks even he would fail in language to justly delineate the beauty, the splendor, and the "eternal weight of glory" which God hath in reserve for the Bride elect of his well-beloved One; which is far surpassing all that ever eye hath seen, ear hath heard, or ever yet hath entered into the heart of man to conceive. Such being the case, what a dowry! Abundantly satisfying, affording a perfect "fullness of joy," and contributing "pleasures forevermore." In proof, see Rev. 19: 78; Matt. 13: 43; Cant. 6: 10; Ps. 45: 13—15; Rev. 3: 21; 14: 1–5; Isa. 64: 4; Ps. 36: 8.

The church is the espoused of Christ, and sustains a peculiar relation toward him, she being the divine counterpart of himself—a member "of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones"—his celestial Eve; for, as the first Eve was taken from the opened side of the first Adam, so was the second Eve taken from the pierced side of the second Adam—"the Lord from heaven." The first Adam was cast into a deep sleep for this specific purpose; the Son of God lay in a dreamless sleep from his crucifixion until the morn of his resurrection; and as the happiness of the first Adam was not perfected without the presence of his chosen help-meet, neither (we say it with reverence,) will the second Adam be without the companionship and presence of his dear and heavenly Bride. And as the first Eve was part of the first Adam's very being, so is the second Eve part of the holy Redeemer's very being! But we refrain, "This is a great mystery; . . . I speak concerning Christ and the church." Eph. 5: 30, 33.

In view of this interesting and important fact, and the previous point we mentioned in regard to her dowry, together with the consideration of her present lonely condition, (we say lonely, from the fact that every true wife is in a lonely frame of mind, more or less when her husband has been long absent,) together with the demonstration that all the great prophetic periods given in scripture, which span the entire chart of time, seem to concentrate in our age, and terminate here; the signs of the times—the signs of the moral, civil, physical, and ecclesiastical world, all appear as one solid mass of uniform testimony in favor of this,—"that all the great prophecies which God has given to mark the course of human events to the end of time, have actually been fulfilled; that we are living in an age, expressly foretold in prophecy, which is just opening upon the CROWNING CONSUMMATION OF ALL PROPHETIC DECLARATIONS." We repeat, in view of these things, then, is it not reasonable that the Bride should be anxiously looking and longing for the return of her Lord? As the young bride would look forward to the happy day of her nuptials—the consummation of her marriage with the one of her choice, so doth it now become the church to be "looking for, and hasting unto the coming of the day of God," when all the supernal beatitudes will be realized—her faith transformed to the heart-ravishing sight—her hopes sweetly merged in heavenly exhilarating fruition; when the marriage of the Lamb will be celebrated in the holy city—the new Jerusalem—amid the music of the ten thousand times ten thousand harpers—untold numbers of seraphim, and the myriads of the redeemed;

Who there with golden harpers,
Sing praises to the Lamb;
Within the holy city—
The new Jerusalem.

Jesus, "the Lamb of God, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root and offspring of David, the bright and MORNING STAR" of the gorgeous scene, in the royal majesty of his person, and the glory of his being, there and then, beholding his spouse, "leaning upon her beloved," shall smile with infinite delight, "shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied." In consideration of these glorious things,—the bliss, the splendor, the magnificence which shall then obtain to the faithful and sainted ones, well may the blessed Spirit which animates and divinely inspires the heart of the church say, "come!" Well may the wedding-robed bride say, "come!" Well might "him that heareth" these glad tidings of the kingdom and consummation say, "come" Yea, "and let him that is athirst, come; and whosoever will, let him partake of the water of life freely.

"Come, desire of nations, come,
Hasten, Lord, the general doom;
Hear the Spirit and the Bride,—
Come and take us to thy side!"

Let this be the sentiment which shall pervade the heart of the church, "until He shall come whose right it is to reign;" until the dead-awakening voice of the Son of God shall be heard in seventh-trumpet tones, proceeding from the throne itself, "saying, surely, I come quickly. Even so come Lord Jesus." Amen.

The grace of our Lord Jesus, the Messiah, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with all the saints. Amen.

Elizabeth City, N. J., Dec. '56.

For the Crisis.

From G. W. Gillispie.

BRO. GRANT:—I can restrain myself no longer; I want to participate in the joys of my brethren and sisters, who manifest their love for Jesus, through the medium of the Crisis. I, love Jesus too; I love his truths, and the promises of his soon coming to deliver us weary pilgrims from this vale of tears, sorrows, and groanings. I love to read the Crisis, as it comes weekly, laden with its choice fruits. Often have I, while reading its columns, wondered that men did not believe the truth; it is so plain, so convincing and so glorious, I should think that they would embrace the hope, and wait for Jesus to "come the second time without sin, unto salvation." But "darkness has covered the land, and gross darkness the people." Truly, they grope their way in darkness, and are willingly ignorant of the many lights that are hung out to warn them of the approaching storm—the coming deluge of fire. O sinners! I feel for them; the thought of their perishing condition animates me to arouse them from slumber, to tell them of their danger. But alas! it is like casting pearls before swine; they turn and rend me, and call me a deluded Millerite. Thank God that I have this hope within me; I love it. They say I appear ridiculous because I do not talk, nor jest to suit their pleasure. Well, that does not disturb me, nor shame me; for I love the truth too well. I find many benefits from not being ashamed to own my faith. Sometimes, while in a store or tavern, I take out my paper and read. Some will be sure to notice the World's Crisis, and ask,—"Do you believe in those doctrines?" "I do, sir."

Sometimes I meet with those who reason on the subject; then I have a free time in telling of the glorious realities of the truth; the state of the dead, the coming of the Lord Jesus. And sometimes an unknown brother or sister would notice the Crisis, and remark, 'How natural that looks!" and ask, "do you take that paper? do you believe those doctrines?" to which I can heartily reply in the affirmative.

Dear brethren and sisters, do not be ashamed to send your paper or tracts before the public. You may meet with some of like faith, as I have done, and O, how glorious the meeting! and how much more will it be, when we meet in the paradise of God. O work, while the day lasts. Let your lights shine. Try to lead some to Christ. Be not ashamed of Him. Do your duty in the prayer-meeting especially. Speak and pray often. Visit the closet, and thank the Lord for his "loving kindness." Do it often, and we shall be called by Him good and faithful servants, and taken into His kingdom, to dwell forever!

Your humble brother,
G. W. GILLESPIE.

Short Sayings.

Those who run the fastest will be likely to receive the greatest harm in case of a fall.

Many people complain of want who never trouble themselves about waste.

People frequently charge on fortune what they should rather charge to their own negligence.

Multitudes think more of the eyes of other people than they do of their own comfort and convenience.

Prosperity creates a multitude of seeming friends, but adversity manifests real ones.

We admire that which is splendid and elegant, but we love that which is modest and true.

We admire a man's independence, power, and activity, but we love his goodness.

We admire many things that we do not really love. E. B.

"WATCHMAN, AWAKE!"

BY VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

Weary Watchman, toil in hope a little longer!
O'er yonder chasm dark, a youthful pilgrim's clinging
To the cross. O haste! to aid the trembling stranger,
While hope around her fainting heart is ling'ring.

She sees the dang'rous gulf beneath her yawning wide,
And weak, and wearily she grapples with the foe;
Amid this dreadful peril, had she but a guide
This once, to point the way her untaught feet should go;

She might at last in glory bathe that brow so fair,
And on the sea of glass with blood-washed millions stand;
With sainted Paul, a golden crown forever wear,
And swell the song amid the brightest angel band.

Ah! Watchman, wake! for yonder comes the rav'ning wolf,
In garb of innocence, his hellish form is hid;
He seizes on this helpless prey, while far aloof
Stand those, that should protect the lambs, as Jesus bid.

Zoar, Mass., 1856.

Extract.

"Behold I stand at the door and knock." Christ comes to the soul-house, and stands there and knocks. On getting no answer, he goes away only to come and knock again. He waits at the door, and listens for a voice within, and goes away. He comes again, and waits, and goes away! He knocks, not at one door, but goes round to every door, and waits for an answer. As one who returns to his dwelling in the night, after a journey, and finding it locked, knocks at the accustomed door of entrance in the front, and getting no answer then goes to the door in the rear, then to the side-door—if there be one—and then to every other door, in order if possible to get into his house,—so Christ, who longs to enter into the soul, goes to every door in succession and knocks and listens for an invitation to come in, and leaves not one chamber in the soul-house unsought, or one door untried! He knocks at the door of Reason; at the door of Fear; at the door of Hope; at the door of Imagination and Taste, of Benevolence and Love, of Conscience, of Memory and Gratitude! He does not neglect a single one.

Beginning at the upper and the noblest, where He ought to come in as a King of Glory, through gates of triumph, He comes round and down to the last and lowest, and retreats wistfully and reluctantly, returning often—morning, noon, and night—continually seeking entrance with marvelous patience, accepting no refusal, and repulsed by no indifference to His presence, or no neglect of His message!

If he be admitted, joy unspeakable is in the house, and shall be henceforth. The dreary dwelling is filled with light from the brightness of his countenance, and every chamber is perfumed from the fragrance of his garments. Peace and hope, love and joy, abide together in the house—for Christ himself takes up his abode therein. But if, after his long knocking at the door and patient waiting for entrance, his solicitation be refused or neglected, by-and-by there shall come a time when you, who have denied him, shall be denied of him. For when you shall knock at the gate of heaven for admittance into the mansions which he has prepared from the foundation of the world, he will say unto you, as you said unto him, Depart! But that dreadful day has not yet come, and he still stands at the door—his locks wet with the dews of the morning—and waits to be invited into the chamber of your soul. Hear His voice once more, and yield to its gentle persuasion, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come into him, and will sup with him, and he with me!"—Independent. *

BROTHER GRANT:—I cut the following from the Advent Herald. I thought it too good to keep from the readers of the Crisis. How much truth it contains! O how much glorifying of self there is among professed ministers of the Gospel! O how blessed it is to be meek, humble, simple, and plain, when we stand up to speak for God! And more than everything else, we need more of the power of the Holy Spirit to help us. I feel just like saying, O God, I can never preach again unless thou wilt grant me more of thy blessed Spirit! Would to God we may baptize our sermons with tears and prayers, in pleading with God for this blessing, in all coming time, before we attempt to deliver them We lack on this point—the point of spirituality. We must be more spiritual. O God, help us! The longer I live, the more and more I see of the weakness and folly of man, and the more need of help from God. O human nature, how weak it is! "Lord, what is man?" My dear brethren in the ministry, let us start anew, and hereafter be men full of the Holy Spirit!

THE ELABORATE SERMON.

BY E. PORTER DYE.

It was a week in summer time—
In August, fifty-three,
A modern pastor sat him down—
He took his pen and scratched his crown,
To do Theology "up brown,"
So smart a man was he.

A text he chose—a sermon wrote,
About the "fatted calf;"
He toiled away the whole week long,
To rectify whate'er was wrong,
And make it elegant and strong;
But 'twas too long by half.

He cut it down—he wrote it o'er,
Retouching every point,—
Till he was pleased it read so well,
And pride began his breast to swell,
To think how his brave speech would tell—
So smooth in limb and joint.

The Sabbath came:—To-day, thought he,
My people must respect
My talents more than e'er before;
And though they may not cry encore,
Will ask to have me preach it o'er,
Because of its effect.

So marching to the sacred desk,
He uttered forth "his views,"—
Declaimed about the calf so fat,
But finished, feeling rather "flat,"
For half his congregation sat
And slumbered in their pews.

Returning home, dejected, sad,
He turned aside to pray;
His soul was humbled to the dust—
He prayed and felt that pray he must,
And exercise a firmer trust,
Or else, must "go away."

His strength was spent—he'd done his best—
Yet all had been in vain;
While half his struggling heart within
Reproached him that he did not win
A single soul from guilt and sin,—
He ne'er would preach again.

When Monday came, he prayed again,
Then went from door to door;—
He saw the sick, the lame, the blind,
And words of blessing left behind,
Till half he thought to change his mind,
And preach one Sabbath more.

But what? and how? he wept and prayed,
Then sat down sore perplex'd,
For ah, so busy all the week,
On what theme could he hope to speak?
He took his testament in Greek,
And ransacked for a text.

Before the book he knelt; and prayed
For guidance from on high.
Poor man—what sorrows filled his breast—
He felt he needed sleep and rest,
Yet he must try to do his best,—
A good text met his eye.

A sermon on it soon he planned,
And sketched its meaning plain.
He could not elegantly write,
'Twas Saturday, and nearly night,
And he was in a woful plight,—
He knelt and prayed again.

The Sabbath came—a lovely morn—
The pastor prayed again;
Then humbly forth in fear he went,
With spirit meek and penitent,
To where last Sabbath he had spent
His choicest strength in vain.

He rose and read the opening hymn—
Drew nigh to God in prayer;
But judge of his extreme surprise,
When closing he observed all eyes
Suffused with tears, and heard deep sighs,
As if the Lord were there.

He rose to preach, though sore oppress'd
And mortified was he—
For oh, his sermon was so slim,
The light it gave so very dim,
'Twas strange all eyes were fixed on him;
What could they wish to see?

His words—they seemed to fall with power
Though simple words were they,
So simple, he could hardly bear
To utter them; but after prayer
The people whispered everywhere
How well he preached that day.

The humbled pastor homeward went,
Ashamed to show his face,
To think so smart a man as he
Should lower himself full one degree,
By preaching what he deemed to be
So very common-place.

That week, abased, before the throne,
He mourned, he wept, he prayed;
But e'er another Sabbath came,
The pastor, in this prayerful frame,
Discerned a little kindling flame,
Which sovereign grace displayed.

In many a soul—which blazed and burned
With pure revival light—
What could it mean? The Lord was there,
Who scorns the weapons men prepare,
Yet honors humble, fervent prayer,
Who, not by power or might,

Nor by the wisdom of the wise
His kingdom buildeth up,
But by his Spirit strikes the blow
Which humbles e'en his haughtiest foe,
And opes in Anchor's valley low,
To faith, a door of hope.

Till he who oft in wisdom's pride
In vain had preached the word,
Beheld with joy God's work go on,
As day by day some ransomed one
Was built on Christ the corner-stone,
And glorified the Lord.

Where is the scribe? and where the wise?
Hath not Jehovah said,
His folly wiser is than men?
Yet oh, what thousands still complain
Their labor in the Lord is vain—
Yet, tell me how they prayed,

And I will tell you why they failed
Their hearers' hearts to win—
No human voice the dead can wake,
But he who pleads for Jesus' sake,
Impression cannot fail to make
On souls deep sunk in sin.

Example.

The sight of excellence not only directs the efforts but fires the ambition. It touches our emotional nature, and supplies energy to our struggles in the midst of weariness and disappointment. It is thus that Christianity operates in the world, not by doctrines and propositions, but by the highest ideal of humanity exhibited in actual life; its noble army of saints and martyrs, towering far above the average attainments of their age; by the glorious company of apostles, crowned and surmounted by Christ himself, in whom humanity was glorified and transfigured. The moral impression of this heavenly panorama of heavenly virtues is confirmed and made irresistible by the fact, that they coincide with that image of perfection which we elaborate from the elements our own nature verified by the teachings of our widest experience—and they compel us to exclaim, sunk as we too often are, in selfishness, and worldliness, and sin, "O would to heaven that such were those who are near and dear to us, our fathers and mothers, and brothers and sisters, our wives and children, and such were ourselves!" Would to heaven that the Divine Ideal which has been shadowed forth in God's works, and which floats forever before the mental eyes, were realized in the life of man, and as new orders borne from heaven, were inaugurated in the onward march of the human race.—Ex.

Goodness of heart is man's best treasure, his brightest honor, and his noblest acquisition.

The Vanity of Earthly Glory.

Kingdoms, thrones, crowns, sceptres, dominions, governments, rulers, lords, captains, and the great ones of earth, all, at length, must pass away, like the imagery of a dream, of a night vision. How foolish is man—how exceedingly foolish, even unto madness, to set his heart on such a short-lived bubble as earthly glory! What if we could possess all that vain man calls great and good, as connected with this world—what better off should we then be than we are now with food, and raiment, and the common comforts of life? We might boast of wealth, of splendor, of power, of pleasure—but what then? would wealth, splendor, power, pleasure hinder the approach of sickness, pain, accidents, disappointments, death, judgment, eternity? Could all of these things together buy a title to the bliss of the kingdom of God? Would all of those things together make us happy? No, verily. Have those who have largely possessed earthly glory been happy, more than others? Was Alexander a peculiarly happy man? Were the renowned Cæsars peculiarly happy men? Was Napoleon more happy than others? But the results of a fair and particular trial of earthly good and glory are recorded, for our information, in the Book of books. A world-renowned man, whom God made king, and whom too, God made wise, declares:

"I said in my heart, go to now, I will prove thee with mirth; therefore enjoy pleasure: and, behold, this also is vanity. I said of laughter, it is mad; and of mirth, what doeth it? I sought in mine heart to give myself up to wine (yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom,) and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven all the days of their life. I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards; I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kinds of fruits; I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees; I got me servants and maidens, and had servants born in my house; also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me; I gathered me also silver and gold and the peculiar treasure of kings and of provinces; I got me men-singers and women-singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as musical instruments, and that of all sorts. So I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem; also my wisdom remained with me. And whatsoever mine eyes desired, I kept not from them; I witheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labor, and this was my portion in all my labor. Then I looked on all the works which my hands had wrought, and on the labor that I had labored to do; and, behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun." Eccl. 2: 1–11.

And I would ask, in the language of Solomon himself, 'what can the man do that cometh after the king?' Let his experiment suffice for all the children of wisdom. O! how foolish to try to be great! O how foolish to try to be rich! O how foolish to try to be honored! O how foolish to try for anything but God, truth, virtue, and eternal salvation! We are creatures of circumstances, accidents, dangers, death. Our foundation is in the dust. We are but worms of earth. O how blessed to be little! O how blessed to be meek! O how blessed to be humble! O how blessed to be eternally saved by the grace of God!

Unexpected Testimony.

From James Mc'Cosh, L. L. D.

"THE WORLD TO COME."

"'The world to come, of which we speak,' (Heb. 2: 5,) may be understood,—

First, as the FUTURE EARTH! The past and the present point alike to the future. We live not only in a world of change—we live in a world of progress. There has been a gradual and evidently an intended advancement in the physical and intellectual amelioration of the race. While every benevolent mind must rejoice in this, it is just to regret the more that these real improvements are incapable of renovating man's nature, morally or spiritually. The improvements of which we boast are mere means or instruments which may be used for good, but which are also employed for evil. The Electric Telegraph will employ its velocity in the service of sin, just as readily as in the service of God. Painting and statuary have been patronized, not unfrequently, by the most selfish and profligate of men—such as the Medici—and have been corrupting, as well as refining the minds of their votaries. Music must ever waft the spirit of man into a region of greater loveliness and grandeur than the actual world; but instead of lifting it to heaven, it has often transported it into scenes where sin is rendered the more fascinating by the dress in which it is presented. Architecture has built temples to God, but it has also built mansions in which temptation has spread its allurements; and its temples have been as frequently dedicated to superstition as to the true worship of God. There is no one power, or element, in the world capable of regenerating it. The power that regenerates the world, like that which regenerates individuals, must descend from [on high.]

Nay, the very church of God and the Word of God cannot, of themselves, regenerate the world. They are inadequate for so great a work, because they cannot, by their own powers, change human nature! With all our privileges we feel that there is still something wanting. Our very acquisitions impress us the more with our still remaining deficiencies. We are more astonished at the crimes coming to light in our day, than we are in reading of the same deeds committed in any previous age. THE CREATURE IS STILL GROANING, and it will continue to do so, till, according to the promise of the Word, the Spirit is poured out on all flesh."

"Not that we are on this account to despise or hate our world. We are rather to love that world, which God so loved as to give his Son to suffer and to die for it. Whatever the gloomy and disappointed may say to the contrary, this world of ours is a glorious world after all. It is glorious in the displays it gives of the Divine perfection and beneficence—glorious in its capacity, and the instruments ready for use. Let but human nature, as the root of bitterness, be regenerated, and then all its capabilities, all its acquisitions and improvements will be devoted to the most beneficent purposes, and will change the very aspect of the world. The state of the earth depends essentially on the character of its principal inhabitant; and when the character of man is renovated, the state of our world will be renovated also; the agencies, at present conflicting, will become conspiring; that which is barren will become fruitful, and that which is hurtful will become beneficent."

"WE LIVE IN THE LIVELY EXPECTATION of a coming era when the work, which the first man failed to accomplish, will be performed by the second man, which is Jesus Christ; and when it shall be sung—'How excellent is thy name in all the earth."

This author is Professor in the Queen's University, Ireland. He has two works, filling about eleven hundred pages octavo. They are written in an elevated christian spirit. This extract is from "THE METHOD OF THE DIVINE GOVERNMENT, PHYSICAL AND MORAL." pp. 512–514. He groups the types and "rudiments of the world" and man's deeply felt necessities—all departments of nature and natural religion, and lays them, in the spirit of a child, and with the homage becoming an exalted christian, at the feet of "Him who is the true light,—who hath brought life and immortality to light." And this not by death and a glorification of the spirit as Socrates suggested, but by "the death, followed by THE RESURRECTION OF ONE infinitely greater than Socrates." pp. 516–17. This is our faith. Amen.

"Much as we admire the conduct of Socrates (at his death), we are doubtful whether all the arguments employed by him are conclusive. That the soul existed before it came into the body, and will therefore exist after it leaves the body, &c., are arguments suited to the dialectic intellect of the Greeks, but scarcely fitted to work conviction in a doubting mind.

"The other world, in the common conceptions of mankind, has been the place of shades. (It is only an imaginary, ghostly, unsatisfactory state) The deepest natural feeling of mankind is, that 'The Governor of the world must call his creatures into judgment.' This we believe to be a natural sentiment; but all beyond this in relation to the state of the other world comes from perverted tradition; from the fables of the priesthood, or the dreams of the wayward spirit of man!—always excepting what comes from Revelation.

"Here again we find that revealed religion meets the felt wants of natural religion. When revelation draws aside the veil which separates this world from the other, we see, in exact accordance with our natural convictions, a throne of judgment. And the Bible gives certainty to what is but a dim anticipation. It is CHRIST that brings life and immortality to light.

"He does more; he shows how sinful man may come to that judgment-seat to be acquitted, and look forward to it without fear. The whole complex feeling with which man naturally regards the world to come is one of apprehension rather than of hope. It is a world of darkness rather than of light. Nor do we know any way by which these fears can be effectually dispelled but by the rays which the Sun of righteousness sheds on the darkness of death and the sepulchre." (This is done "only by turning to the death and resurrection of One infinitely greater than Socrates.") pp. 515–516.

"Natural religion gives something positive—God, government, and a future day of retribution; but then all its positive truths only remind man more impressively of what he needs. Its queries are far more instructive than its answers to them. It is of little use to any, unless it lead on to its true complement—to that sublime system of Revelation in which all its wants are met and satisfied.

"The primeval office of natural religion should be to POINT TO HIM who is the TRUE LIGHT. If it does not aim to accomplish this end; if it comes between any and that Light, it may rather be pernicious. When it has succeeded in this, it may disappear with its proofs and processes, and allow the eye to rest immediately on God, . . . as the inquirer goes on to the experimental knowledge and enjoyment of HIM who alone can enlighten and satisfy the soul." pp. 517–18.

Thus the grand points in our faith are asserted. The promise, the hope of the gospel, has its God-given place. The "death followed by the resurrection" of Christ has its revealed importance, as the only ground of a sinner's confidence; and "the judgment" stands forth in this author, as the grand event of futurity—as the time of retribution. The death and glory of popular theology have no place. True, some isolated terms imply some sympathy with prevailing educational dogmas; but they only appear in the back ground, in association with "superstition, fables, and dreams," which "the Sun of Righteousness" alone dispels. The present is "a shadow;" but the future will unfold "the better and more enduring substance." Heb. 10th and 11th chap. MATERIALISM is charged on us as a fault, and also as the result of our faith. But this author clearly asserts the points of our faith, on which alone the charge can justly rest.

"The future world is our world renewed—'the New Earth!' Jesus glorified has exalted flesh and matter to serve the most glorious ends!" TYPICAL SYSTEM, pp. 530–532. Thus all in the future is to be a reality. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but being planted in the likeness of his death, we shall be also planted in the likeness of His resurrection. And when He appears we shall be like Him. . . . The simplest organism points, by its structure, up to man; and man's earthly frame points to his heavenly frame, and his heavenly frame to Christ's spiritual body. And we see that all animated things on earth point onward to His glorified humanity as the grand Archetype of all that has life." pp. 531–32.

Bless the Lord! for such a testimony. This is the materialism that I find in Holy Scripture! This is the materialism I cherish. "All will be 'New,' or 'renovated.'" Amen and amen.

The Vine.

JULIA A. FERRIS.

"Noble vine," said Norah, as she sought rest in the arbor after her morning ramble. "Noble vine; fitly chosen as an emblem of our own immaculate Savior. How benignly are thy broad branches ever extended over the heads of those who seek thy shade; fitting emblem of the divine protection ever offered to those who will put their trust in Him. How sweetly does the morning sunlight find its way between thy beautiful leaves, picturing them in graceful outline upon the grass at my feet; even as the blessed rays of divine light find their way into the believer's heart, delineating there each holy word of our Lord, and making clear its signification.

'Ye are the branches,' said Jesus, and I now consider how utterly dependent is each branch upon the vine, not only for its foliage and fruit, but also for its very existence. As each branch is nourished by the same sap which flows in the vine; even so the same pure spirit which dwelt in the heavenly vine, must be our life, or we die.

As each branch bears the same fruit as that borne by the vine, so must our lives be characterized by the same holy devotion to our Father in heaven; the same noble disinterestedness to our brother upon earth, I had almost said, by the same mighty acts as characterized our Lord. And why not? (had we faith in him,) has he not said, 'He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do, because I go to my Father.'"

And Norah, feeling an ardent desire to become a true branch of the living vine bowed reverently before God, earnestly supplicating the rich gift of his holy spirit. Rising, she beheld the gardener with his pruning knife already at his work.

"Hold, hold," cried Norah; "spare the graceful vine its rich drapery of foliage, I pray thee; cut not off the bright green leaves and delicate tendrils."

"Nay, lady," said the gardener; "shrink not to behold the rude touch of the pruning knife, although it may sever from the branches much that at present seems ornamental and necessary, yet is this pruning needful. Observe the branch in my hand. Were I to spare these tender offshoots, then would the branch give to them that strength and sustenance which is needful to the growth and perfection of these green clusters of fruit."

"Ah!" said Norah, "I now comprehend why my cherished one was laid in the grave. Oh! how sorely did my heart rebel, and I said with Jacob,—'all these are against me'—even as I would have held back the apparently rude hand of the gardener; not knowing that by the pruning of my leaves, the great Husbandman was preparing me to draw that nourishment from the living Vine, which should mature and ripen the imperfect buds of righteousness just germinating in my heart.

Holy Father! How beneficent art thou in all thy ways; how loving, even in thy chastisements! Behind thy momentary frowns are hidden everlasting smiles. Beneath the dark habiliments of grief is folded the shining drapery of righteousness, in which thine own sorrowing ones shall hereafter be gloriously apparelled.

From henceforth, not my will, but thine, Oh God, be done."

Frequently, when something is to be done, we spend more time in planning how to do it at some future time than it would require to go right and do it at once.

If we do the best we can, God will bless us just the same whether it be done perfectly or not.

If we would take comfort in the worship of God, we must perform it with all our might—throw all our power of mind and body into it.

Eastern Iowa and Rock Island Conference.

According to appointment, a few of the saints assembled at Moline, Ill., Jan. 2d, 1857, to hold their semi-annual Conference.

It was very cheering to greet the brethren and sisters from a distance, and enjoy a season of prayer with them. Yea, as "iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend;" or, as the apostle said when greeting his brethren,—"he thanked God and took courage." Many, no doubt, had a similar feeling inspired in their hearts at this meeting. We give some items of the order.

Bro. P. B. Morgan was chosen President, and Bro. N. Branch, Jr., Secretary pro tem. After choosing a business committee, and voting that those present not in the limits of the conference be considered as members and take part with us, the conference adjourned until the following day, 10 o'clock, A. M., and the brethren spent the rest of the afternoon in waiting on the Lord by prayer and supplication, that the blessing of God might rest upon us. All felt, no doubt, it was not a vain thing to serve the Lord.

In the evening, Bro. Spencer, from Shabbona Grove, preached to the edification and consolation of the saints.

Jan. 3d.—Conference called to order by the President; the morning was spent hearing from the churches. Church in Moline was represented by Bro. Dean. He said, we have had but little preaching of late. Bro. W. Pratt has been with us, but his ill health has prevented him from preaching. We have, however, kept up our regular meetings on the Sabbath, and also our prayer meetings during the week. The state of feeling and interest manifested of late encourages our hearts to go forward. We contemplate having preaching for the future, part of the time.

Cordova Church, Illinois.—Bro. Day remarked, we have preaching from Bro. Morgan and M. Chandler, nearly every Sabbath. We have erected a small chapel, have a Sabbath school and Bible class.

Bro. Rathbone said, there were some in Cordova that were living; they had good congregations and good order, yet there is much prejudice among the people.

Bro. Morgan added, as a church, they had no discord; prayer meetings were neglected—lack of interest, &c.

Princeton Church, Iowa.—Bro. Williams said, they had depended too much on a leader, and had failed to build their contemplated chapel on that account; had a few there that were determined to serve God. They had met in the school-house some, but other meetings frequently interfered: hence, they had to meet in private houses part of the time. Too much coldness among some; hope soon to have preaching statedly. We have had Brn. Morgan and Chandler to preach to us part of the time. Good congregations when they had preaching.

Bro. Murphy remarked, we have a few members, and we feel they are growing in grace. Our prayer and conference meetings have been sustained in private houses.

Bro. Lancaster said, there was nothing to hinder the church from progressing and growing; thought they needed the contemplated chapel erected and stated preaching, to prosper spiritually.

Green River, Ill.—Br. Gove said, there were a few believers there who are trying to live for the coming Kingdom. They were in hopes to be able to have preaching regularly some future time; have a good deal of opposition—have no organized church.

In answer to a question, Bro. Williams from Princeton said, they intended to build a meeting-house the coming summer, Lord willing.

Adjourned to meet after preaching in the evening.

Bro. Spencer gave a good practical discourse on the trials and duty of the church. Conference called at the close of preaching. Elder Morgan gave a history of his coming west, the reasons why he came, his course and object since he arrived here; his trials and discouragements, and his success. Bro. Spencer also gave a history of his experience since he came into the western field. Conference adjourned to 10 o'clock, A. M., to-morrow.

Jan. 4, Sunday morning.—Met according to adjournment. Bro. Pratt introduced the following, which was adopted: Whereas, the western field is large and laborers few, it becomes us to use every means placed in our reach in the providence of God, to warn the world and a luke-warm church of their approaching doom; and, whereas, we have books and tracts on that question and kindred subjects that are timely as well as stirring; and, whereas, Bro. W. Pratt of Moline, Ill., has a large quantity on hand, which he ordered for the western field before being taken sick, and can be had at eastern prices, we therefore recommend to all our brethren in the wide west to avail themselves of these publications, and circulate the tracts far and wide, or place them in the hands of the servant of God who travels, that he may constantly be spreading light and knowledge on the coming Kingdom, the reign of Christ on earth, signs of the times, and near approach of our Lord.

(On account of informality pertaining to some business transactions, we think it inexpedient to publish the report of the business committee.)

Voted, that Brn. Pratt and G. W. Dean, with N. Branch, Jr., be appointed to make a digest of the doings of this conference, for publication in the "World's Crisis" and "Advent Herald."

Voted, that we tender our thanks to the friends of this place for their hospitality.

Voted, that we adjourn to meet on Thursday before the first Sunday in July next, at Cordova, Ill., providence permitting.

The services of the Sabbath were conducted as follows: Bro. W. Pratt, for the first time for some months, took the desk in the morning, and gave us a timely discourse from 1 Pet. 5: 10. We are glad to inform the friends that Bro. Pratt's health is improving.

Bro. N. W. Spencer conducted the afternoon services. Preached a good discourse from 1 Pet. 1: 22.

Evening.—After a refreshing prayer meeting, Bro. P. B. Morgan gave an interesting discourse from 1 Cor. 13: 13. Meeting closed by benediction.

Our brother W. G. Ruggles we missed at this meeting. For years he has been an active member in the church, and has taken much interest in such gatherings. The injury he received a few weeks since in the mill, by the falling of a shaft which struck him on the head, deprives him of these privileges in which he so much delighted. He walks about some, yet his case is a critical one. Physicians think his recovery doubtful. Pray for him, brethren.

Our meeting was not large, but a very good one. Brethren were refreshed, strengthened and encouraged to renew their effort in this glorious work. We confess our report is meager, but we do not wish to appear more than we are. Our field is new, and as yet, but a very small portion cultivated. There must be a beginning, and we will not forget the days of small things, if we are inclined to despise them. Our field is large and only a very few believers, and they are very much scattered; however, our numbers are on the increase, and if time continues a brief space even, we expect to see better days. Pray for us.

W. PRATT,
Chairman of the Committee.

For the Crisis.

Groaning for Deliverance.

When will earth's labors and toil be over? When will the weary aching heart find rest? How long will Time's tempestuous ocean dash its angry waves against life's fragile barque? How long, O, how long will the fierce storm-cloud flap its broad dark pinions o'er us? When will the saint find rest? Yet a little longer, and the long-looked for day of deliverance is here. A few more suns will rise and set, and then will close our weary pilgrimage. The pains and conflicts of this state of mortality will then cease, and stilled will be the heart's wild throbbings. Its bleeding wounds will all be healed and sorrow's poisoned barb will pierce no more.

Yes, pilgrim, before thee lies a shadeless land. The world to come, every way superior to this dim and shadowy vale, is gloriously fair—a calm, a sweet repose. No night comes there to drop around our dwelling its gloomy pall: no pain nor anguish, no parting sigh is heard, no lingering look; 'tis morn, bright, glorious eternal. Effulgent rays of heavenly light resplendent shine, and a garb of living verdure robes the Elysian plain. Celestial melody unceasingly floats in the ambrosial air; angels spread their snowy wings and strike their golden lyres to heavenly strains. Cheering thought! that earth with its groanings, its deep sighs of sorrow, its habitations of cruelty, its battle fields saturated with human gore, its tombs gaping like the insatiate monster, crying, "give, give," and sporting with orphan's tears, and widow's sighs, is not our eternal habitation. Happy hour! when the gloomy prison house of death is opened and the tenants of the dust plume their flight to the mansion prepared for them. Yes, welcome redemption's hour! Rapturous delight as old earth receedeth and the new creation draws nigh.

Toil on, weary one, not long and thou shalt rest; ere long thy aching brow will be pillowed on the bosom of Sovereign love, soon the drear wintry night will pass away, and then dawns eternal day. Sweet will be thy rest, mariner on life's billowy main. Fear not, though fierce the wave, and dark the tempest-cloud; thy pilot faith, thy anchor hope, will safely moor thy feeble, trembling barque in the haven of eternal repose, secure from danger, with a sky serene and radiantly fair.

Lone pilgrim on this barren waste, faint not! Haste! thy journey will soon end, and the last enemy lie vanquished at thy feet. Mourner, weep not! thy lost will soon be found. The jubilee trump will usher in the morning of everlasting release, and then thy sons from far will come, and thy daughters from the ends of the earth. Joyous meeting! part again? no, never! Ye disconsolate, look up, and smile. Eternal sunshine is about to burst upon thy delighted view; a world of changeless joy is soon to dawn upon thee; happy beings will wave their bright wings o'er thee, and smiles of love divine will light thy saddened soul. There the weary will find rest.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—The great pleasure I receive, from time to time, in reading your communications, has prompted me to write a few thoughts to you, and I would write as familiarly as to my own kindred, and why should I not? The tie that binds God's children is far stronger than any earthly tie. We are (or should be) as one family, and have the same care one for the other, sharing each other's joys and sorrows, helping each other to walk in the narrow way that leads to life, "bearing one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." What a privilege, while we are so far separated from each other, that we have this medium by which we can express our thoughts to distant friends, refreshing the mind by way of remembrance—unfolding the treasures of God's storehouse. Though we are isolated from those of like precious faith, and are often sad because we cannot mingle with those who are near and dear to us as life itself, in prayer and praise to our Merciful Father, yet we rejoice that the time is nearing when the faithful family will all be gathered home to that world of joy and blessedness, where separation will be unknown. And though strangers to many of that dear family, we feel a deep love for them, while reading their words of comfort and admonition in the "Crisis," and may all do their duty in the support of that excellent paper.

We often think of those dear brethren and sisters in the far West whom we saw in 1854, and of the happy hours we enjoyed together in the worship of God; and though we may not meet them again in this mortal state, yet we hope soon to meet them with all the saints of every age and clime in the Kingdom of God. It has been twelve years since I first believed in the near coming of Christ, and though we have met with two severe disappointments, and encountered many trials by the way, yet I thank the Lord that I have not been left to cast away my confidence. I believe that soon "He that shall come will come" and give life and immortality to all his faithful ones. Oh, blessed thought—cheering hope in this dark and gloomy night. Without this hope what should we be? As Paul says—"Of all men the most miserable." But Christ has brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. Precious Bible! Treasure thou art to me. When friends die, there is the comfort—they shall live again in Paradise restored.

But when I read of the straitness of the way and few there be that find it, I exclaim, "Who shall be able to stand?" The answer is, "he that hath clean hands and a pure heart." Well, what is it to have a pure heart? The word tells us, it is through keeping the commandments, and we can find them all by carefully studying the New Testament. They are so plain, the wayfaring man though a fool need not err therein. And we can know whether we have a right to the tree of life, yea or nay. In Christ's memorable sermon on the Mount, we are shown the strait and narrow way. Matt. 5 and 6. He tells us to rejoice when we are reviled, persecuted, and have all manner of evil said against us falsely for His sake. We are to love our enemies, to bless them that curse us, do good to them that hate us, and pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us. "And whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them." "Judge not that ye be not judged." "Speak not evil one of another." Again. Jesus says, "thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself." John tells us how we may know that we love the children of God, when we love God and keep his commandments. "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments."

If we do not keep his commandments, and should say we love God and each other, we are deceiving ourselves, and the truth is not in us. Though the way is strait, yet it is possible for us to walk in it; and may we strive constantly to obtain the rest that remains to the people of God.

Yours in hope,

Mary M. Eastman.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 18, 1857.

The Conference.

According to appointment, our conference commenced Tuesday evening, at Chapman Hall, Boston. Bro. Edwin Burnham, Newburyport, Mass., fed the flock of God with the word of life. A good number of the citizens of Boston were present, besides our brethren and sisters, who listened with deep interest. We felt that good was done in the name of the Lord.

Wednesday morning, at 10 o'clock, we met for a prayer and conference meeting, and were very much comforted by the cheering testimonies given by the children of the Lord. Truly it was a heavenly place in Christ Jesus.

In the afternoon we listenod to an interesting discourse from Bro. A. Ross, Skowhegan, Me., showing the importance of being clothed with Christ's righteousness in order that we may be hid in the day of the Lord's vengeance.

In the evening, Bro. S. G. Mathewson, Bakerville, Ct., presented clear evidence from the prophets that Jesus of Nazareth was the promised Messiah; and that all the prophecies relating to the first advent were literally fulfilled; and that by parity of reasoning there is no cause for doubt that all the prophecies referring to his second coming will be as literally accomplished; consequently, Jesus "himself" must come again to this planet. The audience listened with deep attention.

Thursday morning we met again in conference, and rejoiced together in a heavenly place. It was good to be there.

Thursday P. M., Bro. H. L Hastings entertained us with a rich gospel feast from the fourth and fifth chapters of 2nd Cor. The discourse caused an increased love for the appearing of Jesus.

In the evening we had another feast from the Lord by Bro. Burnham, who showed most clearly that Jesus is to reign personally on this planet. Some of us felt truly the need of patience to wait for the day to come, when our dear Savior shall reign in Mt. Zion.

Friday morning we met for another social meeting, and it seemed indeed like the gate to heaven. A large number were present, and were greatly comforted by the soul-stirring exhortations from the followers of Jesus. The spirit of love, and longsuffering were themes dwelt upon with delight by those present. All appeared determined to be more like Jesus. It is our privilege to enjoy but few such meetings with the saints of God.

Friday P. M., Bro. Couch, of Warner, N. H., preached a most interesting and profitable sermon upon the "outer and inner man." It was "meat in due season."

Farther particulars in our next.

Alteration.

Bro. W. Shepherd wishes the following alterations made in his last communication:

In the first line of the second column, it should read, "every human device and system not tarnished," &c. On the same column below the middle, it should read, "while her doctrines are pure and immaculate." Third line following this, read, "neither in the numerous bodies of divinity but in the holy scriptures," &c. Seven lines below, read "clothed with humility." Half way down the first column, read "by divine aid we intend first to contemplate," &c.

Our Contributors.

We wish to express our heartfelt satisfaction in the articles that we receive for the columns of the Crisis. We think our correspondents and contributors are continually improving. Their articles are more devotional, and develope a longing for the spirit of Christ, which has a blessed effect on our readers. Press forward, dear Brethren and Sisters, and our paper will be better still, and we shall find ourselves rapidly progressing in divine life. We love your short and comforting articles baptized with prayer and the spirit of Jesus. Let them come from all towns—from every saint of God, like birds to Noah's ark, that they may help to preserve alive the flock of God. Seize those happy thoughts that flit across the mind, and scatter them like autumn leaves, for they are food to the dear saints of Jesus. Let us comfort and strengthen one another in every possible way, for we are in the midst of "perilous times." Let us write and talk as agents for Jesus, doing all to his glory. We are almost home.

A Sermon, was it? an eloquent sermon? Well, there's no accounting for tastes. I don't like to criticise, but I thought it was simply a lot of pretty words hung to a good text, just as glass beads are strung on a little deerskin and worn, carried, and displayed just for show. A sermon? what! a feast of good, holy, gospel truth, whereon the soul might feed and rejoice in the strength derived from it? Why, it was more like a little boquet of pinks, roses, tulips and marigolds,—that was all, a mere play ot honied words—the rattle of painted chips of glass in a kaleidoscope; a mere twisting of smooth adverbs and delicate adjectives into a kind of "downy bed" where that fashionable pleasure-lover, that hooked-nosed old note-shaver, that old pharisaical devourer of widows' houses, and their fat wives and proud daughters, might ease their consciences, and take a sweet nap, and find the Lord's day a day of rest to them indeed. Such asermon, made up of the fag ends of yellow-covered novel morality, the puerile conceits and pretty figures that would reflect honor upon the productions of some love-sick swain, though it may answer for a congregation of popular church-goers, will hardly do to come into the same field where John thundered—"Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand," or where Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance and of a judgment to come, till Felix trembled and Agrippa was almost persuaded to be a christian. The age that can tolerate such displays is degenerate. The church that can delight in them is backslidden. Such kid-gloved dandies would be very loth to have the mantle of a prophet fall upon them, and with it all the duties and solemn responsibilities which were felt by those faithful men of God in days gone by. Still we need such men for the actual service of this generation. These quaker guns with neither powder or ball; these conservative muskets without lock, stock, or barrel; these wooden swords; these weapons made of lath and basswood are not the things for the conflicts that are before the church of God. No. We need the real Jerusalem blade, clasped in a faithful hand, and wielded with energy and skill. There are mighty foes—we must meet them with mighty weapons.

O for men to fight the good fight. Men that fogetting creeds will cleave to the word of God. Men that come with facts not fancies, with real truths instead of rhetorical flourishes. Men that will not bow to the golden image, and who are not afraid of the king's commandment. Men who preach with their eyes on God and on eternity. Men who can see beyond the clouds and above the gods of earth. Men who speak the awful verities which their souls bear witness are true. Christians, pray that the Lord of the harvest may send forth laborers into the harvest. Preacher, do your duty.

The Lord's Supper.

WINES OF THE ANCIENTS.

BY SAMUEL MASON.

No. IV.

In my last, I endeavored to show that the words "Yayin," "Tirosh," and "Chamer," rendered wine in our translation, invariably implies an unfermented wine, or the "fruit of the vine." I might adduce other phrases, such as the following: "Asis," to tread, meaning the juice which has been trodden out of the grape. In Cant. 8: 2, it is translated "juice," and is applied to the "juice of the pomegranate." The term "Shemarim," is derived from "Shamar," to preserve, and the word literally means, "preserves." It sometimes refers to "lees," or "dregs," but this cannot be its meaning in Isaiah 25: 6. There, it signifies "preserved wine," or "preserves;" for no one can suppose that God would promise to make to all people a feast of "refined lees," or "refined dregs." Indeed, the idea of its being lees or dregs is contradicted by the assertion that it was well defecated or filtered. Its being "well refined or filtered," seems exactly to correspond with the words of Pliny,—"The very best wine is that which has had all its strength broken by the filter." It is worthy of remark that the word "zacac," used by the prophet, and rendered "well refined," is the same word as the Latin "saccus, a filter." In Hebrew, zacc means to refine, or filter, and in Latin, sacco has the very same signification; and it is not a little remarkable that both the Jewish prophet and the Roman naturalist should have used the very same word to express the manner in which the very best wine was produced. Pliny says, "The best wine is that which has had all its strength broken by the filter;" and Isaiah tells us, "In this mountain will the Lord God make unto all people a feast of fat things full of marrow, of preserved wines well refined," or well filtered. Praise the Lord! that will be in the kingdom of our God, when death is swallowed up in victory—Eden restored. I long to be there!

"There gen'rous fruits that never fail,
On trees immortal grow;
There rocks and hills, and brooks and vales,
With milk and honey flow."

But while these observations and arguments demonstrate that the wines of the Scripture were not fermented, I do not intend to affirm that they were all destitute of an intoxicating principle; far from it. There are other substances, besides alcohol, possessing inebriating and stupefying or maddening properties. In the Sacred Volume we have several allusions to such medicinal or deleterious drugs. In Ps. 60: 3, we read of "the wine of astonishment or giddiness." In Ps. 75: 8, it is said that the wine in the cup of Jehovah was red and full of mixture." Isa. in chapter 51: 17, 22, mentions the "cup of trembling or giddiness." In Prov. 23: 30, we read of those who "seek mixed wine." The wine mentioned in Prov. 31: 4–7, was a soporific drink, which kings and princes were prohibited from touching, lest they should "forget the law;" while it was to be given to those that were of a heavy heart, that they might "drink and remember their misery no more." The wine mixed with myrrh, gall, or a species of laudanum, offered to our Lord, was intended to produce stupefaction, and therefore he would not drink. Hence we learn that the strong wines of the ancients were mixed or drugged to render them inebriating, and to these mixtures, rather than to alcohol, they owed their intoxicating powers.

The wine which Noah drank was highly inebriating, but we know, from the heat of the climate, the sweetness of the grapes in warm countries, and the weakness of wines produced from the unmixed juice of the grape, that the wine of that period and vicinity could not, in its natural state, have been very strong; and, even if a very large quantity of liquor had been drank, still it would not have produced the inebriety described. But who will suppose that this patriarch continued long at his cups, or drenched himself with liquor? The difficulty here is easily solved, by considering the curse that lighted upon Ham. It is likely that Noah's sons cultivated the vine for their father, and Ham, most probably, prepared the liquor in question, and drugged it well for the purpose of causing this exposure of his pious parent. The weakness of sweet fermented grape-juice in its unmixed state, the piety of Noah, which would not allow him to drink to excess, the silence of Scripture respecting the guilt Noah of in this transaction, the knowledge which Ham had of his father's degradation, and the heavy curse that lighted on him and his posterity, intimates that the sin of the father was involuntary, and that the son was the chief agent in the transaction, and that drugged rather than alcoholic wine was prepared by his iniquitous son, who probably had learned to do so from antediluvian sensualists.

Thus far, the evidence is conclusive that the wines of the ancients were unfermented, consequently, unintoxicating, except when drugged; then the curse of God rested upon them, and a "woe" is pronounced upon those who look upon them with any degree of approbation. Then let us forever banish the accursed thing from the table of the Lord, and substitute in its stead an emblem, the nectar of heaven, the "fruit of the vine."

God Answers Prayer.

Yes, fellow pilgrim, this is true, and is for our consolation in this vale of tears. "Ask and ye shall receive." "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." These and sundry assurances are rendered still stronger by the good apostle James' assertion with regard to Elijah,—that he was a man "subject to like passions" as others, and yet, God answers his requests in a marvelous manner, showing that if we only believe, we may receive answers to prayer just as wonderful. And the true believer is often astonished at the success with which his petitions are attended at a throne of grace. Small as may be the proportion of his faith, perhaps like the veriest grain of mustard-seed, he asks, and it is done. "Father may I have this blessing?" And a voice, as it were from the throne answers,—"Yes, my child, it is thine." O! wonderful condescension! Amazing love! He, who "meteth out the heavens with a span," who "hangeth the earth upon nothing" who spake all creation into existence—the mighty God of the universe bends his ear to listen to the humble cry of a poor mortal, and attends graciously to his wants! How exaltod the position of a christian—a true child of God! The world may treat him with derision, and lavish upon him their heart-felt pity, that he would deny himself the sordid pleasures in which they are indulging; but they see not that he is in fellowship with the King of Kings, that he is a "friend" of the great Ruler of the universe, and that he can verily "move the hand that moves the world." Would it not be considered a great honor, to be an associate of some worldly potentate, to be admitted frequently into his presence, and gain favors at his hands? But we, fellow pilgrims, are associate, (humbly would we speak it,) with the mightiest Potentate of heaven and earth; and we have access to Him through Christ our Mediator, so that he listens to our petition, and will grant the desires of our hearts. Is not this an honor indeed? with all our trials, and tears, and disappointments? And who will not say that our position is not one of great dignity, even here, where we live and walk by faith alone? Prayer is a golden chain that binds us to the Eternal. It is the ladder which reacheth from earth to heaven, upon which ascend and descend the communications between God and his believing children. Yea, it is the gateway to the glorious dwelling-place of the Invisible, through which floods of light and glory beam upon the soul.

A. C. Judson.

Bro. Grant:—When this reaches you, it will be time for you to receive my remittance for the Crisis, through which I find much comfort and instruction. I would be glad were I capable, to give a short account of the church and its prosperity with us. We are blest with the labors of our beloved Bro. Berick from week to week, for which we thank God and take courage. I think truth is on the march. There are some who are studying the word to see if these things are so; others that have been in the ranks are getting weary. Some have turned to their farms, some to their merchandise, while others are slumbering, and I fear nothing but the thunders of the last day will awake them. Although we dwell where satan's seat is, I trust there will be a few names found even here. It seems to me I never desired more to see the Lord than now. Oh! how long must we pray, "Thy kingdom come?" Nevertheless, I mean to hold out to the end and endure hardships as a good soldier ot Jesus, for unto such only is the promise given. I love the communion of saints here, and long to be brought with the whole family of the redeemed into the promised inheritance, for which we sigh.

Yours, waiting for the promise at the ending of the days,

Sarah C. Clark.

For the Crisis.

"Be Ye Holy."

"Having, therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." 2 Cor. 7: 1.

The Apostle Paul has, in addressing the Corinthian Church, used the most pathetic language, and at the same time thrown in words of reproof which, if heeded, would make them wise unto salvation. After showing the straitness of the way and the difficulties that attend the way, he connects exceedingly precious promises as if to encourage those early christians, and us, who live down near the close of the gospel age, to a holy life in Christ.

"Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved,"—in the first place, I would like to ask what those promises are to which Paul makes allusion in our text. The first is in Chap. 6: 17,—"I will receive you;" Ver. 18, "and will be a Father unto you." The second,—"and ye shall be my sons and daughters."

Who made these promises? Paul adds,—"the Lord Almighty." Then God has declared that we shall be his sons and daughters; surely he has, but these promises are, like all others, conditional.

Paul has shown the requisite to our adoption; "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." Here is brought to view a coming out, separating from them, a work for us to perform just as much as repentance, baptism, or any other duty imposed on the church. But some will ask, from what shall I come out? Them, a term used in the plural; therefore, there are many things to forsake in order to be a christian. Here is the summing up of all in a few words. First, "be ye not unequally yoked with unbelievers." Let me remark here, that there is a disposition in many to treat this Scripture truth with great coldness. Let such remember, by this they will be judged in the last day. The people of God have ever been a separate people, there has ever been a marked difference between them and the world; and while they have followed the golden rule they have prospered, the hand of God has been visible among them. But, when a disposition has manifested itself among God's people to compromise with the world, God has frowned upon them, and they have become sickly, and many have fainted by the way. In proof of this, we have only to look at the travels of God's people in ancient times; indeed, we may look at the church in this time, we need not refer to others than those professing to be Adventists. Among this number we find the world-loving of all ranks, though sad to relate. There are churches who have humbled themselves before God and found favor in his sight; but, alas! the love of the world, and honor, and the pride of life, have led them to seek the applause of man, and they have opened a way for the enemy; and no sooner is this done than he accepts. Their power to prevail with God is gone, and they, ere they are aware, have become a wreck. Though still they may hear a polished sermon from time to time, and pay well for it, and maintain well the form, yet there is a lack of that they once possessed; there is no vitality in it, no power to save. Their numbers grow less, they struggle hard to keep the form—God still frowns. They are confused among themselves, they bite and devour one another.

And why all this? Why are they left like the barren fig tree? Ah! the great mistake is they have not the promises referred to in the text. Such, have violated the first principle given by the Apostle, requisite to their adoption as sons and daughters of the Lord. They are yoked up with unbelievers, yoked in politics, in pride, in love of gain, in strife, &c. Their union with Christ is broken. If we would be in possession of these promises to which Paul refers, we must separate ourselves from the world; we must do it as ministers as well as laymen. God requires it, and except we obey we cannot be his disciples.

Again. The text says,—"having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." We are to cleanse ourselves. It appears that after we are adopted by faith into the family of God, there remains a work for us as individuals to perform. And even then, we have but just begun to work out our own salvation, which is to be done with fear and trembling. We are all diseased with the filthiness of the flesh and spirit; hence, we are to cleanse ourselves from them.

First, what are we to understand by the filthiness of the flesh? There are many significations that might be given to this phrase. I shall name but a few and let those be to the point. In Gal. 5: 16, we read as follows: "this I say then, walk in the spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh." Now, the lust of the flesh acted out constitutes the filthiness of the flesh; and the Apostle goes on to show in verse 19, what we are to cleanse ourselves from. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, &c.

Again. The same Apostle instructs us, in Col. 3: 8, to put filthy communications out of our mouth. Now, if our conversation is not in agreement with the gospel of Christ, it is filthiness of the flesh. Brethren, if our hands are clean from iniquity, we shall not steal our neighbors goods; if our feet are shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, we shall not get on to the Devil's ground; no more shall we suffer our tongue to speak guile if it is clean before God. But the spirit in man has something to do with the acts of man, or, in other words, the flesh. If the mind is constantly planning some work of vice, the body will soon act in concert with it; hence, the spirit must be cleansed in order that the man may perfect holiness in the fear of God.

Be sure to think right. See to it that thy heart is right in the sight of God. A little from this and our work will be done. Let us be up and work while the day lasts.

J. A. PACKARD.

Obituary.

Died in New York, Jan. 13th, the last and only daughter of Brother and Sister Green, FLORENCE JULIACETE, aged 10 months and 7 days.

Our beloved brother and sister have received another addition to their fiery afflictions. This little girl is the third child, in five weeks, taken from this family. Its sojourn was brief, but its experience of human suffering out of proportion to the common allotment of adventurers upon the voyage of human life.

Our friends think, no doubt, they are receiving a larger share of correction than should fall to them. This is a common temptation in severe trials. We are apt to think that some strange thing has happened unto us. This the Scriptures foresaw, and kindly put us on our guard. "Though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations; that the trial of your faith, being more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 1: 6, 7. This is a most happy view to take of trials; that they are not inflicted by an enemy, but by a friend, not to afflict and torture for its sake, but for our profit.

"We have had fathers of our flesh" who "chastened us after their own pleasure." But our Father in Heaven cannot be suspected of inflicting chastisement, either out of measure or out of season, or for any other motive than our reformation. We have given reverence to earthly administrators of their own will; "shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits and live?

"Ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children; My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." Heb. 12: 5-11.

These trials are not joyous, but grievous. They are not intended for any thing but trials. We cannot choose the kind, nor quality, nor quantity, nor the time and place, nor the circumstances. They are not intended as indulgences or gratifications, but the reverse. It is God dealing with sons. "For what son is he whom the father chasteneth not?"

It is nothing to the credit of human nature, however, that it obliges God to employ such severe discipline; even that they must be struck down—wounded—crushed—have their hopes blasted—enterprises wrecked, and all should

"Sickness blast,
And death devour."

But let the church sing in joyful hope,—
"O death, where now's thy sting,
Since Christ the Lord has risen?
And grave, thy boasted victory,
Since 'gifts' to men are given?"

B. MATTHIAS.

New York, Jan. 31, '57.

Died in Clement's Port, N. S., Charlie F., youngest son of Bro. Israel and Sr. Sarah Gillett, aged one year and five days.

While the parents are called to mourn the loss of their little son they do not sorrow as others that have no hope, for they believe that Jesus died and rose again, and that even so them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him.

The funeral was attended by the writer (being absent at the time of the death,) Lord's day, the 12th of Jan. Text, Hosea 13: 14.

TO MY DEAR INFANT.

"Farewell, farewell, my own sweet babe! 'tis hard to give thee up,
Yet He who wills its bitterness, can help me drink the cup!
Oh, may His plenteous grace sustain, and soothe my bursting heart,
While with my lov'd my cherished one, I thus so early part!

To see thy suff'rings, dearest one, my heart could scarcely brook—
I did not deem that death was near, though agonized thy look;
And when they told me thou wert dead, I thought it could not be,
Those pearly lips, that velvet cheek, so precious seem'd to me!

I saw them lay thee in the grave, that resting place so deep!
My spirit oft shall hover near, and its sad vigils keep;
And I shall watch the springing grass upon thy narrow bed,
And plant sweet flow'rets o'er thy grave, my beautiful, MY DEAD.

But Oh! my home is desolate, robb'd of my sweetest flow'r,
For mine is not the love which springs, and withers in an hour;
But many weeks of weary toil, and some of anxious care,
Many a restless, sleepless night, for thee I did not spare!

And in thy strong convulsions, when human power was vain,
I watched thee with a tearless eye, to see thee wake again,
To catch once more thy beauteous smile, and greet thy joyous eye—
How could thy mother's heart believe, that then my babe would die!

I weep, but 'tis all over now—my grieving is in vain—
Then why should I lament thee, love, or wish thee here again?
Alas, this void within my heart, no earthly gifts can fill—
No pow'r but that which rules the world, can stay my restive will!

That fairy voice will join the strain of ransomed ones in heaven,
And he will tune the tiny harp that unto him is given;
There at the feet of Jesus, he will cast a crown of joy,
And ever praise His holiness, and love without alloy."

ARRIVAL OF THE ANGLO-SAXON AT PORTLAND.

PORTLAND, Feb. 13.

The steam propeller Anglo-Saxon, from Liverpool, about 10 A. M., 28th ult., arrived below this port at an early hour this morning.

It is said that the French force will certainly evacuate Greece this spring. Reinforcements are being sent to Africa against the Kabyles.

Jeruk Khan, Ambassador from Persia, has had an official presentation to the Emperor. The Emperor made a guarded reply, taking care to imply that the treaty between France and Persia is commercial only.

TURKEY.—The Conferences at Constantinople concerning the Principalities, have at length terminated, and 10,000 Turkish troops are to be marched into Wallachia and Moldavia, to keep order during the elections.

GREAT BRITAIN.—There was a rumor that on the fall of Bushire the Persians made submission to the British, but the London journals have no confirmation of the report, and mostly doubt it.

Parliament will re-assemble February 3d, and the Queen's speech will be read by commission.

SWITZERLAND.—The Paris Moniteur officially confirms the statement that in mediation in the Neufchatel affair, Napoleon acted in reliance on a confidential knowledge of the King of Prussia's intentions, and that Switzerland may safely disarm, as Prussia is doing, having dismissed the troops to their homes.

It is possible that difficulties may remain as to claims as to the King of Prussia to have his standard float on the castle of Neufchatel.

ITALY.—From Naples accounts are deplorable. Terror reigns throughout the Capital and Kingdom. Arrests continue incessantly. A priest has attempted to assassinate the Archbishop of Matera while he was giving his benediction to the people. The Archbishop was wounded, and a canon, who attempted to protect him, was shot dead by the assassin.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The Royal Mail Steamship Europa, from Liverpool Saturday, 31st ult., arrived here at 5.15 this morning, en route for Boston.

Her dates are three days later than the advices per City of Baltimore and Anglo-Saxon.

There is no new feature in the political news.

TURKISH CRUELTIES TO CHRISTIANS.—BELGRADE, Jan. 8.—According to letters from Widden, the old Turkish Judicial customs against the rajahs (Christians) are being re-established in all their rigor along the frontier of Bulgaria. A commissioner is, besides, occupied in making inspections respecting the kmots (local judges,) and he dismisses all such as do not appear to him to be well disposed to the Turks, and he sends them to Widden, where they are prosecuted on some pretext or other. Another commissioner, sent from Constantinopla, and who is also making inspections in Bulgaria, has ordered that all the young women and girls of the villages through which he passes should go forth to meet him; and as the kmet of the village of Staikouze sent young men instead of females, the commissioner had him bastinadoed. A number of the inhabitants of this village, fearing the cruelty of the commissioner, wanted to fly into Servia, but could not be admitted owing to their having no passports. The severity of the Turkish authorities in Bulgaria is greater in the frontier districts than in the centre; but it is certain that there exists great agitation in all the province.—Augsbury Gazette.

SUFFERINGS OF THE LABORING CLASSES IN ENGLAND.—A meeting of between five and ten thousand of the laboring classes of London was lately held to consider their present distressed condition. It was stated that twenty-five thousand of the building trade alone in that city are out of work, and that the total number of unemployed persons in that great metropolis, would probably reach a quarter of a million. It was voted to petition the Government to employ those who would work on the waste lands, loaning them money to drain and fill them. No doubt they can raise a sufficiency of corn upon them for the wants of all.

Domestic Summary.

ALBANY, Feb 9.—Tremendous Flood and Fire.—A tremendous flood occurred here last night, causing damage to the amount, it is estimated, of $2,000,000. The city, through the night, has been the scene of the utmost confusion from fire and water.

The water continued rising till 4 o'clock this morning, when it reached a point.

Several Canal boats were carried down the stream, and others left on the wharves by the subsiding waters.

Laborers have been working all night removing goods in the lower part of the city, to the second stories, where, it was thought, they would be safe, but at 11 o'clock the water began rising so rapidly that the workmen were obliged to desist, and run for safety.

The whole lower portion of the city, as high up as Green St. is flooded.

Broadway is flooded from the Exchange to the Delevan House. The stores and cellars on the west side are filled with water.

The lower parts of Herkimer, Hudson and Parallel streets are submerged to the first stories.

All the streets between Broadway and the river are navigable by boats.

A large number of cattle have been drowned.

At 3 o'clock a fire alarm was sounded from different parts of the city, adding to the terrors of the scene.

Warren & Son's building, Broadway. Gibson & Dalton's planing mills, and Barret's warehouse on the pier, being all in flames at the same time.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

WALKER STRONGLY FORTIFIED.—REVOLUTION IN PERU.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.

The steamer George Law, from Aspinwall evening of Feb. 3d, arrived at this port at 6 o'clock. She brings San Francisco dates of 20th January.

The Captain of the Sierra Nevada reports that he saw Walker at Rivas, on the 17th of January, and that then the Allies had not taken Virgin Bay, as reported by the British steamer at Greytown, nor had they made any attempt upon San Juan del Sur.

Walker had an effective force of 1200 men, and is strongly fortified at Rivas, where he has a foundry for casting balls

The Nicaragua route, however, is broken up.

Walker had not heard of the capture of his steamers up to the 17th, but suspected something wrong.

The revolution in Peru progresses, the insurgents drawing gradually nearer the Capital.

TERRIBLE SUFFERING ON THE PLAINS.—A correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, writing from Independence, Mo., under date of Jan. 4, gives further particulars of the terrible sufferings of the Mormons crossing the Plains, westward. The Salt Lake mail, which arrived at Independence on the 20th, met one of the Mormon trains near Beau river, others having already reached their destination in good condition. The correspondent says:

"The fourth and fifth trains were met at the three crossings of Sweet Water, in a very different condition from those in advance. They are suffering beyond measure for the want of provisions, and on account of the cold. They were very badly clothed, and in consequence of the hardships, many of them were dying; in one camp they buried fifteen in one day. The mode of burial, since they cannot dig the frozen ground, is to lay the bodies in heaps, and pile over them willows and heaps of stones.

Gov. Brigham Young, learning something of their condition, dispatched some men and provisions for their relief; but these were met by the mail party returning to the city again, having been turned back by the violence of the storms they encountered. What the poor creatures will do, or what will become of them, it is hard to tell."

A Salt Lake correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, under date of Oct. 31, says:

"We have dreadful accounts of the sufferings among the Mormon emigrants by the hand cart train, which is now in the mountains. The train contained three hundred and fifty souls. One-seventh are already dead, and they are dying at the rate of fifteen per day. There are some five hundred more behind, of which we have heard nothing. We hope they stopped at Laramie. It is impossible for them to get through this fall. The Mormons estimated that there are not less than fifteen hundred of their brethren yet to come in, and the snow is reported to be not less than a foot deep in the mountains."

SINGULAR INSTANCE OF AFFECTION IN A DOG.—Charles Hueston, a man well known on the Alabama river, but the last few years a resident of California, was killed by the explosion of a steamboat near San Francisco a few months since. A noble Newfoundland dog, owned by him, escaped injury, and dragged the body of his master to the shore. The dog was sent home to the mother of the deceased residing in Perry county, Alabama On being shown a daguerreotype of his lost master, the dog immediately recognized it, and commenced licking it, and sending up the most piteous howls. Since that time he has refused all food, and moans almost constantly. When last heard from he was in a dying condition, and is probably dead by this time. Where, in human history, can be found such an instance of devoted love, and intense grief at the loss of a loved one?

A SINGULAR FASCINATION.—An Englisa paper relates the following unaccountable occurrence:

One of the most singular instances in connection with material things, exists in the case of a young man who, not very long ago, visited a large iron manufactory. He stood opposite a large hammer, and watched with great interest its perfectly regular strokes. At first it was beating immense lumps of crimson metal into thick black sheets; but the supply becoming exhausted, at length it only descended on the polished anvil. Still the young man gazed intently on its motion, then he followed its stroke with a corresponding motion of his head; then his left arm moved to the same tune; and finally, he deliberately placed his fist upon the anvil, and in an instant it was smitten to a jelley. The only explanation he could offer was, that he felt an impulse to do it, that he knew he should be disabled, that he saw all the consequences in a misty kind of sense, but that he still felt the power within above sense and reason—a morbid impulse, in fact, to which he succumbed, and by which he lost a good right hand.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.—Advices from Tampico, Mexico, to the 14th of January, state that a battle had been fought on the 6th inst. between the revolutionary forces under Gen. Garcia and the government troops, in which many lives were lost on both sides, but the government forces claimed the victory. The battle occurred at Old Town, and during its continuance nearly every building in the place was pillaged by the invaders.

Gen. Garcia, with his troops, was advancing upon Tampico, being only a few miles from the town. The government forces, however, were preparing to give him battle. The American Consul at Tampico has sent on a request to the Collector of New Orleans, asking that a revenue cutter be sent immediately to the scene for the protection of the American residents of the place and their property, as the revolutionsts threaten to pillage the town.

HOG COLERA AND HOGS.—This disease is rapidly increasing. The Madison (Ind.) Courier says it has appeared in that city, in the distilleries at Milton, and at Carrolton, Ky. Large numbers, it is said, have died at the last named place, and about two hundred at Milton. The hogs often die in half an hour after they are attacked. The Vernon (Ind.) Courier remarks that hundreds have recently died of it in that county, and that sulphur in slop has been found beneficial.

LETHARGY.—The Springfield Republican of the 25th ult, says:

A young woman, some 26 years old, an entire stranger called at a house in Salem, Ill., recently, where she soon fell asleep, and has remained in that state for several days. She lies apparently in a deep, lethargic slumber, perfectly motionless and silent, with a very faint pulse and dry skin, and to all appearance destitute of sensation, either of pain or pleasure. Thus far all efforts to awaken her have proved unavailing.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 15.—The Seminole War.—Gen. Harney has withdrawn his flag of truce, and declared war against the Indians.

SNOW IN FLORIDA.—We have had a gale, accompanied with snow. The thermometer is down to 82.

SINGULAR FACT.—Macauley, in his History of England, states the significant fact, that no large society of which the language is not Teutonic (Gothic) has ever turned Protestant; and that wherever a language derived from ancient Rome is spoken, the religion of modern Rome to this day prevails.

MINISTERS AND DEACONS CHILDREN.—Rev. Asa Bullard, the indefatigable secretary of the Massachusetts S. S. Society, has collected statistics during the past two years to refute the oft-repeated proverb that 'the children of ministers and deacons are worse than other children." He sums up the result as follows:—

"In 241 families of ministers and deacons, there were 1,164 children over fifteen years of age. Of these chileren 814—more than three-fourths—were hopefully pious; 732 had united with the church; 57 had entered the ministry, or were engaged in their preparatory studies; and only 14 were dissipated, about one half of whom, only, became so while residing with their parents. In eleven of those families—four of them ministers and seven deacons—there were 123 children, of whom all but seven were hopefully pious; seven of them were deacons and fifteen ministers. In 56 of those families there were 249 children over 15 years of age, and ALL hopefully pious!

Poetry.

THE WAY TO FIND OUT PRIDE.

SELECTED BY J. HOWELL.

"Pride, ugly pride, sometimes is seen,
In haughty looks and lofty mein;
But oftener it is found that pride
Loves deep within the heart to hide;
And while the looks are mild and fair,
It sits and does its mischief there.
Now if you really wish to find
If pride be lurking in your mind,
Inquire if you can bear a slight,
Or patiently give up your right.
Can you submissively consent
To take reproof and punishment,
And feel no angry passions start
In any corner of your heart?
Can you with frankness own a crime,
And promise for another time?
Or say you've been in a mistake,
Nor try some poor excuse to make,
But freely own that it was wrong
To argue for your side so long?
Flat contradiction can you bear,
When you are right and know you are?
Nor flatly contradict again,
But wait and modestly explain,
And tell your reasons one by one,
Nor think of triumph when you've done?
Can you in business or in play,
Give up your wishes or your way?
Or do a thing against your will,
For some one who is younger still,
And never try to overbear,
Or say a word that is not fair?
Does laughing at you in a joke,
No anger or revenge provoke:
But can you laugh yourself, and be
As merry as the company?
Or when you find that you could do
By them as they have done by you,
Can you keep down the wicked thought,
And do exactly as you ought?
Put all these questions to your heart,
And make it act an honest part;
And when they've each been fairly tried
I think you'll own that you have pride;
Some one will suit you as you go,
And force your heart to tell you so;
But if the whole should be denied,
Then you're too proud to own your pride."

THE WAY TO CURE PRIDE.

"Now I suppose that having tried,
And found the secret of your pride,
You wish to drive it from your heart,
And learn to act an humble part.
Well, are you sorry and sincere?
I'll try to help you then, my dear.
And first, the best and surest way,
Is to kneel down at once and pray.
The lowly Savior will attend,
And strengthen you and be your friend.
Tell Him the mischief that you find
Forever working in your mind,
And beg his pardon for the past,
And strength to overcome at last.
But you must not go your own way,
And think it quite enough to pray;
This is but doing half your task,
For you must watch as well as ask.
You pray for strength, and that is right,
But then it must be strength to fight;
For where's the use of being strong,
Unless you conquer what is wrong?
Then look within—ask every thought
If it be humble as it ought.
Put out the smallest spark of pride
The very moment 'tis descried;
And do not stay to think it o'er,
For while you wait it blazes more.
If it should take you by surprise,
And beg you just to let it rise,
And promise not to keep you long,—
Say, 'No, the smallest pride is wrong.'
And when there's something so amiss,
That pride says, 'Take offence at this,'
Then if you feel at all inclined
To brood upon it in your mind,
And think revengeful thoughts within,
And wish it were not wrong to sin—
O stop at once! for if you dare
To wish for sin, that sin is there!
'Twill then be best to go and pray
That God would take your pride away;
Or, if just then you cannot go,
Pray in your heart, and God will know;
And beg his mercy to impart
The best of gifts—a humble heart.
Remember, too, that you must pray,
And watch, and labor, every day;
Nor think it wearisome, or hard,
To be forever on your guard.
No—every morning must begin
With resolutions not to sin;
And every evening recollect
How much you've failed in this respect.
Ask whether such a guilty heart
Should act a proud or humble part;
Or, since the Savior was so mild,
Inquire if pride becomes a child;
And when all other things are tried,—
Be humble that you've so much pride."

For the Crisis.

LONGING.

When shall I cease to weep
Opprest with earthly woe?
When shall I cease my watch to keep,
Where storms and tempests blow?

When shall I cease to mourn
My absence from my Lord?
When shall I hail his glad return,
According to His word?

When shall my gazing eye
Behold his conquering train?
When shall I rise to Him on high
To part no more again?

Soon shall the day-star dawn,
Soon shall the morning break;
Soon shall the Lord of Life return,
And all his saints awake.

Till then I'll tune my song,
In mournful notes of pain:
And weep if he shall tarry long
Till he returns again.

Then, then I'll sound his praise
Through all the heavenly plains,
And angels on the hills of light
Shall wonder at the strains. M. L. H.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

Bro. Grant:—It is a long time since I have written to the "Little Flock," everywhere spoken against by the wicked; and proud, ungodly professors. I feel that my time is short, and what I do here in probation, must be done quickly. I am doing but little for God and his blessed cause; and it seems as though but little can be done here, where so much superstition, popular fable, and unbelief exist. O! I feel to pray that God would cause the deaf to hear, the blind to see, and the dumb to speak, and speak too for God and his truth! How much precious time, talent, and money too are expended, not to establish the truths of the Bible, for the sole purpose of saving men's souls; but to propagate error, and to build up sectarian divisions! Men are so in love with popular theology—the doctrines of men, that they prefer error to truth, and heathen philosophy to plain, Bible theology! This reminds me of the prediction of the Apostle, who says, that in the latter days men shall "heap to themselves teachers having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." "Popular mockery" is the order of the day! Pride, ambition, love of money, fashion and custom form a mighty whirlpool, into which a large majority of the human race are drawn! And oh! their approaching doom! They have been told of their course, and what their end must be; but they will not heed the warning! so they must suffer the awfully sad consequence of meeting their Judge unprepared! Let us, dear brethren and sisters, do our duty faithfully to those around us as God requires of us, thus freeing our garments from the blood of precious souls. Let us remember that "he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death (the second death) and shall hide a multitude of sins." How important then, that we let our light so shine before men, that they seeing our good works may be led to glorify God. O brethren and sisters be faithful, faithful, till you all arrive at home.

As it regards the Adventists here in Goshen, there are only about half a dozen of us, and we are poor, and live scattered among the hills, with none seemingly to care for us now, since our beloved Bro. Wm. Sheldon went to Minnessota. We had very good and profitable meetings while he was with us; and our prayer meetings for several months after Bro. S. left, were very interesting and profitable to the little humble few that attended them. But the Devil, who is always busy, finally got his dividing foot in among us and broke up our meetings. But, I do believe that God will overrule it all for good, and his declarative glory. Amid all our trials, we have much to comfort and encourage us. To say the least, we have God our Heavenly Father to go to daily; and we also have God's blessed Book to read, to teach us what to do, and how to do under every circumstance. And in addition to these the Holy Spirit is granted us, to guide us into all truth. And then we have the weekly visits of the World's Crisis; which comes freighted with abundance of good and interesting matter from our dear brethren and sisters in Christ. I feel as though I had a precious conference meeting with the dear children of God every week, through the Crisis. May the Lord bless Bro. Grant, and give him abundant grace and wisdom, and divine consolation; that he may be duly qualified for the arduous and responsible duties devolving upon him.

I am glad that the brethren in Boston have invited the sitting of another conference with them; may the glory and blessings of the "latter" far exceed that of the "former" one. I should be very happy, I think, to meet the persecuted and the despised ones of earth, and participate with them in their joys and their sorrows. May the Great Head of the church preside over the meeting, and make it a great and lasting blessing to the little flock." Finally; I want to just say to the faithful few, "Be of good cheer;" "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "The life that we now live should be by faith on the Son of God." Then we shall grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Savior. Act circumspectly; redeem the time, "walking worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work." This will enable us to become permanently settled in the "blessed hope." And by putting on the whole armor of righteousness, we shall be "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might;" praying always with all prayer, giving thanks ever for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of Jesus Christ. Thus, we may be preserved blameless unto the glorious, second coming of our Lord and Savior. But my dear brethren, "we have need of patience; that after we have done the will of God, we might receive the promise; for yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." Let us press towards the mark for the prize of our high calling. Eternal life and glory is just before us; let us hold fast our confidence in God and his truth, till Jesus comes. "Occupy till I come," says Jesus. And in closing, I can honestly and heartily adopt the language of Bro. Shepherd, and say, that the "Signs on the earth, in the sky, on the seas, in the sun, the moon and stars—perplexity and distress of nations—signs in the ecclesiastic, moral, social, political, military and civil world,—all proclaim in seventh-trumpet tones His coming very near, 'EVEN AT THE DOOR!'" And fellow Pilgrims, in all your trials, afflictions, difficulties, persecutions, griefs, disappointments, poverties and sorrows; in the midst of all these, do not let the mere transient shadow of the cross eclipse the brillianoy, splendor, and ultimate glory of the crown. Gazing upon this fadeless gem, "Be of good cheer." And may the ever-living and eternal God help you to be encouraged to unflinching perseverance, manfully going forward with firm and energetic steps until the crowning consummation"—till Jesus our Redeemer shall come in the glory of the Father, with the angels; then he will reward every man according to his works. Yours in the Hope of the Resurrection of the dead. Amen.

N. B. We should like to have Bro. E. Burnham, or Bro. J. Couch, or some other preaching brother come and visit us, and preach one sermon, if no more, before this dispensation closes! P. T.

For the Crisis.

From Sr. M. J. White.

Bro. Grant:—I feel impressed to speak a few words to the children through the Crisis. I fear that the reason why there is so little growth in grace amongst us is, because some are thinking of themselves more highly than they had ought to think; while others, perhaps, are right the reverse, because their talent is so small and they can't pray and exhort like some others. Both will grieve the spirit and hide their Lord's money. My brothers and sisters, this will never do. My Bible says, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption;" and again, we are commanded to be "always abounding in the work of the Lord." The great trouble with us is, we are not willing to work in the harness that the Lord has provided for us; but, that is the only one we can work in to the glory of God and the good of our own souls. Brethren and sisters, as we value eternal life—a never-fading crown of glory which can only be obtained "by patient continuance in well doing," let us get right down humble, and be willing to bear the cross in every place. When we meet in a prayer circle we have a work to do; there is a cross to bear that no one else can bear for us; and the only way for us to be benefited by assembling ourselves together is, to move right forward in the discharge of duty as soon as we feel the spirit moving upon our hearts. If we can't pray or speak but a very few words, it will be just as pleasing in the sight of God, and we shall get blessed and go home with our Savior's smiles resting down upon us. May God help us to awake to a new engagedness in his cause—be willing to become anything or nothing for the sake of Christ. If we are not there, brothers and sisters, we must be there, or we shall never enter "through the pure celestial gates." Here we are tried and tempted on every side; the Devil is "walking about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour."

"Yes, satan will ever annoy us,
His darts he will hurl at the just;
But, surely, he ne'er can destroy us,
So long as in Jesus we trust."

Praise God, for the blessed promise that we shall not be tempted more than we are able to bear! Soon our blessed Lord is coming, and then we shall be free. Then let us give our armor another girding—be ready at all times to resist the Devil, and we'll soon obtain the crown. We are commanded to love the Lord with all our might, mind, and strength. Now you know that people are apt to think upon the subject that most interests them, and if we are interested for our salvation, as we must be to obtain it, it will certainly be our meditation and conversation. This vain and foolish talking, jesting and joking, evil speaking, filthy communications, and the like, will all be put away, entirely put away, and our mind and conversation will be in heaven, from whence we look for our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Now about loving God with all the strength, perhaps some of my brethren and sisters will not agree with me exactly; but I am firm in the belief that it takes the whole man to be a christian. We can't love God with all the strength, and take up the Crisis week after week as we do, and read how much good might be accomplished by tracts, if brethren only had the means to purchase them—the editor's call for help—sister Page's call for assistance, &c., and withhold the helping hand; that is if we have the means. I thank God that it is according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not. Of course, it is every one's duty first to provide for themselves and families the necessaries of life; but look out, brother, sister, that you don't purchase any of the *un*necessaries. If we just bring our standard of eating and dressing down to the Bible rule, perhaps we shall have a few coppers now and then to give to the Lord's poor. God has provided a Bank for all the pilgrim's spare change, and he demands it; our money can preach if we can't. O, how much more good there might be done if it were not for this abominable covetousness. I don't find any place in Christ's teachings, that will justify me, or you, in looking out or laying up for future days. Christ says, "take no thought for to-morrow," &c., and give to the poor." "Lay not for yourselves treasures upon the earth," but provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that falleth not." Now we pretend to believe that the Bible means just what it says; and in the name Israel's God, brothers and sisters, let us act as though we believed it, and obey its requirements. May God help us to be Bible christians—to get rid of this tongue-worship, and get the matter rooted down deep into our hearts, and pockets too; and then we shall bring forth fruit. Let us believe God's precious promise, that "no good thing will be withheld from them that walk upright." Let us battle with self and satan a little longer, children, and thank God, in a little from this, if faithful, we shall hear it said unto us,—"well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." O then let us be faithful, and with St. Paul, count all things else as dross if we may but win Christ.

Yours in christian love,

Mary J. White.

THE PHILOSOPHER'S SCALES.

A meek man of earth once retired, at his will,
To weigh human action—the good and the ill—
In the scales of philosophy, formed to his mind,
And thus he proceeded, as he was inclined:
He first weighed kingdoms, and empires, and thrones,
And found them outweighed by a few martyrs' bones!
He next weighed honor, and power, and fame,
And found them all lighter than one christian's name!
He then weighed pleasure, and glitter, and show—
Determined, with candor, their value to know,—
He put in the opposite scale, with due care,
One penitent's simple and short earnest prayer;
When looking with wonder, he saw with delight
The scale with the prayer in come down quick as sight!
He next tried wealth and aristocrat pride,
And found of a truth—for his scales never lied—
That a morsel of virtue did much more avail,
Than those lying heaped in the opposite scale!
When weighing out heroes, he plainly did find,
A thousand outweighed by an humble man's mind!
A victorious army when put in the scales,
And balanced with what sweet contentment avails,
Went up with rebound in an instant of time,
No longer to boast of great actions sublime.
He finally weighed all that mortals called great,
And found throughout empire, and kingdom, and state,
That nothing is better for man to possess,
In all his relations, than true HOLINESS!

Choice Selections.

The Protestants are outdoing the Popes, Babylon of old, the mother of Harlots, in splendid, extravagant folly in church building. Thousands on thousands are expended in gay and costly ornamentals to gratify pride, and a wicked ambition, that might and should go to redeem the perishing millions! Does the evil, the folly, and the madness of these proud, formal, fashionable worshipers stop here?

These splendid monuments of popish pride, upon which millions are squandered in our cities, virtually exclude the poor, for which Christ died, and for whom he came especially to preach.

There is not a vestige of proof, authority, example, or intimation in the New Testament to justify this splendid folly, not a particle. "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach to the poor." "He that oppresseth the poor, reproacheth his Maker." See also 1 Cor. 26–27.

No wonder God witholds his holy influences! No marvel the heavens are brass, and the earth iron!

Go into one of these fashionable, costly, highly ornamented popular church edifices, what do you see and hear? Christ? Sinners weeping between the porch and the altar? Do you? "Wo to the crown of pride," "Wo unto the idle shepherds," "Wo to you ye blind guides," "Wo unto them that are at ease in Zion." Wo! wo! wo!—Golden Rule.

[Bro. Grant:—The following article was put into my hand by Bro. Crawford, of Roxbury, who seems to love to hunt for such kind of pearls. I was pleased with it, and thought it good for the Crisis. You will see by the paper on which it is printed, and by the literature of the article that it is very old; but where it came from, I do not know. Please print it just as it now is.—E. Burnham.]

The Bible.

A nation must be truly blessed, if it were governed by no other laws than those of this blessed Book, it is so complete a system, that nothing can be added to it, or taken from it: it contains everything needful to know, or to be done; it affords a copy for a King, Deut. 17, 18, and a rule for a subject; it gives instruction, and council to a Senate; authority and direction for a Magistrate, cautions a Witness, requires an impartial verdict of Jury, and furnishes the Judge with his sentence; it sets the husband, as lord of the household, and the wife as mistress of the table; tells him how to rule, and her how to manage. It entails honor to parents, and enjoins obedience to children. It describes and limits the sway of the ruler in authority; commands the subject to honor, and the servant to obey; and promises the blessings and protection of its Author, to all that walk by its Rules! It gives direction for burials, it promises food and raiment, and limits the use of both; it orders labor for the day, and rest for the night. It points out a faithful, and Eternal Guardian to the departing husband, and father, tells him with whom to leave his fatherless children, and in whom his widow is to trust; Jer. 49: 2, and promises a Father to the former, and a husband to the latter. It teaches a man how to set his house in order, and how to make his will; it appoints a dowry for the wife, and entails the right of the first-born, and shows how the younger branches shall be left; it defends the right of all; and the oldest Book in all the world; it contains the choicest matter; gives the best instruction; affords the greatest pleasure, and satisfaction that ever was revealed. It contains the best of laws, and profoundest mysteries, that ever were penned; it brings the best of tidings, and affords the best of comfort to the enquiring, and disconsolate. It exhibits life and immortality from everlasting, and shews the way to GLORY! It is a brief recital of all that is past, and a certain prediction of all that is to come. It settles all matters in debates, resolves all doubts, and eases the mind, and conscience, of all their scruples; it reveals the only Living and True GOD, and shows the way to Him, and sets aside all other gods, and describes the vanity of them, and all that trust in them. In short, it is a Book of laws, to show right and wrong, a Book of wisdom, that condemns all folly, and makes the foolish wise, a Book of truth, that detects all lies, and confutes all errors; and a Book of Life, that gives life, and shows the way from everlasting Death! It is the most compendious Book in all the world; the most authentic, and the most entertaining history that ever was published. It contains the most ancient antiquities, strange events, wonderful occurrences, heroic deeds, unparalleled wars. It describes the celestial, terestial, and infernal worlds,—and the origin of the angelic Myriads, human tribes, and devilish legions; it will instruct the most accomplished mechanic, and the profoundest Artist. It will teach the best Rhetorician, and exercise every power of the most skillful Arithematician, Rev. 13: 18, puzzle the wisest Anatomist, and exercise the nicest Critic, correct the vain Philosopher, and confute the wise Astronomer. It exposes the subtle Sophist, and makes Divines mad! It is a complete code of laws, a perfect body of Divinity, an unequalled narrative, a Book of lives, a Book of travels, a Book of voyages. It is the best covenant, that ever was agreed on, the best deed that ever was sealed, the best evidence that ever was produced, the best will that ever was made, and the best Testament that ever was signed. To understand it, is to be wise indeed; to be ignorant of it, is to be destitute of wisdom; it is the Kings best copy, the Magistrates best rule, the housewives best guide, the servants best dictionary, and the Young Man's best companion; it is the school-boy's spelling book, and the learned man's master-piece. It contains a choice grammar, for a Novice, and a profound mystery for a Sage; it is the ignorant man's dictionary, and the wisest man's dictionary; it affords knowledge of witty inventions, for the humerous, and dark sayings for the grave, and it is its own interpreter; it encourages the wise, the warrior, the swift, and the overcomer; and promises an Eternal Reward to the Ecclesiastic, the conqueror, the wistful and the prevalent. And that which crowns all, is, that the Author is without partiality; and without hypocrisy. In whom is no variableness or shadow of turning! which is GOD.

For the Children.

Be Kind to Your Mother.

I was passing along one of your fashionable streets a few evenings since, and a well-dressed young man, and a middle-aged woman, were walking a short distance before me. Presently, I heard the young gentleman remark, rather sharply, "Mother, why don't you walk up straight? You look so crooked I am ashamed to be seen in the street with you."

"Never mind, my son," she replied, "I am weary—I have been more than ordinarily engaged to-day. Mary, is yet a stranger to our mode of doing housework, and as she appears to be a kind, honest girl, I have assisted her, in the hope that she may prove efficient help. You know what trouble I had with Bridget and Katy. You cannot imagine what the care of a family is—I really should not have gone out this evening, were it not that Dr. R. is to address the people; however, I shall soon be seated, and undoubtedly interested and feel less fatigued—and perhaps be benefitted by going out."

Her voice was gentle, and subdued, and as she directed her face to the brilliantly lighted shop windows, I observed a large tear standing upon her cheek, and her face being pale, contrasted deeply with the mourning of her bonnet and dress. On they slowly moved, conversing upon various subjects, but as she occasionally turned to the light, the tear still lingered upon her cheek. I was also going to the same place, and entered the building at the same time they did. I happened to be seated where I could observe these two individuals through the services—the Doctor spoke admirably, and absorbed the undivided attention of his audience—touching various points of his subject with a masterly spirit—but none manifested a deeper interest than this lady, whose mind seemed to take in the whole length and breadth of the eloquence that flowed from his lips.

But that pale, intellectual face—that delicate attenuated form—whose could they be? and why could a youth so thoughtful in appearance, ever address that mother in the language which I overheard? Did he see that tear upon her cheek, or once think that he had made her loving heart to grow sad, and the cares of life still more oppressive. Oh, no, he never saw that tear—he never thought of the force of that unkind expression—and little knows he how many more tears he may have caused to flow down her cheeks from similar causes. How this circumstance recalled the wayward days of my own youth—my departed mother, and the many times I had thoughtlessly inflicted wounds in her tender heart.

Aspiring youth, be kind to your mother—she holds the strong cord with a yearning love, that never ceases in its grasp to draw you from the path of vice, and lead you to heaven, and when sundered, leaves you a wanderer on the world's troubled waves. Be kind to your mother—her life is made up of wearisome duties, sleepless nights, that you never can appreciate. That harshly spoken word, that pale face, that weary attenuated form, and that tear will remain vivid in my recollection, until the pulse of life shall cease to throb in my bosom.—Olive Branch. L.

Telling Mother.

A cluster of young girls stood about the door of the school-room one afternoon, engaged in close conversation, when a little girl joined them, and asked what they were doing. "I am telling the girls a secret, Kate, and we will let you know, if you will promise not to tell any one as long as you live," was the reply.

"I won't tell any one but my mother," replied Kate. "I tell her everything, for she is my best friend."

"No, not even your mother, no one in the world."

"Well, then I can't hear it; for what I can't tell mother, is not fit for me to know."

After speaking these words, Kate walked away slowly, and perhaps sadly, yet with a quiet conscience, while her companions went on with their secret conversation.

I am sure that if Kate continued to act on that principle, she became a virtuous, useful woman. No child of a pious mother will be likely to take a sinful course, if Kate's reply is taken for a rule of conduct.

As soon as a boy listens to conversation at school, or on the play-ground, which he would fear or blush to repeat to his mother, he is in the way of temptation, and no one can tell where he will stop. Many a man dying in disgrace, in prison or the scaffold, has looked back with bitter remorse to the time when first a sinful companion gained his ear, and came between him and a pious mother. Boys and girls, if you would lead a Christian life, and die a Christian death, make Kate's reply your rule: "What I cannot tell my mother, is not fit for me to know;" for a pious mother is your best friend.

Bible Women.

WHAT POSITION SHOULD BIBLE WOMEN OCCUPY IN THE CHURCH OF GOD?

BY B. MATHEWSON.

(Concluded.)

The prominent design of previous articles on this subject has been, to awaken those females possessing the christian religion to a sense of their responsibility; to arouse them to put forth every pious energy of the soul to acquire and impart religious knowledge, by precept and example to inspire a spirit of devotion in the cause of Christ; showing by scriptural examples that the spirit has conferred on them a variety of gifts with which to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, and that for the improvement of those gifts they will stand amenable at the day of final account.

The excuse proffered by modern etiquette, that it is unfitting and improper for women to appear in a public congregation for the purpose of reading and explaining the scriptures, exhorting their fellow beings to flee the wrath to come by embracing the Savior, or simply to testify o their own faith in Christ, will avail nothing with that Judge who had previously apprized all, that those who waste His goods and those who conceal them are alike culpable, and will at last bear the epithet and share the doom of the "wicked and slothful servant." Will any female professing faith in the authenticity of the scriptures henceforth try to use them as a shield against the promptings of the spirit to prophecy, pray, and exhort? This would-be shield vanishes when the first dart of truth is fairly hurled against its unwarrantable usage. With a careful and prayerful investigation, it must appear obvious to all Bible believers that inspiration imposes no restraint whatever on female prophesying, exhorting, and praying. The only restriction which is very plain and positive, is that they shall not interrupt a public speaker by asking questions, &c., but to obtain information in a more private manner. Those who will so observe those restrictions as to make the apostle conflict with himself, to say nothing of inspiration, deprive him of that consistency awarded the common moralist! In my last I just noticed this apostle as having given a standing rule for the personal appearance of women while engaged in praying and prophesying in the church. Now who will have the effrontery to accuse him of so sudden a change, while speaking under inspiration, as to say to such—"you may not speak at all, but strictly observe silence in the church of God?

It is quite apparent that in those prayer meetings where females habitually observe silence there is a deficiency. Some seeing this, try to make it appear that the above strictures do not apply to women associated in the capacity of a prayer meeting; but they prohibit them from preaching. This seems to be the very acme of inconsistency—a mere subterfuge! When inspiration commands a woman not to speak, it means what it says and all it says; and for any one to say exhorting and praying in a conference meeting is not speaking in the church, is a kind of exegesis I am unable to comprehend. When we see this same apostle calling women his "fellow-laborers in the gospel," and entreating the church to help such, commending another as a minister worthy their regard, we are forced to the conclusion that his strictures on female speakers must refer to some particular time and circumstance.

Another class maintain the above strictures refer to women exercising their gifts in the presence of the other sex, hence set up female prayer meetings. Now where shall we find an example of such a meeting? Surely not in the scriptures of truth. Not a hint even that females ever did or were to hold a separate meeting. Look, if you please, at the account of that eight day prayer meeting, where a hundred and twenty of the church were praying and waiting for the promised spirit, and you will find women taking an active part in those devotional exercises; and after the copious effusion of the spirit they hesitated not to use their prophetic gift on account of their sex! They were "helpmeets" in those things most consequential.

I know the force of education to be powerful on this as well as on all other subjects. Those days of conflict with education and the promptings of the spirit seem indellibly inscribed on the tablet of my memory; education affirming that no female making any pretension to propriety and refinement would so expose herself to animadversion as to rise in a public congregation and witness for the Lord!—such things only belonged to the low and vulgar! and then some would confer on them the epithet of bold, brazen-faced, &c., which imputation is more dreaded by the truly virtuous female than almost any other. But thanks be to God, there is sufficient efficacy in true faith to extract the last educational tint, and cause depraved mortals to view things in the light of God's truth, and make them esteem the cross of Christ of more value than all the honor vain mortals can bestow. Yes, it will so eclipse such honor that its recipients are willing to become "fools for Christ's sake, and count all, reputation, property, and their whole being, as loss for LIFE ETERNAL, AND JOYS INEFFABLE!" It will impart strength and courage to the delicate and timid, enabling them to brave persecutions and boldly stand for the cause of God. It must have wrought this for Phebe as she went from church to church to administer in holy things, while the despised church of Christ was yet in its infancy. Paul highly commended her to the church as a servant or minister, as worthy of sharing largely in their hospitality. The word here translated "servant" is the same in the original that is translated minister in other portions of the New Testament. Having sometime since read an author who thought it a design of the translators to hide Phebe's office in thus translating it, I have taken liberty to inquire of certain Greek scholars respecting it, who concede that it might with the strictest propriety have been translated minister. In history, Phebe is handed down by the Greeks and Barbarians as a minister of much celebrity for gospel labor. (Theodoret, as cited by Clarkson.)

Yes, "Bible women" have preached and some of them still possess that gift. And who and where is he that would bid them cease to exercise this gift of the Holy Ghost? This one thing should be remembered, the more any gift is encouraged the more it will abound and the more perfect it will become.

Women of the world and "Bible women" have graced the seats of royalty. But a Semiramis, or Cleopatra have a small claim to our interest, compared to a gifted and excellent prophetess—"a mother in Israel"—occupying the exalted position of a Judge ruling in equity over the entire professed people of God. While reading her brief history who can but feel their own patriotism kindling into a mighty flame. In no woman, in no man do we find a more exalted faith, a more sublime assurance than characterized the noble Deborah. To have been a judicious leader of this restless and rebellious people, one must have participated largely in that "wisdom that cometh from above. Moses while leading them was often straitened beyond measure. Though the very meekest of men, their ingratitude and rebellion so aroused his ire as to cause him to sin. Perhaps there was never a time when more courage and strength were needed in their leader than when the Lord called Deborah to occupy the judgment seat. In her we find no hesitation, no failure. Her moral and intellectual strength was equal to the emergency. With the law of God deeply engraved on her heart, she sought not to derive consequence from the splendor of her attire, the charms of her person, or the number of her retinue; content with the simple shade of the palm tree for her canopy of State, her benevolent soul was absorbed in the good of her people while she sought justice and judgment. In view of her exalted intellect and glorious patriotism, who (especially of her own sex,) can but feel their own heart swell with high aspirations in her exulting confidence, expressed in her triumphal song, while she stays herself wholly upon her God?

While contemplating the physical energy and intellectual endowments of some "Bible women" will any one heave the deep-drawn sigh because they do not possess the gifts of a Deborah, Huldah, Anna, or Phebe? This is by no means essential. The great point is to IMPROVE what you already possess. This is what will recommend us to the Master, and cause him to say, "she hath done what she could." Suffer a single illustration. A strong athletic man places a good quantity of well-seasoned wood upon the live coals. But from there being too great a quantum of wood for the fire, or some peculiarity in the atmosphere, it does not ignite. The family look at it, and the wood is so perfect and withal so well arranged, all agree it must burn. At length the coals grow dim, the curling smoke is lessened and the hope of its burning is extinguished. At this opportune moment, a little child manifests interest in the matter by bringing a shaving and placing it on the coals. It ignites but is not sufficient to kindle the massive sticks, but it clears the white ashes and causes the coals to assume their bright appearance. By this time the other children are excited and they bestir themselves to bring what they can. One applies small kindling sticks, a third shavings, and, lo! the pile is in a blaze! I need not go into detail for the application; ministers may preach well-timed gospel sermons, yet while the church neglect to regulate the moral atmosphere and bring in their gifts it is vain to expect a blaze.

There never can exist a healthy, growing, spiritual church without activity in the membership. The body cannot part with the use of the smallest member without realizing a loss. It feels that it is maimed. There is force and deep meaning in the words of inspiration, that "those members which seem to be the more feeble are NECESSARY." Preaching is necessary being the gift of God. Yet no meeting is better calculated to facilitate a growth in grace than the social conference and prayer meeting. The more interesting these meetings, the better will be your preaching, for a minister can preach much better to a working church. The murmurers and complainers are generally those that do little or nothing. I would by no means recommend those gatherings bearing the name of prayer and conference meetings where some three or four stereotyped men occupy the whole time, commencing with the reading of a long chapter, then read a long hymn, then sing it, then call on a Mr. A. to lead in prayer; Mr. A. excuses himself, would rather join with Mr. B.; Mr. B. makes a long circuitous prayer round to China, Japan, and the islands of the sea, and just as he closes hints at the prayer meeting! Again sing, then Mr. C. makes some grammatical remarks, congenial to the atmosphere of Greenland; then another prayer is offered quite in keeping with the first, and they retire to their homes. I should never expect such a meeting to increase the spirituality of the church. In a conference meeting the entire household should take a part—great and small—rich and poor—learned and unlearned—noble and ignoble—black and white, all should express what they know of the love of God. Then shavings, kindlings, and large sticks on the fire of God's love produce a mighty combustion! It is generally best to place the kindling wood on the fire first. Thus in prayer meeting, the weakest should not wait till the last. Why will any of Christ's little ones hesitate about expressing their love for Him when associated in the prayer meeting? They themselves sustain a loss besides inflicting a wound on the church. "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Question. Will he have salvation who refuses to confess with their mouth? Says God, referring to the church, "ye are my witnesses," &c. Who will refuse to be a witness for the "high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity? Who?

The Lord's Supper.

SAMUEL MASON.

No. V.

By a careful perusal of ecclesiastical history, and the word of God, I have come to the conclusion that those churches that use leavened bread, and fermented or intoxicating wine, at the celebration of the Lord's supper, use it without the least sanction from tradition, or that unerring guide, the Bible. I shall now briefly as possible proceed to show the manner in which the Lord's supper was celebrated by the primitive christians.

The followers of Jesus, during the first and second centuries, met at private houses, or other convenient places of resort, for the purpose of edification or religious worship, in a manner analogous to our prayer meetings; and in connection with these assemblies, a common supper among the brotherhood, to which those who could afford it brought provisions of bread and wine, or "passum," according to the words of Polybius, in a fragment of his 6th Book. He states, "Among the Romans, women were forbidden to drink wine, (i. e. intoxicating wine); they drank a wine which is called passon, (Latin passum,) and this was made from dried grapes, or raisins," of which they all partook, whether male or female, rich or poor, in this manner recognizing the equality of each other as members of the church of Christ.

At these suppers, or love feasts, they celebrated the last supper of our Lord in the following manner: the requisite quantity of unleavened bread and unfermented wine was provided for the purpose, and at a proper time laid upon a table sufficiently large to accommodate a goodly number of the friends of Jesus; and were always careful to leave a vacant chair, looking forward with joyful anticipation when that same Jesus who said, "if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again," and that to occupy the vacant chair that has been so long vacated, and give himself, not only to preside at the head of the table, but "will come forth and serve us." When all things were set in order, an elder or deacon who presided at the meeting, one of whom having called the attention of those present to the subject by suitable remarks, then offered up a prayer to God, thanking him for the gift of his only Son, and his mercies towards mankind, and in an especial manner for the salvation and remission of sins accomplished through our Lord Jesus Christ. After prayer was offered, the bread and wine was distributed around the table, each meditating upon the sufferings of their Lord, no doubt looking back to that dark night when "the veil of the temple was rent in the midst;" but still remembering the promise made by the two shining ones,—"this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner." After all had received the bread and wine, another prayer was offered to God; they then "sung an hymn and went out."

For further information upon this subject, I shall proceed to give a few extracts from a work before me, by J. H. McColloh, whose views upon the sacrament are in accordance with my own. I shall, for the benefit of those who have not had the opportunity of a perusal of the above work, transcribe a portion of his remarks upon the Lord's Supper. He says as follows:

"Ecclesiastal writers of the third and fourth centuries inform us, that great scandals arose in the church from their love feasts; that what Paul had censured the Corinthians for doing in his day (1 Cor. 11: 20–22,) had taken place so generally, that the clergy who had then attained to great influence, gradually obtained the suppression of the love feasts throughout the christian world. This was a most unfortunate innovation; for, as they were in strict conformity with the institution of Christ, so they had been expressly recognized as such by Paul in his reproof of the Corinthians, as quoted above. If abuses and scandals had arisen by any mismanagement of christians in holding their love feasts, the clergy, or those having influence, ought to have remedied them, which they could have done as in any other case of misconduct. I apprehend, however, the abuses charged on the love feasts was the plea made use of to abolish them, rather than the real cause, and that the secret truth was, that they interfered with the exaltation of the clergy as a priestly body, to which assumption the ministers of religion had been sensibly tending from the middle of the second century. We cannot, however, enlarge upon this circumstance at present."

"After the third century, when christians had come into possession of temples or churches, it was a still further inducement to urge the suppression of the love feasts, as being an observance that profanes buildings set apart for the worship of God, by making them places for eating and drinking. As fasting had now become of great reputation among christians of these times, it doubtless seemed to them highly indecorous to eat or drink in the presence of that God, who, according to their notions, bestowed his favor especially to those who everywhere else either fasted, or eat and drank no more than would sustain life."

"In the suppression of the love feasts, the following important changes took place respecting the mode of administering the Lord's supper. As there was no longer a common meal upon which the brethren supped, the ordinary table at which the Lord's supper had been previously commemorated was necessarily withdrawn, and gradually an altar was substituted in its place, as more suitable to the exaggerated notions that had prevailed for some time concerning the elements of bread and wine, which, after clerical consecration, were supposed to acquire mysterious and sanctifying properties." Credibility of the Scriptures. Power.

"Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem," said Jesus, "until ye be endued with power from on high." But now the direction seems to be, tarry in college till ye be endowed with the learning of the schools. Stay till you learn to use Saul's armor, though while you wait young David kills Goliah with a stone, and a zealous Samuel has time to go forth and hew to pieces a thousand Agags before the Lord. Learning is good—so was Saul's armor, but the armor didn't kill Goliah, and learning doesn't save souls. The smooth stone dropped the giant of Gath, and the power of the Holy Spirit effects the salvation of the perishing hearers of the word of God. Man of God, remember that learning, theory, prophecy, orthodoxy or heterodoxy, can never save the hurrying millions that throng the ways of death. No, we must preach the gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, in demonstration of the spirit and with power. Get all the learning, and wisdom and knowledge that you can obtain, but first and last seek the knowledge of God's will and the indwelling of His spirit to assist you in your work.

The Lord's Supper.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—As this important ordinance and precious privilege is now presented to the consideration of our christian brethren, I beg leave to offer a few suggestions. I fully accord with your correspondent, who is "persuaded that this high-bought privilege has been too much neglected by the church in general."

The particular item relative to the subject to which I desire to call attention, is the infrequency of its observance. The following Scriptural facts deserve our serious consideration.

1. Our blessed Lord appointed the ordinance to be observed until he comes. 1 Cor. 11: 26.

2. He instructed his apostles in respect to the organization of his church, and authorized them to perform this duty. Matt. 28: 20; 1 Cor. 11: 23; Acts 1: 2; Matt. 10: 40.

3. The approved practices of the New Testament churches are binding upon us. 1 Thess. 2: 14.

4. These churches or congregations (ecclesia) came together, not only on the first Sunday of the month, or quarter year, but "on the first day of the week," "to break bread," in commemoration of the great sacrifice of "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world." Acts 20: 7. They "continued (as) steadfastly" in the observance of this ordinance, in their weekly assemblies, on "the first day of the week," as in the observance of the other ordinances of christian worship. Acts 2: 42.

5. The apostles taught the same things "in every church." 1 Cor. 4: 17. The practice therefore of the churches at Troas and at Jerusalem, in respect to the steadfast weekly observance of this holy and significant ordinance, was the practice of the churches in general.

6. This is the only christian ordinance which is mentioned as the special object of their assembling on the first day of the week. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to BREAK BREAD, Paul preached unto them." Paul had been with them some days. It is not written, however, that they came together to hear Paul preach, but "to break bread," according to their custom. This shows the prominent importance of this ordinance. To the church at Corinth, (1 Cor. 11: 20,) "when ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's supper; for in eating every one taketh before other is own supper," &c. This proves that the professed special object of their coming together was to observe this ordinance; although their disorderly manner perverted it.

7. The institution is commemorative of the great fact, which is the foundation of all human hope of salvation from everlasting death. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." It is to "show forth his death until he come," as the "unspeakable gift" of God to a lost world. "The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ?" 1 Cor. 10: 16.

Here then, surely, the spiritual mind finds adequate cause for the weekly observance of this precious memorial of redeeming love.

We learn also from the history of the church that the practice was continued subsequent to the apostolic age. Two objections may be considered.

1. It is said that our blessed Master did not enjoin its weekly observance, but only to do it, as oft as we do it, in remembrance of him. The principle, already proved from the Scripture, that he left the organization of the church to his apostles, is a valid reply to this objection. Our dear Lord, although he taught us to meet in his name, did not enjoin our weekly assembling for divine worship. Whence, then, do we derive an obligation for this, but from the recorded practice of the steadfast assembling of the first churches on the first day of the week, as Acts 20: 7 compared with Acts 2: 42 clearly manifests? Now, if we consider ourselves under obligation to be "followers of the churches in Judea" in respect to the steadfast observance of christian worship on the first day of the week; how, in the name of consistency, I ask, can we justify ourselves in neglecting, three fourths of the time, the ordinance which was the chief object of their assembling on that day? How can we vindicate ourselves from the charge of disobeying the commandment of the Lord, when the divine record plainly states that they continued as "steadfastly" in the observance of this institution, in their social public worship, as in any other? Acts 2: 42.

2. It has been affirmed that a frequent observance of this precious memorial of redeeming love, would diminish its solemnity and its salutary influence on our minds. We may as well adduce this objection to obeying the divine injunction—"Pray without ceasing," and come less frequently to the mercy-seat.

"Yet who that knows the worth of prayer,
But wishes to be often there?"

Surely, beloved brethren, once a week cannot be too often thus to come to that Cross, whence all our pardon, and peace, and life flows! Surely, to the spiritual mind, it should be considered a high privilege to commence every week of holy warfare with an ungodly world, with the stimulus to self-denial and benevolent exertion, which this divine memorial of redeeming love is so appropriately designed to impart.

Let us, beloved, thus "keep the feast—with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth," with adoring gratitude, anticipating our joyful meeting at the marriage supper of the Lamb. HENRY GREW.

For the Crisis.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

To the readers of the Crisis:—I am still striving for the better land. I have not cast away my confidence yet, for I know it hath great recompense of reward, and the reward I mean to have; it is worth striving for, and only such as are willing to strive will be able to enter through the gates into the city. The thought of entering there is delightful. Oh, my soul, am I worthy? shall I ever be?

"Can such a worthless worm as I,
Who sometimes am afraid to die,
Be found at thy right hand?"

I am glad I have been kept thus far. Many have been called to sleep under the clods; and many others have given up their faith; but few seem to be left, and willing to give glory to God. I do feel to say, I am among the few; praise God forever, praise is his due. I prize the Crisis, and esteem that privilege which we as pilgrims and christians can have, of expressing our mutual trials, sorrows, and joys, of which we all are sharers. But thank God, sorrows will soon be over. The weary soul will find rest, and the wicked must cease.

The gospel hope is the same to me today as ever; it reaches beyond this vale of sin and gloom, and grasps for immortality; it brightens at times, but disappointment has been and still is our lot; our hope is again and again deferred. Though cast down we can praise God that we are not destroyed. I believe redemption is nigh; we may lift up our heads and rejoice. The race is almost run, and when finished, praise God, the crown will be given. I have a lot and part in the matter now, and expect to share with the dear saints in the kingdom of God.

"For the kingdom I am striving,
For the Savior I am looking;
Oh, the blessed hope is cheering—
He will soon come again."

Yes, this is the very reason why I am writing these few lines. When He went away, the promise was given that he should come again; and did I not believe this, my hope would not work anything, but now it is worth worlds. The hope of the christian must, and will one day be consummated, and then we have the reality of what we only have the shadow here. Many, dear brethren and sisters, are the discouragements and trials which we have to pass through, but if rightly improved they will work for our good. Then we will welcome sorrows, grief, and pain, if heaven can be ours. We must not give up, for it is he that endureth to the end that will be saved; and thus willingly and cheerfully will I try to endure. Praise God! we have in these days one that we can lean upon: and we are told we may cast our care upon Him, for he careth for us. "If God be for us who can be against us?" Then what have we to fear? Nothing. Dear Brn. and Srs., the Lord is better to us than all our fears. Truly the dust becometh me.

The Lord help us all to watch, lest coming suddenly, he find us sleeping; and pray, that we enter not into temptation. That we may be delivered from evil and saved in God's kingdom at last, is the prayer of the writer. Amen.

Yours, in christian love and union,
SUSAN E. TEEPLE.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 25, 1857.

Our Conference.

In our last we gave a brief account of the conference from Tuesday to Friday evening, when Bro. Matthew Batchelor, Pownal, Vt., preached an interesting sermon upon the future punishment of the wicked, showing with much clearness the justice, love, and mercy of God in their total destruction. The truth presented seemed to commend itself to the understanding of those who were favored with hearing on the subject.

Saturday morning we had another prayer and conference meeting still more interesting than on any previous day. Such seasons are rare in this world. It brought vividly to our mind some of the heavenly meetings we enjoyed in 1843. The saints of the Lord were much comforted and strengthened. The peace of God flowed like a river in our midst.

Saturday afternoon and evening, Bro. H. L. Hastings preached on "Divine, Angelic, and Satanic Manifestations," proving most clearly that "Spirit rapping" is the work of the Devil and his angels, or demons. A large number of Spiritualists were present in the evening to hear. We felt truly thankful that the Lord has given us weapons with which to meet successfully this great delusion. There is no sword like "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."

We met Lord's day morning at half-past 9 o'clock for a love feast, and it was such a feast as we have seldom if ever enjoyed. One hundred and fifteen testified to the goodness of the Lord, in about one hour; then some twenty more arose, signifying a desire to speak if there was time. We think we speak safely, when we say, that probably there has not been so good a meeting in the city of Boston for twelve years. Those present will ever love to think of that heavenly feast. The peace felt within, seemed to shine out upon their countenances, while tears of joy sparkled in their eyes. We think it is seldom that heaven and earth come so near together as they did during our love feast. Many who have been discouraged, tried and tempted until almost persuaded to give up their hope, were greatly strengthened, and now feel determined, by the help of the Lord, to endure to the end.

Many testified, that they had seen nothing for years so much like the meetings we enjoyed some twelve years since. The spirit of the Lord seemed to rule in the hearts of those present, hence they felt "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, and meekness."

Bro. S. G. Mathewson preached at the usual hour in the morning upon the "Kingdom of God," showing that this earth is to be the abode of the righteous after the curse is removed, and that Jesus is to be King and reign in righteousness. Chapman Hall was crowded with attentive hearers, and we think they were convinced that they were hearing the truth of the Lord.

At half-past one o'clock we assembled again and had another interesting conference meeting, when three requested prayers.

Bro. H. L. Hastings preached in the afternoon, showing beyond all controversy that we are in "the time of the end." The congregation was said to be the largest ever seen in the Hall, many being unable to get in. The truth seemed to take strong hold of many present. We could not see how any one could doubt the position taken by our brother. The evidence that we are almost home was brought out so clearly, that it caused the saints to take fresh courage, and thank the Lord that they had not been left to give up the "blessed hope."

The evening was set apart to commemorate the sufferings of our Savior at the sacrament of the Lord's supper. It was a heavenly place. We invited all christians of every denomination to meet with us, and quite a number were present. We set a table about ninety feet long, around which were seated nearly two hundred of Jesus' disciples. An hour and a half was most profitably spent in exhortation and conversation about the scene we were commemorating, and the antitype to be enjoyed at the marriage supper of the Lamb. We sung the parting hymn, and separated, firmly resolved, in the strength of the Lord, to be faithful to the end, and receive a crown of life and a home in Paradise.

This conference has done the church in Boston much good, and awakened new interest in the minds of many who have not been in the habit of attending our meetings, who are now enquiring if these things are so. Backsliders have been reclaimed, and two Roman Catholics converted.

One important feature of our meeting, which had a most salutary effect, was a spirit of forbearance and love, and a disposition to make character instead of doctrine a test of fellowship. We find we can love one another, and "be of the same mind" in relation to our duties to God and each other, and still think differently on points of doctrine. We rejoice to see this happy change coming over the dear children of the Lord. Our prayer is that all may be filled with the same good spirit enjoyed at this conference.

Special Notice.

Our subscribers will please observe that this is the last number of this Vol., and that it is necessary they should pay in advance in order that we may be able to pay our bills. We are now three hundred dollars in debt, but if all who owe for the Vol. now ending will pay what is due the office, we shall "owe no man anything." Brethren and sisters, we beg of you do not let this debt remain, but send at once, that there may be no dead weights, like a "body of death," hanging upon us. We expect a hearty response. We hope that many will send donations for the poor, for we feel anxious that they should have the Crisis as long as it is published. Jesus tells us that when we do it unto one of the least of his brethren, we do it unto him. Come, dear brethren and sisters, lend a helping hand.

In our next number, which will be the first of the new vol., those who have not paid to the close of the present vol. ending with this number, will find the amount now due, including advance pay for the next vol., which will end with No. 104, marked on their paper if it comes in a package with others; but if they receive it in a single wrapper, they will find the amount due, written on the wrapper. Please remember this before you destroy the wrapper.

There are several who have not paid any thing on the last two volumes. We should be glad to supply them with a free paper if we could, but we shall be obliged to stop all papers sent to those who have not paid anything since No. 26 was issued, unless we hear from them immediately. If any should have their paper stopped who are not able to pay, if they will inform us, we will gladly supply them as long as they like to read it; for we are resolved in the strength of the Lord that the poor shall have the gospel. Write us at once, that we may know how many to print.

Those who have not paid anything since the close of the first vol. now owe us two dollars, and if they wish to take the paper another six months, then they should pay three dollars at the present time. We regret that we are obliged to discontinue any one's paper for want of means, but we must contrive some way to keep out of debt, and we trust all will commend us for such a course. M. GRANT,

In behalf of the Committee.

To Preachers.

We furnish our preachers with the Crisis without charge, knowing that they interest themselves in securing subscribers for the paper, and in writing articles for its columns; but we would urge them to make still greater effort to increase its circulation. The success of our paper will depend in a great measure upon the efforts of the preaching brethren; and in view of this fact, we solicit them to act as general agents in getting subscribers for the Crisis. M. GRANT,

In behalf of the Committee.

BRO. GRANT:—Enclosed I send you $3 00; one to be put to my account, and the other two as follows:

If you know of any poor pilgrims that are too poor to use any needless thing for food, drink, or apparel; viz., that do not spend any money for tea, coffee, tobacco, snuff, or other useless articles of that kind; that do not spend any of their time idly, and thus waste the Lord's time and money, but are diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving God, and trying to glorify him in their bodies spirits, and whatever they do, whether they eat or drink, do it all to the glory of God,—or, that want to learn the way of doing thus, you may reckon them as one of the Lord's poor, and send them the Crisis, at my expense, and apply the $2.00 to their account. And as oft as you hear of any of the above class, let me know it, and I will forward the money to pay for their paper.

CHARITY.

BRO GRANT:—Will you please say, through the Crisis, that I have removed from Deruyter to this place, and wish to have all communications addressed to Elder William Burch, Dresserville, Cayuga Co., N. Y.; and would like to have any minister call on me. My doors are open for them and my heart ready to receive them. WILLIAM BURCH.

For the Crisis.

The Blessed Prospect of the Waiting Church.

God has ever had a church waiting for the fulfillment of unfulfilled prophecy, as all the great blessings yet enjoyed were promised and foretold beforehand. If we trace the history of the church from the beginning to this day, we find some that believed the promise and waited for the fulfillment. Such are reckoned, and such only, as God's living church; the rest peeled off, like the old bark of the birch tree, while the living stand by faith. All the outward forms may be adhered to, but if there is no relish for the promise, and no interest in the prophecy, it is only a carcass without life. The greatest of all the promises is now about to be fulfilled, and the prophecy leading to it is nearly filled up. Eternal life—God's gift through Jesus—is soon to be conferred upon all the true church, dead and alive; the one raised, the other changed to immortality to die no more. Earth is about to be restored, and God's will done in earth as it is now done in heaven. The great throng of ministers and their adherents, have no idea of these priceless promises. They have made a league with death; they say death does for them what the Bible teaches can only be done by a resurrection. "Blessed are your eyes, for they see, and your ears for they hear," &c.

We have every reason to believe that soon, very soon, we shall see the end of our time of suspense. God has not suffered so many thousands of his honest ones to make so many sacrifices for their faith in the soon coming King, to be utterly disappointed. They asked for a fish, and their heavenly Father hath not given them a scorpion. If Daniel, Paul, and John should wake up now, and read what has transpired since they fell asleep, I have no doubt they would be among those that say, "the time of his redeemed is come." Prophecy fulfilled brings us up to the end of Gentile rule, and the professed church and the world are, as the Bible foretells us they would be at the end. The church has assuredly rejected the evidences of the second coming of Christ, as much as the Jews did those relating to his first Advent, and as a body must be rejected as they were; while individuals, whose hearts are better than their heads, will be saved so as by fire.

We see plainly there will be no peace until Jesus, whose right it is to reign, takes his throne. And have we not before us the field of prophecy—just as we ought to expect it just before Jesus comes? I am satisfied Rome is in its last form before it goes to perdition; and she will not go to perdition before the church sees her absent Son. 2 Thess. 2. I am now looking for the kings of the East; Rev. 16: 12. Some say they are the Jews; I have thought they were the church as a body—the rightful heirs to earth's dominion; but I think light is shining on that subject. Look over your map of the world, and see the territory east of Turkey. Look at Persia, Affghanistan, India, China, &c. The way seems to be preparing for all to take their part in the great battle of God Almighty.

Brethren, let us watch and be sober, for every jot and tittle will be brought out, so the watchful child can see it in its time. I think if you look carefully at the last prophecy referred to in relation to the kings of the East, you will see it does not refer to a people to be delivered, but to a class unnoticed before, that are to be brought into the great struggle. If ever there was a time when we ought to beware of being led away with the error of the wicked, it is now. It is no time to muffle God's bell, or give the trumpet an uncertain sound. Let us preach the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, fearless of consequences; and let the waiting church respond, Amen. Soon the angel will say, "it is done." May we be ready when the Master comes, is the prayer of yours, as ever,

MATTHEW BATCHELOR.

Doing Nothing.

From the humblest peasant to the watchman on the walls of Zion, our excuses for neglect of christian duties should be weighed in the light of eternal truth and the judgment, which "hasteth greatly." Do we honestly believe we are living on the very last sands of time? Do we honestly believe the church, however few, as in the days of Noah, are gathering, and soon the door of mercy will be shut by Jesus Christ himself, as God shut the door of Noah's ark?

The harvest is great, the laborers are few. If ever the prayer,—"send laborers" was needed, it is now. We see but few watchmen who are wholly in the Gospel field, that count not their life dear unto them. The God that sent ravens to Elijah, lives to-day. Dare we trust Him? Look around! The fields are already white to harvest. Is there not a famine in the land? not for bread and water, but for the word of the Lord. Look! Little churches here and there are famishing, starving, it would seem, for the want of faithful laborers to break unto them "the bread" that will feed them at this point of time, and sustain the church in her last trials. How is it? Look around! Professed watchmen, that in the past have been crying, "behold He cometh!" are retiring from the field of labor; others are partly in the field, but their "business" takes the greater part of the time; others we will leave a ——. "Like are the people," going back into the world, becoming overcharged, prayer meetings neglected, lukewarm, and many, very many have turned and given up the past moves as a "lie," and religion "mental excitement." Is the picture overdrawn? No; but slightly sketched. Pray, ye living saints, for faithful laborers, who labor not for filthy lucre! We need laborers, not merely for a Sunday, but from house to house, week in and out. Watchmen, what of the night? Ah! methinks that there will be a few who will put on the pure spotless robe of Christ's righteousness, even if there be not twelve apostles to feed the sheep!

Doing nothing! Every branch in the Vine will bring forth fruit. My Father will purge it that it may bring forth more fruit. Professed branch, are you bringing forth fruit? "EVERY BRANCH in me that beareth not fruit, He taketh away." What is it to bring forth fruit to perfection?

Doing nothing! and the world ripe for destruction! Doing nothing! yet dreaming of heaven! a fatal dream it will be! Where are our Luthers, Wesleys, and Whitfields of these last moments of time? Doing nothing! "He made me out a sinner for doing nothing!" This remark fell from the lips of one who was under conviction of sin, and of whom we asked the question, "How were you awakened?" He had heard a sermon from the words, "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion!" It was a new thought to the poor man, who had been comforting himself with the plea that he had done nothing very bad. But now he saw that his greatest sin was the very thing in which he had been comforting himself—doing nothing! We were reminded of this incident by meeting in an old religious magazine with the following ingenious interrogations on the words—"Curse ye Meroz." The writer says;—"By whose authority? The angel of the Lord. What has Meroz done? Nothing. Why, then, is Meroz to be cursed? Because they did nothing. What ought Meroz to have done? Come to the help of the Lord."

Brethren and sisters, sleep not on the brink of the judgment. If we sleep here, it will be the sleep that will end in eternal death! A lethargy like that creeping over the man that is freezing to death, is creeping over the church of God at this time! Do ye not feel it? Every energy has to be put forth to live and move. Awake, arouse, persevere, endure, the prize is yours—eternal life! T. F. S.

Duties of Children.

BY ZETA.

[Concluded.]

"Hear ye children the instruction of a father and attend to know understanding. For I give you good doctrine, forsake ye not my law." Prov. 4: 1, 2. The words of Solomon are here utterred to call the attention of children to his instruction. Not young children, but children old enough to reason, to learn the nature of principles, and results of doing right or wrong. It is an exhortation to HEAR, and to ATTEND to know understanding, assigning as a reason, that his doctrine is good. Have not all those who have attended to it testified that it is so? All who have sought wisdom and understanding have found favor with God. "Wisdom is the principle thing," says Solomon, "therefore get wisdom." David also said,—"come, ye children hearken unto me, I will teach you the fear of the Lord." Psa. 34: 11. And again, "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." But some may ask, "what connection have they with the duties of children to parents?" Why, I will tell you.

1. It is the duty of all children to love and obey God. This they cannot do unless they love and obey their parents, for "this is the love of God, that ye keep his commandments;" and he has commanded children to "honor their father and mother," and to "obey their parents," and has pronounced a curse on those who lightly esteem their father and mother.

2. No progress can be made in the pursuit of true wisdom while in a state of disobedience and indifference to parents, for God has made parents lawful rulers of their children. Let him or her who thinks to be a christian or a recpectable person in good society, therefore despair of attaining to either point, until they first learn to respect, honor and obey the wholesome laws of their parents. I speak to young men and young women, because they are the ones who will read what I say, if read at all. To know the doctrine of the Lord in regard to our relation to one another, our duties one to another, are of great moment. This will show to us the loveliness of God's character, the righteousness of his law, and harmony of his doctrine.

The first law for children is to honor and obey their parents. This will appear in all parts of the scriptures. How little do many consider this. I have seen grown up children who professed christianity, as reckless in regard to their parents' interests, orders, and advice, as they were of the laws of Belshazzar. I do not doubt but many such have been converted, but being accustomed to disregard parental law, they had no self-control, had been driven from one point to another by fleshly desires, and now, when turned to God, and charged by the belief of the truth, through the sanctification of the spirit, they think but little of God's law regulating religious duties, and find themselves driven by every wind of temptation and disorderly movement, falling out by the way, on the one hand or the other, until they lose all sense of propriety, and sink down in the mire again.

I have seen such children pray, shout, and sing with all the earnestness and happiness of young converts generally, and seen them as disrespectful to their parents, as a wild beast to the laws of domestic labor. Do such ones remember the curse which God has pronounced on them in Deut. 27: 16? And do they remember the duties which children owe to parents? Then how important the words quoted from Solomon,—"attend to know understanding." A young man came to Christ to know what good thing he should do that he might inherit eternal life. Jesus quoted some of the commandments, and among them "honor thy father and thy mother," to which the young man replied that he had "kept them from his youth up." Jesus beholding his virtue, "loved him;" (Mark 10: 19,) although he "lacked one thing," yet his character was lovely. Had he not had this principle of love and obedience, he could not have had eternal life if he had gone and sold his possessions, given to the poor, and attempted to follow Christ. That duty was to be added to the others, and not to take the place of them. Remember, Paul has said, "though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, . . . and have not charity, (love,) it profiteth me nothing." Love is the foundation of obedience, and is the fulfilling of the law. To love properly, we must have knowledge of the object of our affections. It is quite evident that the times in which we live are much like the days when Christ was here. He then found the traditions of the people conflicting with the order of God in regard to the duties of children, as well as in other things. He relinked them, saying, "why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition? For God commanded saying, Honor thy father and mother; and, he that curseth father or mother, let him die the death. But ye say, whosoever shall say to his father or his mother, it is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me, and honor not his father or his mother, he shall be free. Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition." Matt. 15: 4–6. Is not the same principle now acted upon you to a great extent? Do not many children feel and act as though their parents were under great obligations to them, and their time and earnings are their own, and that if they render service to their parents after they are sixteen or eighteen years old, "it is a gift?" Do they not take their own course, become their own controllers, command the money they earn? Yes, thus it is, and parents and others give this practice much favor, and are authors of it. But children should learn from the law of God that this is wrong, and leads to great evils, and ends in ruin. God does not countenance it, and will not bless those in this course. Therefore learn to love and obey your parents, which is the first commandment with promise. Study duty to your parents, your teachers, and other superiors, and remember that you cannot love and obey God and neglect these duties. Let wisdom guide thee.

"Repent and be Converted."

BY M. PRATT.

No. IV.

Who would have supposed that Jehoshaphat would have forgotten his chastisement in consequence of his unholy connection with Ahab, and be led into another connection with the ungodly? But so it was. After the death of Ahab, his son Ahaziah reigned in Israel. And though Jehoshaphat had but just refused tne proffered help of Israel, and encouraged his people by saying, "believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper," still for want of that charity that endureth all things, even to stand apart from backslidden Israel, he forms another union with Israel; no doubt thinking though God would not prosper a union with Israel in war, yet he might in traffic; and so together they built "ships to go into Tarshish;" (and I tell you that these Tarshish voyages are getting quite common among those who fear the reproach connected with the truth, and have been since the days of Jonah.) "Then Eliezer prophesied against Jehoshaphat, saying, because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the Lord hath broken thy works. And the ships were broken." The Lord hath warned him, time and again, to have no connection with Israel; but a kind of charity that could not endure "all things" often drew the good man into difficulties.

The word of the Lord by the prophets was to guide or convert men, anciently, and however good they were if they did not take heed fully to the prophets they got from the path and were exposed to evils consequent upon disobedience.

We hear about revivals and conversions here and there and the waiting pilgrim begins to think perhaps that we have been too strenuous in thinking that the church would by the grace of God all be taught to look for that "blessed hope and the glorious appearing," or that the signs in the heaven would cause all to lift up their heads; and as they have no chance for going to Advent meetings it may not be improper for them to turn in again with their former brethren and try to build up the old Zion ship together. Just so thought Jehoshaphat, and got into trouble; and if any of my brethren are wavering here I would say in the language of converted Jehoshaphat, "believe in God, so shall ye be established, believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper."

Were the sects popular, and proud, and worldly-minded, and pleasure-loving when ye left them? Are they better NOW? Did the ministers "PREACH THE WORD," then? Do they do better now? Were their converts converted by sympathy then, are they converted by the truth NOW? Were they lovers of pleasure then, are they better now? Did their women dress with modest apparel then? Are they better now? Did they adorn themselves by the putting on of apparel then? Are they better now? Did they refuse to obey God by the wearing of gold then? Do they leave it off now? Did they love the world, or the things of the world then? Have they less love for them now? O, foolish Adventists, "who hath bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth?" "This only would I learn of you, received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or the hearing of faith?"

Are ye so foolish? having come out from among them and been separated from them by the spirit, are ye now being perfected by turning back again? "Have ye suffered so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain? "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you," at the time appointed which "the vain shall understand," but "none of the wicked shall understand." May the Lord give us wisdom.

My Home.

"No chilling winds, or poisonous breath,
Can reach that healthful shore;
Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more."

O blessed thought! how it cheers my heart to know that I am a pilgrim here. This world is not my home. In that land to which I journey, are felt no chilling winds; no sufferers from the cold can be found. There will not be a poor person there; no need of a poor-house in all the land. Our Elder Brother is the King of the new earth. Every night we encamp one day nearer our home; one day less to journey on our pilgrimage. We will thank and praise our God.

But will there not be some sick one there? Shall I not suffer pain and sorrow? and will not cruel death be there to part me from the loved ones? O no, no, there will be no sick ones, no sorrowful countenance, no tears; and there shall be no more death, no more to fear. Heart-cheering thought. Take courage! O my soul; faint not in sight of the prize! Jesus says come; the Spirit says come, and whosoever will, may come. My heart says, I will come. I will try to continue patient in well doing. I will seek for glory, for honor, and for immortality. I do expect to be crowned with eternal life at the journey's end, and sit with Jesus on his throne. O what a privilege has been purchased for poor, mortal man! How much it cost our dear Savior! how intense his sufferings! how he endured them all without a murmur, for you and me, that he might offer unto us eternal life! O, can any one refuse to pay the price that Jesus demands of us? Will we not, from this time, be willing servants, to love, honor, and obey him? We will also bear in mind, as we journey on our pilgrimage, that those whom Jesus loves are often chastened. But his watchful eye never sleeps. Jesus knows how to pity us in all our trials and sorrows; it is for our best good that God permits them to come; but they will all end in a little while.

"We'll face the storm, it can't be long,
We'll anchor by and by."

Short Sayings.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

If the ground be broken well, and made mellow, the seed which is cast therein will take better root; so, if the heart be humble, broken and subdued, truth will take more hold thereon.

That is a happy man who seeks the happiness of his fellow man.

Our love to God is but the reflection of His love to us.

Those who are careful to remember self forget God.

Christians should never go where their Master cannot be admitted.

If we desire freedom from sin, He that is free from sin will desire us.

No man can love God and be inactive.

To possess Christ is to possess the One altogether lovely.

GOD'S PROMISES.

Like manna to the hungry soul
When in the desert drear,
Or water from the rock that flowed,
The fainting heart to cheer—

Sunlight that gilds the dreary cloud,
Dew to the thirsty flower,
Or the kind words that Love doth bring
In sorrow's mournful hour,—

So are the promises of God
To the tried pilgrim here;
They feed, refresh, enlighten, soothe,
Comfort, sustain, and cheer.

How rich! how full! "exceeding great
And precious" too, indeed—
Possessing these by living faith,
What more do christians need?

Choice legacy! bequeath'd through Him
Who is the life, the way;
Our title sure, then let our hearts
Pour forth a grateful lay.

IDA MOORE

Died at Lewiston, Maine, January 26th, 1857.

Open the icy earth,
A lov'd one has gone
Down to the Halls of Death,
Cheerless and alone.

Let fall the frosty sod
Upon her young form;
Under the eye of God
She'll rest until morn.

But when the gleam of Day
Up the East takes its way,
And the bright Morning of Life shall have birth,
Forth from her dusty bed,
IDA by CHRIST is led,
E'ermore with Him to dwell on the New Earth.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at New Britain, Conn., Dec. 29, '56, Sister Hannah Allen, wife of Bro. Wm. Allen, aged 57 years.

Sr. Allen had suffered many years with erysipelas, and latterly, with a dropsical affection. She lived about two weeks after she gave up, and was sensible up to the time when the disease struck the brain. Soon after that she suffered from a paralytic shock, or fit, when reason began to give way, and, for about three days before her death, she was entirely insensible.

She has left four children, with her husband, to mourn her loss; but not without hope of soon meeting her again, where disease and death will never come.

She was formerly a Methodist, but when the cry of the Lord's coming in '43 went through the land she became interested in the glad news. Disappointment came, but it shook not her faith. She embraced the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, with kindred doctrines. The resurrection was her only hope. She looked forward to that time when death shall be swallowed up in victory, and this mortal shall put on immortality.

Our sister sleeps! and thus sleeps a kind companion, mother, and friend. Her house was always a home to the weary pilgrim. Many will remember Sr. Allen, when they see this, who have shared the hospitalities of sister Allen's house in days past; who have been refreshed and strengthened by a friendly, christian reception, and kind and affectionate exhortations to persist in the work of the vineyard.

"The memory of the just is blessed."

A solemn and impressive funeral discourse was delivered to a large and deeply interested audience by Eld. E. Crowell, of Hartford, on the occasion of her burial.

Father Allen, in the hour of affliction and sorrow, should share largely in the sympathies of christian friends.

By request, W. S. CAMPBELL.

Sleep! Mother, sleep!
Though cold be thy bed,
For Jesus hath lain there,
Its gloom he hath shed;
Thy trials are over, thy spirit hath fled,
And thou art now numbered with all the blest dead.

Sleep! Mother, sleep!
Oh, fatal the hour,
When death was permitted
Our friend to destroy;
Yet Jesus is coming to ransom, we trust,
The heirs of bright glory now sleeping in dust.

Sleep! Mother, sleep!
Thou never canst know,
The anguish of hearts
Now riven with woe;
Yet weeping, and sorrow, and dying shall cease,
When Christ in the morning shall reign Prince of peace.

Sleep! Mother, sleep!
'Till the storm be past
That shivers the nations,—
Then hear the loud blast,
That rendeth the heavens and pierceth the tomb,
Then rise in full beauty forever to bloom.

WM. ALLEN.

Died in Tolland, Ct., Feb. 6th, Henrietta A., daughter of Orson and Caroline Richardson, aged 4 years.

Henrietta was apprized of her approaching illness, as other good children have been, and from the first had no desire to get well. Her youthful mind had, no doubt, been illuminated with that light which discovered to her a better world than this; therefore death to her had lost its sting, and the grave, we trust, will soon lose its victory. The Methodists at Square Pond generously proffered their house of worship for the funeral services, where an attentive congregation assembled, and with their minister listened with interest to the hope of the gospel. The moistened eyes and falling tears bespoke a feeling heart and the power of truth. Her disease was the canker-rash, from which two more of their children were still suffering. May the Lord hear prayer in their behalf; and may this affliction prove a great blessing to both parents and children, is the prayer of a pilgrim and stranger.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

CONTINUANCE OF THE WAR IN PERSIA.

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.

The Royal Mail Steamship Asia, Captain Lott, arrived at this port early this morning, bringing Liverpool dates of the 7th inst.

The news by this arrival is unimportant.

DREADFUL RAVAGES OF CHOLERA AT THE CANARY ISLANDS.

A letter from Palmas, Grand Canary Island, under date of Dec. 22, states that at Porto Grande the cholera had made dreadful havoc, nearly depopulating the place. It is almost entirely the men who are attacked, and none but women and children were to be seen at manual labor.

THE EARTHQUAKE AT CANDIA.—The almost total destruction, by an earthquake of the town of Canea the chief port in the isle of Candia, on the night of the 11th of Oct., has already been announced, but the details which have now reached us represent that dreadful calamity as having been greater than was at first believed. It appears that the town, a census of which was taken last year by Vely Pacha, the governor, contained 3,620 dwelling-honses, of which there are only 18 which now remain erect and habitable. The above number dees not include the shops and storehouses, many of which are built of wood, and have not been destroyed like the stone dwellings.

The number of persons killed in that one night was estimated immediately afterwards at 210, but so many dead bodies have since been discovered in the ruins, that the whole number is now calculated at not less than 760. The earthquake was not confined to the devoted town of Canea, but caused immense damages and loss of life in other parts of the island.

Several villages in the eastern districts were entirely ruined; and it is probable that the total number of human beings who perished on the island must be reckoned by thousands. More persons were killed outright than were injured by the fall of the houses; and this is attributed to the peculiar construction of the houses in Candia, most of which had very massive roofs, and terraces on the top of them formed of solid masonry, beneath the ruins of which the inhabitants were crushed in a moment. When the Pacha, accompanied by the French Consul, arrived at the scene of desolation, he found the survivors of the population in the most hopeless and miserable despondency; every one sat wailing or weeping on the heap of rubbish which had covered his home, without making an effort either to construct a shelter for himself, or to extricate the remains of his friends who had perished; the maimed and the dying lay unattended, and the starving had no relief.

Choice Selections.

NEVER in the history of the human race was the spirit of investigation so active as now; earth is explored, and heaven itself scaled by the daring spirit of man. It is useless for the cynic to sneer, or for the conservative to lament over the tendency of the age. The march of mind is as resistless as the motion of the spheres, and all attempts to stop its progress must be as futile as to bid the fiery chariot of Mars to stay in the mid-heavens.

Go, bid the ocean cease to heave,
The river cease to flow;
Bid smiling Spring retrace her steps,
And flow'rets cease to blow.
Go, drive the wild winds to their home,
The lightning to its nest.
The car of Progress will not stay:
Its coursers never rest. Ex.

TRULY WHAT HAS GOD WROUGHT!—The New York Examiner of the 13th inst. gives a summary of conversions, reported in "the religious exchanges of two weeks," amounting to nearly nineteen hundred in connection with Baptist Churches, and about thirteen hundred in connection with other denominations. "Total, three thousand and two hundred, in addition to many revivals, of which no particulars are given, and swelling the number to five thousand."

THE CHRISTIAN WARRIOR.

A christian warrior wilt thou be,
And war for life so dear?
Wilt thou prefer these storms at sea,
To all earth's pleasures here?

Then come, thou noble man of God,
And brave these storms of earth!
We'll march the road our Savior trod,—
So humble from his birth.

Then let earth's surging billows dash
With fury on thy head,
Its thunders roar, its lightnings flash—
Shall we their vengeance dread?

We'll onward move an army pure,
And ne'er their vengeance dread;
God's battles fight, the victory sure,
For Jesus' at the head.

We're on the road that leads to life,
All crimson'd too with blood!
It is the field of battle strife,
Where death sweeps like a flood.

We've passed the bones of martyrs here,
They're bleaching on the plain;
O come! thou blessed Savior dear,
And give them life again.

He'll come again in God-like power,
And strike the fatal blow;
And if death's clouds around us lower,
He'll lay the monster low.

Our lovely ones he brings again
In triumph from the dead;
The hour has come for martyr's slain
To triumph with their Head!

This sinful world now blooms once more
In Eden's beauty rare!
And all our sorrows now are o'er—
We in its glories share!

LINES.

BY FRANCES.

The world at large is sleeping,
Though fast to judgment bound;
And only few are grieving
This slumber most profound.

Now many souls are resting,
In carnal mirth and ease;
While only few bear testing,
And strive the Lord to please.

The midnight oil is wasting,
A token of the day,—
That Jesus near is hasting—
His coming don't delay.

When clouds serene are floating,
Amid the tempest's roar,
The Lord will come with shouting,
A kingdom to restore.

And in that kingdom holy,
No sinner then will reign;
The blessed Lord in glory
His throne will e'er maintain.

Then, sinner, turn to Jesus,
While you may mercy find;
He'll grant you peace and pardon,
From an unholy mind.

Divine Order.

A. ROSS.

No. I.

The remark is often made,—"Order is heaven's first law;" and it may be remarked with equal propriety, order is heaven's last and only law. Law is a rule of action growing out of the relation one thing sustains to another;—a decree or edict. In all that God has done in the admirable works of creation there is manifested that regard for well established order which is only characteristic of the deity. The sweet Psalmist of Israel when contemplating God's divine perfections, casting his eye to the star-spangled firmament stretched as a curtain o'er his head, broke out in a strain ever more to be chanted by everything in earth and sea when the groans of nature have an end—"The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handy work." Truly the Lord is wonderful in counsel and excellent in working. Strange to tell, that the being on whom God bestowed the impress of his own likeness should be the first to rebel and ruin himself. But so it was with poor man. The most noble workmanship of God's hands made to be ruler over the earth and all things therein, and to enjoy God forever, forfeited all he had, came under the power of that prince who now rules in the hearts of the children of disobedience; yet an all-wise and merciful Creator, bruised and mangled as man had become, was unwilling to give him up for lost. The fountain of divine benevolence was opened, the plan of human redemption devised, having no less the exhibition of divine order than was manifested in the stupendous work of creation.

The plan God has introduced to rescue fallen man from sin and death, leads us to the examination of two important inquiries.

1. What is the relation we sustain to God, and the duties growing out of that relation?

2. What are the duties we owe to each other and the duties growing out of that relation?

In order to understand our relation to God, it is needful for us to know something of God, and also of ourselves. The question is frequently asked in the language of unbelievers of olden times,—"Who is the Lord that we should serve him?" A question too profound for heathen philosophers to answer by their own wisdom. Whenever any attempt has been made on their part so to do, they have only betrayed the vanity of their own imagination. Many of them believed in a plurality of Gods, among whom the empire of the universe was divided; others believed the Deity was in the form of some four-footed beast, or creeping thing of the earth.

Thus the world might have remained enveloped in the darkness of Polytheism had it not been for the light of divine revelation; a revelation too well authenticated by signs and wonders and divers miracles to need a lengthened argument here, in favor of its authenticity. To the holy Bible then, our minds revert for the solution of our first proposition.

God in revealing himself to his servant Moses, says, I AM, that I AM. Volumes beyond the scrutiny or comprehension of finite man are embodied in this announcement. From what we are and what we see around us, it is evident there is a being who has thus revealed himself to the children of men, claiming them as his offspring, delivering them his decrees, unfolding to some extent the glorious attributes of the Divine mind, and making known his claims and the fearful account we must render to him finally. The attributes of God are set forth in the following scriptures:

Eternity of God.—Deut. 33: 27. "The eternal God is thy refuge"—Ps. 90: 2. "Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God. Isa. 44: 6. "Thus saith the Lord, the King of Israel, and his Redeemer the Lord of hosts. I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God."

Foreknoweledge of God.—"Remember the former things of old, for I am God and there is none else; . . . declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done."

Greatness, majesty and supremacy of God. 1 Chron. 29: 11. "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the victory, and the majesty; for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine; thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head above all." Ps. 104: 1–3. "Bless the Lord, O my soul. O Lord, my God thou art very great; thou art clothed with honor and majesty. Who coverest thyself with light as with a garment; who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain; who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters: who maketh the clouds his chariot; who walketh upon the wings of the wind."

Immutability of God. "Num. 23: 19. "God is not a man that he should lie; neither the son of man that he should repent. Hath he said and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken and shall he not make it good?"

Omnipotence of God. Gen. 17: 1. "I am the Almighty God." Isa. 43; 13. "There is none that can deliver out of my hand. I will work and who shall let it?"

Omniscience of God. I Sam. 2: 3. "Talk no more so exceeding proudly; let not arrogancy come out of your mouth; for the Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him are actions weighed." 1 Chron. 28: 9. "The Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts." Job 34: 21, 22. "His eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings. "There is no darkness nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves."

If then we sustain a relation to a being so holy, just, and good, one who visits the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, to the third and fourth generation of them that hate him, what are the obligations we owe to him?

1. He is to be loved supremely. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." Let him have the seat of empire in the affections.

2. He is to be worshiped sincerely; we are to have no other God before him; we are to come before him with penitence and contrition of heart, not with a naked recital or words while our hearts are far from him, which would incur the divine displeasure. In the discharge of all our religious obligations love, is the essential element, and without which our sacrifices are but a vain oblation.

Having given these few hints in regard to our relation to God, which is sufficient to the wise, we pass to consider our second proposition; viz., the relation we sustain to each other as the workmanship of God's hands, and the duties growing out of that relation. I am aware of the vastness of the subject and my own incompetency to do it justice, but such as I have, I give. The instincts of our nature as well as the voice of inspiration, teach us it is not good for man to be alone. We are social beings, made to act in an associated capacity; hence the propriety and utility of a system of order for the regulations of our social relations. God, who is too infinitely wise to err, seeing our feeble frame and knowing we are but dust, has introduced rules adapted to our present circumstances, and in themselves conducive to our present and everlasting wellbeing.

Divine order is of a twofold character.

1. Temporal; i. e., for the time being.

2. Eternal; or that order of things to be perpetuated through the vast annals of Eternity. A conformity to that which is temporal prepares us for the enjoyment of that which is eternal. The institutions of the Mosaic economy were of a temporal character, to continue to the end of that dispensation. The institutions of the gospel, also, are of a temporal character only preparatory to something better yet to be introduced. In defining the order of the New Testament, we shall confine ourselves to the teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ and his chosen Legates, together with a few brief extracts from the history of the primitive church. That we are perfectly safe in pursuing this course is evident, from the announcement which came from the throne of the Eternal, listened to by Peter, James and John, with supreme delight upon the mount of transfiguration. "This is my beloved Son; hear ye Him." O, that this sentence might be graven on every heart with a pen dipped in the fountain of eternal love, Hear Him! How soon would the church of God shine forth "clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." In the room of a sickly, feeble-minded, broken-down, pleasure-seeking christianity, we should see in the field an army of veterans whose prayers the wicked would dread as much as Ahab did those of Elijah.

In coming more directly to the subject under consideration, we propose examining some portion of scripture in relation to church order. It is quite evident the term church should have been rendered congregation, for the following reasons:

1. Prof. Whiting in his translation of the New Testament, in every instance has thus rendered it.

2. King James gave to the men he employed for the purpose of translating the scriptures, certain rules and restrictions; such as that the ordinary Bible read in churches, commonly called the Bishop's Bible, should be followed, and as little alteration made as the original would permit.

3. That the old ecclesiastical word church, should not be rendered congregation.

What the object of such restrictions was, (unless it was a fear of favoring an independent form of church government and a detraction from Episcopacy, which they were prejudiced in favor of,) I cannot conceive. To say the least, this is a circumstantial evidence in favor of the term church being rendered congregation. One more evidence, which is of quite a positive character is,—"the term church is never used in the Old Testament, but invariably congregation.—"The congregation of Israel,"—"The whole congregation,"—"all the rulers of the congregation," &c.

"Watchman, what of the Night?"

Brethren and sisters:—I for one feel as strong a desire as ever to know the time of night, whether tis midnight, cock-crowing or morning. I am sorry to see by the Crisis that the great interest felt of late in the prophecies, has, or is dying away among the brethren. Has it become of no profit to us or the other churches? have they ceased to be a light to the little flock? Peter said they should be a light until the day dawn, to those who would give heed to them. Perhaps some will say, tis only midnight; others cock-crowing, and some morning.

Brethren, fear not to speak in regard to this matter. Has the man of sin, or the Anti-Christ come? or is he yet to come and desolate the church for 1260 days, or years? I, for one, believe he has come and done a work which is called the great tribulation, by our Savior; and the signs in the sun and in the moon and in the stars are all surely in the past, and also the angel of Rev. 14th, has fulfilled his mission, in saying with a loud voice,—'Fear God, and give glory to Him for the hour of his judgment is come." I can see no more chance to reckon the time from the Bible, with the present light. From the best light I can get, the midnight cry has sounded. I do not believe in too positive a spirit in our interpretation of scripture, for experience teaches us that good men have been in error many times. Time will soon settle this matter correctly. We now see through a glass darkly, but hope soon to see all things perfectly, when that which is perfect is come.

Brethren, we are here yet in a groaning creation, and every groan that is uttered is one the less. Every day brings with it new cares, trials, and temptations, but the Lord has promised to be with us unto the end. Oh let us be faithful. The journey is almost over. The pearly gates almost in sight. Let us lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing our redemption's at hand. Let us give heed to the admonition of our Savior who said,—"what I say unto you, I say unto all, watch."

Our Conference at Boston.

Our Conference, or Protracted Meeting in Boston was one of the most interesting meetings I ever attended. It was indeed a season of refreshing from the favor of the Lord. O how sweetly the hours passed away during the days we were together! Some particular things, which made the season so uncommonly pleasant, I will name.

1. A goodly number of the "meek of the earth," who expect shortly to inherit it, were together: and as in water face answers to face, so did their hearts respond to our hearts.

2. A goodly number of the faithful ministers of the Lord met, greeted, and loved each other. They all seemed to think more of the union and peace of the flock than of pressing their own opinions and notions. There seemed to be no strife who should be greatest, but all seemed disposed to prefer each other. This is the kind of ministerial association I love! O Lord, make us meek, little, humble, good, spiritual, POWERFUL!

3. The conference and prayer meetings were well attended. There were nearly as many to our morning prayer meetings as to the afternoon preaching meeting. This shows spirituality, love to God, and love to the brethren. There was not a single dull prayer meeting throughout the Conference.

4. A general spirit of love and union pervaded the whole body together. O it was almost "heaven on earthly ground, and glory in the bud!" I do pray, beg, entreat, beseech all of our brethren and sisters to cultivate more and more this spirit and principle. On this point, O how much we have lacked! O God, fill us with burning, melting love to thee, and to each other.

5. Our brethren and sisters in Boston were so kind, hospitable, liberal and good, that we felt sad when we thought of parting with them. They made us love them with pure love fervently. God bless that dear people.

Finally, we feel encouraged. New times are arising among us. Contentions are dying out, and love is coming in to fulfil the law! The affection of a former day is coming back. Glory to God! The times of '43 are coming in new form—not as to numbers—not as to excitement—but as to the spirit of love, labor, and union.

Amen! AMEN!

Recipe for making Tattlers.

Take a handful of vine called Runabout, the same quantity of root called Nimble-tongue, a sprig of the herb called Back-bite, (either before or after the dog-days,) a tablespoonful of Don't-you-tell-it, six drachms of Malice, a few drops of Envy, which can be purchased in any quantity at the shops of Miss Tabitha Tea-table, and Miss Nancy Night-walker. Stir them well together, and simmer for half an hour, over the fire of discontent, kindled with a little jealousy; then strain it through the rag of misconstruction, cork it up in the bottle of malevolence, hang it upon a skein of street-yarn, shake it occasionally for a few days, and it will be fit for use. Let a few drops be taken just before walking out, and the patient will be enabled to speak all manner of evil, and that continually.

Short Sayings.

BY EDWIN BURNHAM.

They who strive to do what they can will certainly do what those will not do who do not strive to do anything.

Those who begin their work in season will the sooner be able to finish it, and have some time left to look it over to see if it is well done.

When persons climb high they subject themselves to three disadvantages: 1. They place themselves in danger. 2. They make themselves objects of criticism to others, who can more plainly observe them. 3. If they are in trouble, they cannot be easily got at to be helped.

A great man who is not good, may despise a good man who is not great; but God counts the former a fool, and the latter a wise man.

ANGELS.

"Bless the Lord all ye His angels that excel in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word" Ps. 103: 20.

They must be blest, those high-born heirs of Heaven—
The sons of God—to whom the bliss is given
Continually before His face to stand,
The Sovereign Father's every great command
From his own sacred lips hearing, receive,—
To serve and please—the joy for which they live.
The music sweetest—His approving smile,
While still in strength and honor they rejoice,
And all their rapture and his praises tell
In loudest strains, that ever rise and swell
In floating echoes through th' unmeasured dome
Of heaven's vast realm, far as their bright wings roam.
They must be blest—to see the face divine,
Where all surpassing beauties beam and shine;
With all adoring awe forever gaze
Upon his glory's uncreated rays;
To walk the golden courts of his abode—
In glad submission wait Jehovah's nod,
Then bow in homage near th' eternal throne,
And breathe responsive—"let thy will be done"—
And on swift wing hasting, obedient fly
To some far realm of starry worlds on high,
On love's kind errands bearing blessing, sent
To kindred beings—e'er on good intent;
For still they drink from the deep fount of love
That flows to all below—all worlds above.
O God, my Father, by adoption thine,
When shall I near thy Majesty sublime,
Bow with the angels who in strength "excel,"
Made meet with them in radiant light to dwell?
No more the ways of righteousness to leave—
No more thy Spirit, erring oft, to grieve,—
No more with footstep, half reluctant, slow
To move to duty when thou bidd'st me go—
No more with trembling, falt'ring lips to pray—
"Thy will be done," thy will, not mine, alway—
No more attempt, in weak and stam'ring lays,
To sing thy hallowed Name's exalted praise?
Not till thy footstool, earth, all fair is made,
Where thou shalt walk as once in Eden's shade,
When her Creator, Nature meets again,
And "God himself," our God shall dwell with men.
Then washed in blood of the atoning Lamb,
And sealed upon my brow thy glorious Name,
And strengthened with immortal powers to bear
The dazzling scenes, that bathed in glory there
Shall burst in splendor on my ravished eye,
And roll loud hallelujahs through the sky!
Then, I shall stand where seraph's dare to tread,
Nor from thy presence shrink with guilty dread.
Nor shall my spirit know a trembling fear,
When the "white throne" thou bidd'st me to draw near;
I'll touch thy sceptre—O the wond'rous grace—
And live, forever live before thy face.

A New Commentary.

Rev. Dr. Owen, of the Free Academy, whose labors as an annotator in Classical Greek are highly esteemed in our colleges, has in press a Commentary upon the Gospels, partly critical, partly expository, which will be very useful to teachers and general readers of the Bible. Its criticisms of the text are simple, direct, and clear. The following upon the word demon (Matt. 4: 24) is a good specimen:

"Were possessed with devils, or demons. The word demon in the original Greek means, 1. Any being of the invisible world, either good or bad, any deity or god; 2. Divinity; 3. Deified fortune, either good or bad; 4. Souls of departed heroes, permitted to return to earth and exert an influence, either good or bad, upon men; 5. Fate, fortune, chance; 6. Any spirit or ghost. The New Testament writers, in selecting from the Greek language a word to denote spirits, subordinate to Satan, in the sense attached to demon, could find no other or better word to employ than this. As they used theos, which by the Greeks was applied to a god or deity of any sort, of Jehovah alone, the Supreme Lord of all, so they used the word demon in the restricted sense of an adverse or evil spirit. If they wished to express this notion of an evil spirit, and who without begging the question can deny this, they had no other word in the Greek language which they could so appropriately use for this purpose. Theos was already employed to designate the true God. The word diabolos, devil, is the corresponding Greek for the Hebrew Satan, and was used in the New Testament of the prince of the fallen spirits. Angel, from the Greek anggelos, denotes the good spirits who are messengers and ministers of Jehovah. There was no word left but demon or demonion, to denote the inferior evil spirits. Farmer and others, who deny the existence of demons and demoniacal influences, start with the false assumption that this word in Greek is never applied to fallen angels, but to the spirits of such as had once been men, and who, being advanced to the rank of gods and demigods, had the power of entering the bodies of men and producing phrenzy or distraction. But not to say that his definition of demon is incorrect, if it were true, it would furnish no more proof against the sense in which it is manifestly used by the New Testament writers, than the acknowledged fact that theos has no such use in the Greek language, as it has in the New Testament in its application to the Supreme Jehovah. Both words are employed in a restricted and modified sense, in the sacred use to which they have been transferred by the New Testament writers. The idea, therefore, that the Evangelists employed this word in accordance with the superstition of the times, to denote a violent disease, caused by the supposed possession of some departed human spirit, is not only based on an erroneous definition of demon, but by a parity of reasoning would prove that in the use of theos, they must have attached to it the low signification, which it had as originally used by the idolatrous Greeks.

"We claim then that the Evangelist used the word demon, and had a right so to do, from its generic signification in Greek, in the sense of veritable evil spirits, fallen angels, who for wise reasons had permission to enter the bodies of many persons in the time of Christ. That these were not natural diseases merely, the cure of which constituted all the casting out or ejection of demons there was in the case, is almost too evident to demand proof. What kind of disease is that which cries out, 'What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Art thou come hither to torment us (i. e. the sickness or disease before the time (viii. 29)?' Who ever heard of a disorder that begged permission to enter, and actually did enter swine, causing the immediate destruction of two thousand of these animals?"

There can be no doubt as to the soundness of the view of demoniacal possessions here taken by Dr. Owen.—N. Y. Independent.

SCRIPTURAL ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Arabs of the desert commonly clothe themselves also in manufactures of camel's hair; and the article most prized by them is the "haik," or cloak of that material. It is either black or white, with or without broad stripes; it consists of a square piece, with holes for the arms, and has no seam. The Druses of Lebanon, and the people of Mesopotamia, not only wear a coat which is "without seam," but "of many colors," having variegated stripes proceeding a point downwards from the shoulders, like a reversed pyramid. This is believed to be of the same description as that bestowed by Jacob on his favorite child. We are informed that our Savior also wore "a coat without seam, woven from the top throughout;" and that, in the wilderness, St. John "had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins." The "sackcloth" of the Scriptures was a similar manufacture, but of the roughest kind, like that which is worn by dervishes and reputed saints. It is still used for sacks and tent covers. We can easily understand the necessity of a girdle; no person with loose flowing robes can engage in active occupations without first "girding up the loins"—that is, taking up a portion of their dress out of their way. Some lay aside their outer garments for the time; others prepare to put forth their strength by fastening a belt or girdle round the waist, and by laying bare the arms to the shoulder. Thus Elijah "girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab to Jezreel;" and the sacred writings abound in passages which, like this, illustrate the habits of those who wear the Oriental costume.

THOSE who would reform the world, should begin by reforming themselves—by cultivating quiet and gentle habits—not speaking unless they have something to say, nor wasting other's vitality, as well as their own, by making unnecessary noise; but let them "garner their lives" for the work which ALL have given them to do.

Obituary.

OBITUARY.—"Died—In Laodicea, the Prayer Meeting, aged one year. The health of the meeting was poor most of the year, and its life was despaired of; but a few anxious friends kept it alive, and sometimes it would so revive as to encourage them. Discouragement, however, at last prevailed, and the prayer meeting is dead. It died from neglect. Not a christian was present when it died. Over forty christians (?) were living within a mile of it, and not one was there. Had two only been there, its life might have been saved, for where two are agreed as touching anything they shall ask, it shall be done for them. Two-thirds of the forty might have been there had they been so disposed. But they were not, and so the prayer meeting died."—Ex.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn. they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

PITY THE POOR.

BY H. L. HASTINGS.

Hunger is eying the shivering throng,
Hunger is chasing the poor along;
Hunger is prowling around the door—
Pity the poor—pity the poor!

Gaunt disease and skeleton death
Haste to devour along their path;
Winter is cold and necessity sore—
Pity the poor—pity the poor!

Hands want labor and mouths want bread,
Many are dying and some may be dead;
Scanty shillings for tedious toil
Crush the spirit and sadden the soul.

Oh! ye rich, in the halls of pride,
Who in fashion walk or in splendor ride,
Remember the sorrowing about your door—
Pity the poor—pity the poor!

O! ye young, in your joyous glee,
Whose hearts are light and whose hands are free,
Ye have blessings now,—as ye hope for more,
Pity the poor—pity the poor!

Ye followers of Christ, the holy Lamb,
Who was poor to save lost, ruined men;
O! for the love that Jesus bore,
Pity the poor—pity the poor.

Go to the hovels of want and woe;
Go where the tears of misery flow;
Drive away want; bid it come there no more—
Pity the poor—pity the poor.

O! by the mercy of Jesus who died,
By the blood that gushed from his hands and side,
By the pardon for which in prayer you bow—
Pity the poor, and pity them now.

Alas, there cometh an awful day,
When the heavens and earth shall pass away;
But there with those at the Judge's right hand
Those who pity the poor shall stand.

Sanctification,

AS CONNECTED WITH THE COMING OF THE LORD;

—OR—

THE APOSTLE PAUL'S EARNEST PRAYER.

BY H. P. SIKES.

No. I.

"And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it. 1 Thess. 5: 23, 24.

I. I inquire, WHAT IS IT TO BE WHOLLY SANCTIFIED? The original meaning of the word sanctify is to set apart, or appoint for a specific purpose. This is the primary definition of the word. Its application in the Bible is somewhat varied; and is generally to be known by the connection in which it stands, or is otherwise readily ascertained. Sometimes it expresses the adoration and worship, which worms like ourselves are exhorted to exercise towards the ever adorable Jehovah; sometimes it signifies merely to appoint. In other places, men are commanded to sanctify themselves; much as they are commanded, "wash you, make you clean," &c., in Isa. 1: 16, 17. But the most common use of this word, and especially so in the New Testament, is to express the work which the Lord himself performs in his believing, humble children. I will quote a few examples in which it is used with these various significations. Isa. 8: 13,—"Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread." This is one of the many cases in which men are required to worship, or sanctify the Lord. And surely, it is a most reasonable requirement. In Joel 1: 14, and also 2: 15, the command is given, "sanctify a fast," &c. Here the idea which the inspired writer would convey, seems to be to appoint and publish a fast. The children of Israel were often commanded to sanctify themselves. Especially were they thus commanded when about to celebrate some great event. Thus, when they were about to pass over Jordan, the following command was given: "And Joshua said unto the people, sanctify yourselves; for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you." When the children of Israel were about to witness the terrific grandeur displayed on Mount Sinai at the giving of the law, the Lord told Moses to sanctify the people. Here Moses was directed to prepare the people for the grand event soon to take place; i. e. probably he was to require the people to sanctify themselves.

I now come to speak of its most common signification—the sense in which it is used in the text. The Lord has undertaken to redeem from sin all those who are willing to be thus redeemed. He has undertaken to bring us back, from the lost, miserable condition we were in by nature—so depraved, so "sensual and devilish"—to make us holy and happy, "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ;" to make us just like Christ, our pattern and "elder brother." To this end Christ suffered, died, and rose again. For this "he ever liveth to make intercession for all that come unto God by him." For this the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, is sent into the world, and is the agent in performing this transformation. This work is called sanctification, being wrought by the great I AM in the hearts of his children, through his Spirit's agency. Thus, inspiration abundantly declares. Indeed, this seems to be according to the tenor of the whole New Testament, yea, of the whole Word of God. Take for example the following passages: Jude 1,—"Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." Eph. 5: 25–27,—"Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word; that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy, and without blemish." Heb. 2: 11,—"For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." 1 Cor. 1: 2,—"Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints," &c. Exod. 31: 13, last clause of the verse,—"I am the Lord that doth sanctify you." A similar phrase twice occurs in the 22nd chapter of Lev., viz., in the ninth and also in the sixteenth verse: "I the Lord do sanctify them."

To be wholly sanctified, according to the prayer of the Apostle, sometimes called "christian perfection," is, to be completely restored to the approbation and favor of God. Not that the sanctified one does not still "grow in grace," and in knowledge also. Neither is he absolutely and unqualifiedly "perfect;" but only so in the sense in which the Bible everywhere represents the children of God as being perfect, when living in a state pleasing to him. Thus Job and Noah, and multitudes more, even under the Old Testament dispensation, are said to have been perfect. And yet how much more humble and acceptable in the sight of the Lord did Job afterwards become, than was his character at the time this declaration was made of him. Neither is the sanctified soul free from temptation. No, in no wise. So far from it, that it would indeed seem that the more devoted and holy one becomes, the more it enrages the tempter. But our strength to resist temptation is also augmented; and they pass by, and leave us unhurt, resting in calm reliance on the Omnipotent God. And oh, the sweetness that fills the soul, when temptation has been met and overcome! "No affliction," says the Apostle, "for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby." Nor yet is the sanctified one out of danger of sinning, and falling under condemnation. Yet, "if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father;" and though beaten for once, let him renew the conflict again with increased vigor.

But it is a complete likeness of the soul of Christ. The Spirit of God has taken up his abode in the heart, and we have become the temples of the Holy Ghost, as several times declared by the pen of inspiration. Says Paul, "know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" 1 Cor. 3: 16. And again, "what! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" 1 Cor. 6: 19. It is to be perfected in love, faith, humility, patience, long-suffering, gentleness, and all the other christian graces. In short, it is to possess, and breathe out, the very spirit of Him who was "meek and lowly in heart," "who went about doing good," and who, "when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not, but committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously." The sanctified soul has no will or choice aside from the will of God. His will is swallowed up in that of his Heavenly Father, who is too wise to err, too good to be unkind, and too powerful to allow anything whatever to befall him which will result in harm. His constant desire is that in all circumstances, prosperous or adverse—in all his affairs, God would order for him, and would do just that which he pleaseth. He is not heard complaining of providences, or even of trials, and peevishly wishing it were otherwise. No, he will but kiss the rod that smites, calmly believing the promise,—"all things work together for good to them that love God." Truly, this is a blessed state to be in, in which our own will is merged, or lost in the will of God; and his will is ours! Yea, thrice blessed. Here the soul finds solid happiness—bliss as great as can be enjoyed by mortals—finds it by not seeking it; but seeking only that the will of God may be done—seeking only that his beloved Heavenly Father would do just that which he sees best. Yes, this is Heaven begun, even here in this poor dark world, groaning beneath the weight and curse of sin. Ah, this is blessedness, such as the rich, and great, and pleasure-loving worldly throng, cannot conceive of. To be at peace with our Creator, the great source of life, power, goodness, and everything that is desirable here or hereafter—who that has not felt it, can imagine the felicity! Surely, this miserable world is no place for such! They need to be translated to a fairer clime than this. They are fit for a more congenial soil than this selfish, sin-besotted world. No wonder that they long and sigh for the better land! No wonder that they desire, above all other things, to be with Him who is their all—that ever and anon the cry bursts from them, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!"

The work of sanctification some may suppose to be our own act. This, however, is believed to be a mistake. It is the work of God, a work which he accomplishes in us. Thus, in the text, God promises to perform it; "Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it." So in a multitude of passages, some of which have been cited. But though it is the work of God, yet it is wrought in us the very moment we are truly willing to have it done. When we make an unreserved consecration of our whole being to God he is "faithful" on his part to do for us all he has promised. That moment we are made the temples of the Holy Ghost; that moment we are entirely sanctified, and set apart for the Master's use. It is our work to consecrate ourselves; it is the Lord's to sanctify us; and he ever stands ready and waiting to perform it. He stands ready to take up his abode in our hearts as soon as we will unbar the door (if I may use the expression,) and let him in. Yes, the greatest of all blessings the Lord holds out, and is waiting for an opportunity to bestow upon us as soon as we are willing to receive the gift. O, who would not yield at once! Who would any longer brave it out against such a God?

The sanctified soul is constantly on the watch-tower, keeping the strictest lookout against every sin; constantly bearing the cross, watching for opportunities to do and to suffer all the will of God; constantly equipped with the entire gospel armor. The Apostle Paul thus describes the same; "Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace: above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." Eph. 6: 13–18.

"But," says one, "after all, I know not how to obtain this blessing. I have wept, and struggled, and prayed, but it does no good." Then cease your struggling, let go every other hold, and, casting away every other hope, fall into the embrace of his love, yield yourself up into the hands of a covenant-keeping God; at the same time believing that he receives you. Throw yourself at his feet, and then appropriate his promises to make you entirely his own. When you have done this, then "reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6: 11. Do not then be cheated out of the blessing by the tempter, who will perhaps (especially if without much feeling,) try to persuade you that it is all unavailing, that the Lord regards you not.

Some say that it is God's truth that sanctifies. But this appears to be not exactly correct. The truth is the medium through which we are sanctified, and not the doer of the work. The work is performed by the Holy Spirit, and he sanctifies the truth to us by setting it home to our hearts. So the inspired writers declare. Says Paul, "but we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." 2 Thess. 2: 13. So also the language of Peter,—"elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 1: 2. Thus our sanctification is the office of the Holy Spirit. The language of the Savior in John 17: 17, is in perfect harmony and keeping with this view. He prays his Father, "sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." Mark, his language is "through thy truth," not by it, as might seem at first view. His prayer seems to imply a fervent desire that God would give his Holy Spirit to sanctify his disciples through the operation of his truth upon their hearts, through the medium of their believing and obeying his word; a work performed by the Holy Ghost.

For the Crisis.

Is Death the end of Us?

There is a great deal of skepticism in the world on the subject of the resurrection. A great many profess to believe in the resurrection of the dead, who know nothing of the importance of the event. Job says, "he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more." Chap. 7: 9. As I look back upon the lapse of ages, I see generation after generation falling into the grave. No condition of life is exempt from corruption's withering tread. The good and the bad alike must enter the great charnel-house. To come up no more? Ah, here is the great question of all questions—the great inquiry of all minds. Philosophers have written, orators have spoken, and great men of all ages have desired to know. But, has the problem been solved? Tell me, you that are advanced in godliness, is there no doubt in your mind of there being a future beyond the gloomy grave? Do you believe, without a shadow of a doubt, that you will one day behold those loved ones who have fallen? that you will yet gaze upon their forms? Oh! if you can, happy are you. It is indeed a GLORIOUS HOPE.

We try to think they will yet be raised—will comfort ourselves with the idea that we shall yet behold them, clothed with immortality. But then will come that dark, that awful thought—death is the end of us. A few more days, and all is over; we are forgotten, are as though we had never been. The thought is insupportable! In the silent watches of the night it haunts us; at midday it does not leave us; by the wayside it clings to us, and by the fireside it does not forsake us! Oh! is there a resurrection? Who can tell? "If I wait, the grave is mine house; I have made my bed in the darkness. I have said to corruption, thou art my father; to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister. And where is now my hope? as for my hope, who shall see it?" "Oh, that my words were now written! Oh, that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another, though my reins be consumed within me."

Redemption from death is the desire of all nations. The "soberest man in the ancient heathen world had a deep and very strong conviction that death is not the normal state of man; that it is something introduced since the creation of man, and that he was not originally made to die; and hence, amid all the traditions of heathendom that have floated down the stream of time, there was kept constantly afloat, never submerged, the beautiful recollection that once there was a golden age, when there was no death; and still the strong and inerrable hope that man would cleave to with his last gasp, that there should be a golden age again, when sickness, and sorrow, and death should forever flee away. Even in heathen times man would not accept the grave as his only and his ultimate home; he could not believe it possible that this exquisite mechanism of ours, when dissolved in dust, was to be the end of us. They could not see a light in the valley of the shadow of death; they could not see the other end of the long, dark, and dreary tunnel; but they believed, nevertheless, that there was an end to it; and whether they believed it from the instincts of their nature, or from some of the unspent echoes that still reverberated through the dark and dreary wastes of the world of God's first truth proclaimed in Paradise, we know not; but they held fast this—that death was unnatural, that man was not meant to die.

Now, what they guessed, and hoped, and yearned, and longed for, as their deepest, their universal desire, we know; 'Unto you is born the Prince of Life;' 'he that believeth on me hath life;' 'I am the resurrection and the life.' 'All that are in the grave shall hear His voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life.'"

"See darkness and doubt are now flying away,
No longer I roam in conjecture forlorn;
Lo! breaks on the traveler, faint, and astray,
The bright and the balmy effulgence of morn.
See truth, love, and mercy in triumph descending,
And nature all glowing in Eden's first bloom!
On the cold cheek of Death smiles and roses are blending,
And beauty immortal awakes from the tomb."

For the Crisis.

Changes in a Christian's Life.

We have not yet come to the plains of "the blessed land." We are yet in a land of hills and valleys, of woodlands and open country, of thorns and flowers, of woes and joys, of smiles and tears, of songs and groans, of victories and defeats, of virtue and vice, of good men and vile, of good spirits and evil, of the elements of life and death! It is well that we have changes. Were it all night and gloom, we should be disheartened and discouraged. Were it all sunlight and joy, we should forget our dependence on God, and cease to pray and cry. Now, in the darkness, we are led earnestly to seek light from the Fountain of light, and thus we glorify Him. In the hour of rapture and gladness, we sing and shout His praises, and thus we honor Him. All of our christian graces must be tried. Some are tried on the mount—some in the valley—some on the plain—some in the thorns—some among friends—some among enemies. It is all well. O God, search, prove, and prepare us for thy holy kingdom!

For the Crisis.

"EXCEPT THESE ABIDE IN THE SHIP, YE CANNOT BE SAVED." Acts 27: 31.

Amid a rough and boisterous sea, a ship heavily ladened and containing a large company of human beings, is endeavoring to gain her port of destination. Long and tedious has been her journey, struggling with adverse winds, and driven by the tempest into dangerous proximity with rocks and quicksands. Every effort to gain her object, though arduous, seems unavailing, and she is left to the mercy of the winds and waves. Hope dies out in every heart, and they give themselves up to be lost.

Among that ship's company is a prisoner, a man of God, unnoticed perhaps by the multitude, whose words of caution have been disregarded by those to whom they were addressed. To him an angel of the Lord has been commissioned, with a promise of life to him and those that sail with him; and now, in this hour of danger and peril, in the name of Him whom he served, he speaks words of cheer and encouragement to that trembling crew.

But dangers seem to continue and increase, and in doubt and fear they seek to flee out of the ship. Again the man of God stands forth, and says to them,—"Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved." They heed his words and obey his directions, and under the overruling care of Him "who gathers the winds in his fists," and commands the waves of the sea "and they obey Him," they are saved, and all escape safe to land.

Let us look at another ship, which, like that just described, is exposed to the fury of the elements. Long indeed, and perilous at times, has been her passage. At one time contending with the storm, and well nigh overwhelmed by the angry billows; at another, "the dangerous calm" is her foe. But notwithstanding all her conflict with wind and wave, she has outrode each storm, and is now nearing her destined port. Almost in sight of land, perils thicken on every side. The howling winds, the roaring breakers, bespeak imminent danger, and the necessity of the greatest caution in sailing. A mistake now may prove her ruin. Sometimes impeded by adverse winds, her progress is hardly perceptible, but reference to her chart shows she is indeed making headway; signs there's no mistaking, tell that the long sought for home is almost gained. As they view them, the hearts of the crew beat with gladness, for many have been their trials and disappointments on the way, as well also their temptations to give up the voyage as altogether fruitless. But when about to leave, the voice of the commander is heard,—"Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved." That loved voice inspires many with hope and courage, and unwilling to disobey, they continue on their way, while others, regardless of the exhortation, leave the noble vessel, and following their own inclinations, or some false light, they soon disappear forever.

Sometimes, as in the case of the other ship, those to whose care the vessel had been more particularly intrusted, were among the first to leave, thereby doing great injury to some who were dissatisfied, and causing sorrow to those who were determined to endure to the end. These, well aware that their salvation depended upon their abiding in the ship, determined, though it be at the risk of life itself, to guard every avenue of their hearts, and shut their eyes and ears against every influence that might have a tendency to lessen their interest in the object before them, and draw them into other pursuits. These influences or temptations seem to increase as they near their journey's end, and being multiform, and withal very seductive and deceitful in their nature, it leads to the necessity of great watchfulness.

To one not well versed in the history of this ship and her crew, there might seem to be but very few on board. Such need to be informed that by far the greater part of the company "have gone below," and are quietly sleeping, being worn down by long continued labor, and having received permission from their Captain thus to do, and feeling the most perfect confidence in his skill and power to guide them safely to the journey's end. They also received the assurance that when they come into harbor they shall be "called," that with the others they may go up and possess the goodly land—see the King in his beauty and share his glory as the fruit of their toil.

But see! a light appears a little in the distance, and every eye is strained to catch a glimpse. No mistake, they are on the right course. Soon all their anxiety and care, their watching and labors will be ended, their tears forever wiped away, their brightest hopes and anticipations more than realized, their coarse sea fare exchanged for fruits that never wither nor decay, the dark storm-cloud and heaving billow forgotten amid the splendor of that cloudless glory that gilds the hills of Paradise restored—their everlasting home. No time now for repose or inactivity, for all, all's at stake!

'Tis a scene of interest too deep to be soon forgotten, yet we must take our leave of them, while borne upon the breeze, ever and anon, come ringing in our ears these words—"Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved."

For the Crisis.

From Bro. I. Damman.

BRO. GRANT:—I have not forgotten Zion yet, poor as I am; I wish Mount Zion well, and all that desire her. There are many now that have weak hands and feeble knees, and what shall we say to them to strengthen them, but, your God will come, and will not tarry; he will come with vengeance, as he hath said, with a recompense, and save you. O that will be blessed beyond expression now. It is a fact that we are fulfilling some jot of God's word, which must be fulfilled to make the church perfect. Well, I want grace to say any way that God's word may be fulfilled, and his name glorified, and my soul saved with all that believe on His name. We are a singular people; not so singular but what we might be better; not so separate from the world but that we might be more so; not so wise but that we might be more so; not so devoted to God as we ought; not so clear from self as we must be; not so free from the spirit of mastery as we must be. God help us! Amen.

Much is said about the perfection of the Bible, and truly it is nonsense to talk about any other kind. "But," says one, "what is that?" Well, if the Bible teaches a perfection, it will tell its effects. What does the Bible say? Permit me to say what the Bible don't teach. It does not teach that perfection will make a man cross, self-righteous, a lover of the world, or pleasure, or the contentious rabble of the day; neither to love money, and hug it to his bosom, while others are in want and cry for bread; neither to let out, or put out his money to usury to his brother, some 6 per cent, some 12 per cent, &c.

Now let us notice the perfection of the Bible. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." What effect does that have on man? It will cause a man to do good for evil, love when hated, bless when cursed. Jesus says, the Father "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same?"

Candidly weigh this matter. There is no need of straining to find out what perfection is, neither do we need to get up another doctrine beside that which Jesus preached. No, no. But come to the standard which is presented to every man as a cross in the word of God. Deny yourself and take the cross, or this principle, (found in the gospel,) do by others as you would have them do unto you; do good for evil. "O," says one, "I want to feel well." Well, then, do good for evil. Another says, "I want to feel happy." Then do as you would that others should do unto you. Says another, "I want to feel joyful." Then bless them that curse you. Says another, "I want the mind of Christ." Then submit to live out his mind, and your fruit will be unto holiness. Says another, "I want to be spiritually minded." Then you must submit to live out God's word, which is spirit and life. Rom. 8: 6,—"For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Ver 9: "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Let this question be decided by the fruits. Draw the contrast between the flesh and Spirit. Gal. 5: 19–23,—"Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, sedition, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." Now the conclusion of Paul was, if we live in the Spirit let us walk in the Spirit; "let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another." We are to provoke unto love, but not to wrath. I hope those dear brethren that have suffered so much with a fear which they call the fear of God, and all the time divides them from their dear brethren, will see it is not the fruit of the Spirit of God, but the fruit of some other spirit.

For the Crisis.

From Sr. A. R. Oakes.

BRO. GRANT:—Although personally unknown to you, yet feeling that we are of one family, I take the liberty to address a few lines to you, and if you think them worthy of a place in the Crisis, I should be glad to have them inserted.

It has been but a short time since I joined the little company of pilgrims who, with heads uplifted, are looking for the "King to come in His beauty;" yet I can thank God from the depths of my heart that He ever led me to unite with them, and, by the grace of God assisting me, I mean ever to travel on with them to the better land, and join my song of praise with theirs "when we arrive at home." O how it animates our hearts as we sojourn in this vale of tears, to think of the promised inheritance—"sweet field beyond the swelling flood," "and rivers of delight." There will be no sickness, pain, or death. There, the parting hand will never be given, and no farewells be uttered, but one long, eternal day of happiness. Who would not give up the fading things of this vain world? Who would not deny self, take up the cross and follow Christ? What though that cross be very burdensome, who would not bear it patiently, in hope of the glorious home, the dazzling crown, the harp of gold, and to be forever with their Lord? As for me, I am willing to suffer everything and anything here, knowing that if I suffer with Him I shall also reign with Him. How true it is, after we become rooted and grounded in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, that all earthly things appear so vain and insignificant compared with the joy we anticipate in the world to come. Somehow I find myself contrasting everything that I see or hear, with that which I hope to enjoy when Jesus comes. If sweet music now greets my ear, I at once think of the songs that the Redeemer will sing in "that happy, eternal day." Oftimes my enraptured heart can hardly bide the Savior's time, filled as it is "with longings for rest." O glory be to God, for the pure and undefiled religion of which the Bible speaks. I have found it to be a solace to me in times of trouble. What should we do if we could not lean on Jesus? Although the sunshine and shadows of but seventeen years have fallen about my pathway, yet I have passed through the deep waters of affliction, and oftimes, in anguish of spirit, have prayed to die that I might be at rest. But I thank God that my life has been spared until the present time. I am now determined to live for the Lord while permitted to tarry here; and if I am laid away in the cold tomb before my Lord appears, I hope to be raised at the resurrection of the just, to praise my God forever.

Then, in view of the coming of our Lord, let us gird on the armor and endure hardness as good soldiers of the cross Let us press onward, caring nought

"For the world and its pride,
Longing to dwell by Immanuel's side."

And when our Lord does come, if we are found faithful, we shall share a home in Canaan's happy land. Pray for me, dear brother, that I may serve the Lord faithfully here, and reign with Him in the kingdom of bright glory.

That the Lord may ever guide and direct you, and at last give you the crown of life that fadeth not away, is the earnest pray of Thy Pilgrim Sister,

ANNIE R. OAKES.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 4, 1857.

Question.

No. IV.

"What is meant by the soul of man?"

A press of business has prevented us from continuing the answers to this question of our correspondent, as we designed, and from answering other questions of interest that have been presented. We hope to find time soon.

In answering the above question, we gave first, a theological answer, showing that the soul is a being separate from the body—the real man, who continues to exist as such after the body has mouldered back to dust. In its nature, it is described to be "immaterial, uncompounded, indivisible, indissoluble, indestructible, intangible and immortal."

We next gave a Bible answer to the question but found nothing in it to sustain the theological definition of the soul as given above, but on the contrary we saw that the word soul was primarily applied to the whole man, and secondarily to the mind of man, but in no case is the mind represented as a being or entity existing separate from the body, or as conscious after the death of the material organism; for the Bible expressly declares "the dead know not anything." His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." If the mind is the soul, and exists when we are dead, then the thoughts continue also, and do not perish when the "breath goeth forth." Again, if the mind is the man and never dies, it would not be true that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest," neither would it be true that "the dead know not any thing."

In the third place, the words nephesh in Hebrew and psukee in Greek which are rendered soul, are also translated life and lives. Nephesh is rendered life and lives 128 times in the Old Testamnent, and psukee 40 times in the new; but no one can suppose for a moment that the life is the man independent of his organism, and exists as such when he is dead, and his thoughts perished. In Job 12: 10, we read,—"in whose hand is the soul (nephesh) of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind." This scripture shows that every living thing has a soul. The word rendered breath in this passage is the same in the original as the one rendered spirit in Eccl. 12: 7, where it is said, the spirit returns to God who gave it.

In the fourth place, the word soul (nephesh) is applied to all living creatures. The first time the word nephesh occurs in the Bible is in Gen. 1: 20, and is applied beasts. "And God said, let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, (nephesh, margin, living soul.") Ver. 21. "And God created great whales, and every living creature, (nephesh) that moveth." Ver. 24. "And God said let the earth bring forth the living creature (nephesh) after his kind." Ver. 30. "And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life (nephesh or soul) or as it is in the margin,—"a living soul." These scriptures teach us that all the creatures in the sea, and on the earth are called living souls. Hence we read in Rev. 16: 3,—"And the third angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every living soul died in the sea."

From our brief examination, we conclude that the word soul is applied indiscriminately to man and beast, and that all men and animals are called living souls, but never immortal souls.

Boston.

To the glory of the Lord, we can say that rich blessings from heaven are falling upon us. Our conference has produced the most happy results. Truth is spreading, and the true light of christianity is shining around. Our prayer meeting Tuesday evening, which was the last I have had the privilege of attending, was the best I have enjoyed since I have been in Boston.

Special Notice.

Our subscribers will please observe that this is the first number of this Vol., and that it is necessary they should pay in advance in order that we may be able to pay our bills. We are now three hundred dollars in debt, but if all who owe for the Vol. now ended will pay what is due the office, we shall "owe no man anything." Brethren and sisters, we beg of you do not let this debt remain, but send at once, that there may be no dead weights, like a "body of death," hanging upon us. We expect a hearty response. We hope that many will send donations for the poor, for we feel anxious that they should have the Crisis as long as it is published. Jesus tells us that when we do it unto one of the least of his brethren, we do it unto him. Come, dear brethren and sisters, lend a helping hand.

In this number, which is the first of the new volume, those who have not paid to the close of the last vol. ending with the last number, will find the amount now due, including advance pay for this volume, which will end with No. 104, marked on their paper if it comes in a package with others; but if they receive it in a single wrapper, they will find the amount due, written on the wrapper.

There are several who have not paid anything on the last two volumes. We should be glad to supply them with a free paper if we could, but we shall be obliged to stop all papers sent to those who have not paid anything since No. 26 was issued, unless we hear from them immediately. If any should have their paper stopped who are not able to pay, if they will inform us, we will gladly supply them as long as they like to read it; for we are resolved in the strength of the Lord that the poor shall have the gospel. Write us at once, that we may know how many to print.

Those who have not paid anything since the close of the first vol., now owe us two dollars, and if they wish to take the paper another six months, then they should pay three dollars at the present time. We regret that we are obliged to discontinue any one's paper for want of means, but we must contrive some way to keep out of debt, and we trust all will commend us for such a course.

"Pauline Theology."

We wish to call the attention of our readers to this most excellent work from the pen of Bro. H. L. Hastings, which should be read by every accountable being in the world. It is a "book for the times," setting forth in a very clear manner the theology that Paul taught concerning the future punishment of the wicked. We think it the best work that has been written on this subject. Come, brethren, send in your orders for books, and scatter them like Autumn leaves among your neighbors.

The Lord's Supper.

No. VI.

(Concluded.)

BRO. GRANT:—Speaking of the love feast in my last, I was remarkably glad to see that some of our brethren are retracing their steps, and seeking again the "old paths" our Fathers walked in, when they took sweet counsel together at those religious festivals, or feasts of love. I am not surprised at your having such a good time at Chickopee Falls. You were walking in the "old paths." Christians always have good times when they do their duty. I would say to the lukewarm professors, those who are complaining of their coldness and indifference, no life nor spirit in their meetings, go ye and do likewise, do your duty, and God will bless you. He will again revive his work, only seek the "old paths," remember again your first love, and see if God will not pour out his Spirit. I am glad to see a revival of this ancient practice. I hope that it will be productive of beneficial results, and made subservient to a restoration of that fervent love of the brethren which so imenently distinguished the first church of the saints.

As I stated in my last, their love feasts were observed at a very early period of the christian church, and continued so long as the christian profession was preserved in its original purity. But mark the result. When these love feasts were suppressed, "it gave rise to a new mode of distributing the bread and wine as the symbolical representation of the broken body and shed blood of Christ. Formerly, this had been done at the table at which the membership had partaken of the common meat of the love feast, and at which they either reclined or sat as at any ordinary meal. But as the table had been superceded by an altar, the position for receiving the sacrament of the supper was necessarily changed. For some time the communicants walked to the altar, and there standing, received the elements from the elder; for the canons of the church at these times expressly forbade that any one should kneel even in prayer on Sundays, and other festival days. But as the doctrine of the mystic presence of Christ in the emblems of his body and blood was strongly developing itself, a few years only were necessary to supercede the canons forbidding kneeling; and the christian world soon settled down on the principle that the only reverent posture to receive the mystic symbols of Christ's body and blood, was in the humble position of bended knees."

"The primitive christians having thus entirely perverted the institution of the commemoration of Christ's last supper, it was finally consummated in its corruption by the invention of the doctrine of transubstantiation, and the whole subject thus elaborated prevailed in the Catholic church down to the time of the Reformation."

"The first Protestant reformers came out of the Catholic church deeply imbued with the notions they had received by their previous theological training. They had in fact only revolted from the authority of the pope, for they still held the doctrine of a Holy Catholic Church, and maintained with but slight modifications most of the dogmas and institutions they had received from the Catholics. Thus, with respect to the communion of the Lord's supper, Luther taught what he called consubstantiation, and Calvin advocated the real presence. The Church of England, from which our American churches more immediately sprung, expressly made their ceremonial respecting the administration of the Lord's supper to favor the doctrine of the real presence, so that the Catholics might be induced to conform to the English church. [See Bernet, Reform. Part 2, lib. 3.] Zuingle, the Swiss reformer, under much obloquy, alone taught the true doctrine on the subject, that it was merely commemorative." [Credibility of the Scriptures. Vol. 2, p. 148.

I have now given a brief history of the wines of the Scripture, and of the ancients, and the institution of the Lord's supper, the manner in which it was originally celebrated by the primitive christians, and the innovation by which the old mode was set aside by a new device. I might have extended my remarks to a considerable extent, both upon the wines of the Scriptures and of the ancients. There are many texts I should like to examine, such as the following: "Wine at the marriage of Cana." "The wine put into new bottles." "No man also having drunk old wine, straightway desireth new, for he saith the old is better." "Drink thy wine with a merry heart." "Wine that maketh glad the heart of man." "Wine that cheereth the heart of God and man." Paul's recommendation of wine to Timothy, &c. &c. I might also continue my remarks, and show the true nature and purpose of the sacrament of the Lord's supper, but for the present I shall conclude, hoping what few broken thoughts I have given may be of benefit to the church. If any of my brethren desire any farther information on the above topic, I shall deem it a privilege to give what little light I possess on the subject.

Yours in the bonds of brotherly love,

SAMUEL MASON.

My Journal.

No. III.

Oct. 23d. Left Rye for Kennebunk Port; evening meeting at the Advent Chapel. Rather a hard time speaking. The people were quite agitated on account of the failure of the ship builders in the place.

24th, eve., meeting at the same place in company with Bro. Ross.

25th, at Portland.

26th, Lord's day forenoon, in company with Bro. Couch; in the afternoon met with the colored brethren. Bro. Adams, (colored,) preached. By invitation, I preached at the same place in the eve; had quite a free time—house well filled—good attention. Their minister was present, and took a part in the meeting.

27th, eve., meeting at Clark's Hall; but few present and little interest. I think they need more pure religion. May the Lord help them to examine themselves and see.

28th, arrived at Rockland by steamboat. Called to see my relatives. Stopped a few days.

30th, called to see twelve families; found some still striving for the better land, others, I fear, have forgotten that they were purged from their old sins.

31st, called to see some of my relatives, found them more engaged in Rapology than religion.

Nov. 1st, at Orrington Conference. But few attended; had a good time It had been some eight or nine years since I had been there. I was glad to see them. I found some still on the heavenly journey, some seemed to be faltering.

2d, Lord's day, at the same place in company with Bro. Reed. I spoke in the forenoon and eve., he in the afternoon. Had quite a good meeting.

3d, Bangor, eve., meeting at Barkersville; a few believers there in the speedy coming of the Lord.

4th, at Holden, eve., meeting at the school-house near Bro. Clewley's. Had an excellent meeting, quite a number resolved to be more faithful. May the Lord help them to endure to the end that they may be saved.

6th, Old Town, eve., meeting at a private house, but few present. I fear that while iniquity abounds that the love of some has grown cold.

6th and 7th, at Woodstock, N. B., one hundred and twenty-five miles in the stage, bad going, was very tired, but was cheered to see that there had been quite a revival since I was there before, under the labors of Bro. Ross. And others had become more decided in the truth of the speedy coming of the Lord. Stopped at Woodstock and Simonds, five Sundays. Had meetings six evenings in the week; had some interesting meetings, think the brethren and sisters were strengthened, and encouraged in the heavenly journey, and seemed to be more resolved to go through than when I arrived there. May the Lord help them to be faithful, and strive to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace, and walk in love, love one another with pure hearts fervently, and thereby show that they are the children of God. I felt my own heart often cheered while with them. I desire to be thankful for the timely aid I received from them. They did not say, "be ye warmed and clothed," and then leave it for others to do, but were willing to do their part; in short, they had religion that went pocket deep. I had a few meetings in Jackson Town, in two different places. Found a few interested there; had two meetings in Richmond, in the neighborhood of Bro. Samuel Raymond. The people turned out well, and paid excellent attention, and I hope that some good was done. I enjoyed the hospitalities of Bro. Raymond, and others. Bro. Raymond has been a believer in the speedy coming of the Lord, I believe, since '48. I was received very kindly among the most of the people that I saw.

Dec. 8th, had a social conversation meeting at Woodstock, to see whether the friends of the cause would sustain it. They concluded to have at least two meetings a week, and chose two brethren to take the lead of the meetings.

9th, went to Eel River, twelve miles from Woodstock. Five of the brethren and sisters went with me. Eve., meeting at a school-house near Bro. Shaw's. The people paid good attention, and I hope that some good was done.

10th, at Frederickton. Stopped all night at a public house, although I called on some that professed religion.

11th, eve., meeting at the schoool-house, near Bro. George Nevers (Douglass;) had a free time speaking. Bro. Perry, a free christian Baptist Preacher, was present, and took part in the meeting.

12th, eve., by invitation held a meeting at the Free Christian church. Had quite a free time speaking.

13th, met in conference with the christian Baptists. Eve., meeting at the Hall near Bro. Benjamin Terxa's 14th, Lord's day, had an invitation from Eld. Perry, to preach in the Free Christian church, which I accepted. I spoke twice, had a free time in the morn. Brn. Perry and Garrity, and some others took part in the meeting. Bro. Perry treated me very kindly. I visited this place five years ago; found many that are favorable to the Advent doctrine; had a pleasant visit with them, hope it was not a lost season.

15th, eve., meeting opposite Frederickton, where they have but few meetings, quite a number present, paid good attention.

16th, at Frederickton, eve., meeting at the Free Christian church. Bro. Perry preached; gave me an invitation to take a seat in the desk, and take a part in the meeting.

17th, went to St. John by stage. Eve., prayer meeting at the Free Christian church.

18th, eve., prayer meeting at Carleton among the Free Christians.

19th, eve., prayer meeting at the Baptist, Brussel St. church, St. John. Bro. Robinson, Baptist minister, gave me an invitation to take the lead of the meeting. He has always appeared friendly, has given me a number of invitations in days past to preach to his people.

20th, getting ready for crossing the Bay.

21st, Lord's day. By invitation preached at Carleton. Forenoon and eve, in the Free Christian Baptist church; had quite a free time, a number took a part in the meeting who appeared quite friendly; they have generally at that place.

22nd, at 8 A. M., took the steamboat for Nova Scotia. Arrived at home at half-past eight, P. M., found wife and friends generally well. Was absent from home eighteen weeks; visited four States and the province of N. B.; attended a number of Camp and Conference meetings; had some interesting meetings, saw many of the brethren and sisters that I have seen before, and others that I never saw; enjoyed my visit well; have seen some reclaimed, others revived and encouraged to endure. I hope that it has not been a lost season to me or them. I thank the Lord for his mercy and care to me and mine and to all. Truly the Lord is good. I desire to be grateful to all the brethren and sisters and friends for their liberality and timely aid. May the Lord reward them is my prayer. Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of peace shall be with you. Be of good cheer, for soon I believe, all the pilgrims will get home. From a pilgrim and stranger, still hoping for speedy redemption,

The Way to take Comfort.

If one desires take to comfort, let him set himself at work to make his fellow beings around him comfortable, in every way that it can consistently be done. As our Creator has arranged the relations of humanity, a person cannot possibly be comfortable who lives only to himself and for himself. It is comforting to reflect that we have lifted up a fallen fellow being, who otherwise might have perished. It is comforting to look upon a once poor and suffering family, who now enjoy the needful things of life through our benevolence and liberality, with happy and thankful hearts. It is comforting to meet the once staggering, ragged, and filthy drunkard, who now, in goodly apparel, and with cleanly appearance walks nobly and uprightly forth, in the image of God, and informs us, that it is through our instrumentality that he is what he is. It is comforting to meet one whose heart, once oppressed with sorrow and anguish, is now light and glad, by means of some kind word which we have spoken, or some kind act which we have done. It is literally true, that in comforting others we comfort ourselves.

BRO. GRANT:—Lonely and weary of this bitter life, I now seat myself to write a few lines for the Crisis. It is cheering to read the encouraging communications from the brethren and sisters, sattered up and down the earth, and learn from them through the Crisis, that they remain firm and unshaken in the words of eternal truth. I am rejoicing in the Rock of my salvation. Glory be to God, for the plan of salvation; a plan laid by infinite wisdom, and so arranged, that if man is saved, it will be by unmerited grace, and if lost, the blame will rest on his own head. But the best of all is, this salvation is soon to be completed, and our tribulation ended, when the saints will walk on the hills of Zion, clothed with immortality, bearing palms of victory, and striking the grand chorus,—Alleluia! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! I long for that glorious day to arrive. Dear Brn. and Srs., lift up your heads for redemption is at hand.

In hope, CARRIE ALDEN.

Choice Selection.

PUNCTUALITY.—"Method, is the very hinge of business, and there can be no method without punctuality." These precepts cannot be taught too early in life, or impressed too strongly. Punctuality in the slightest matter, in every engagement to others, in every promise to a child, should be strictly regarded. "Every child should be taught to pay all his debts, to fulfill all his contracts exactly in the manner, completely in the value, punctually at the time. Everything which he has borrowed he should be obliged to return uninjured, at the time specified; and everything belonging to others which he has lost, he should be required to replace." Were these rules strictly enforced in education there would be less suffering in society from disregard of obligations.

"Boast not thyself of to-morrow." Do it now.

To embrace the whole creation with love, sounds beautiful; but we must begin with the individual—with the nearest. And he who cannot love that deeply, intensely, entirely, how should he be able to love that which is remote, and which throws but feeble rays upon him from a foreign star? How should he be able to love it with any feeling which deserves the name of love? The greatest cosmopolites are generally the neediest beggars; and they who embrace the entire universe with love, for the most part, love nothing but their narrow self.

The Germans have for many years used the following remedy for hydrophobia, with scarcely a single failure, it is said, when taken immediately after being bitten:

One ounce of prepared oyster shell, one ounce of Gential root powder, one-half ounce of red mole and one fourth of an ounce of gum myrrh, mixed to the finest powder. According to prescription, the person has on three days in succession, to take before breakfast as much of the powder, with warm beer—as three common knife points will hold; after this, to wait perspiration.

Rise up when you speak in the prayer, class or conference meeting. The rising posture in giving testimony is not only more respectful and dignified than the sitting, but it has also a more favorable, salutary, confidential influence both on the speaker and the hearers—Rise up.

Opportunity is the flower of time; and as the stalk may remain when the flower is cut off, so time may with us when opportunity is gone forever.

A wise man will stay for a convenient season, and will bend a little, rather than be torn up by the roots.

Ice broken and ice melted represent the two kinds of repentance.

Obituary.

Died in Concord N. H., Jan. 16th. 1857, Caroline H., daughter of Oliver and Elizabeth L. Hart, aged three years, seven months and five days.

Carrie, as she was often called, was a very interesting and lovely child. She not only had the affections of her parents, and other near and dear relatives, but she was beloved by many. She was but a child, yet she is missed, and not a few have shed the sympathetic tear, and sorrowed with Bro. and Sr. Hart, on account of this bereavement. Still we have joy mingled with our sorrows, while we have the assurance that little Carrie will soon, with all the ransomed, be delivered from the "land of the enemy," and be gathered to her own border. Yes, we have heard the glad tidings. Soon Jesus will come. This glorious hope cheers our hearts, and gives joy unspeakable, even when our cup of grief runs over. I do hope the heralds of Jesus' coming will sound it more loudly, that the mourning pilgrim may be comforted, and the sinner hear, believe, and obtain God's favor, and finally rest with the pilgrim in the new heaven and earth.

A favorite hymn of Carrie's was sung at her funeral, which was comforting and appropriate. It was the familiar hymn, "Hark! Hark! hear the glad tidings," &c. She was often singing these words, and seemed much to enjoy them. But she sleeps and while Jesus tarries we'll wait patiently for Him, knowing that he will soon appear and wake all his children who sleep, and give them immortality at that joyful day.

Domestic Summary.

RUMORED DEFEATS OF WALKER'S FORCES.—NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—A mercantile firm in this city have received advices from their correspondents in Nicaragua, purporting to be of later date than those already published, conveying the important information that since the arrival of the New Orleans recruits, Walker's forces had suffered important defeats, at the hands of the Costa Ricans, and had lost in killed and wounded 60 men; that the attempt to ascend the river with Col. Stockbridge's present means, had been abandoned, and many of the soldiers from the neighborhood of Sarapiqui had come down the river having escaped upon logs, rafts, etc.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 26.—Late advices from Kansas state that a serious difficulty had arisen between Gov. Geary and Judge Sherwood, growing out of the refusal of the Governor to appoint the latter as Sheriff, as desired by the Legislature Sherwood had announced his intention to kill the Governor, and, meeting him shortly afterward in the street, spit in his face. Geary did not resent this, but his friends got up an indignation meeting, which Sheriff Jones, Sherwood, and others, attempted to break up. A conflict ensued, in which Sherwood shot a Mr. Shepard, one of Geary's friends, four times, killing him, and wounded two others. Mr. Jones, the Governor's Secretary, then shot Sherwood, the ball passing through his head, and killing him instantly. Very great excitement existed at Lecompton, and a general fight was anticipated. Gov. Geary's residence was guarded by U. S. Troops.

GREAT DAMAGE DONE BY FRESHETS IN UPPER CANADA.—The Hamilton Spectator of Feb. 18th says that great destruction of property has been caused by the rising of the Grand River four or five feet higher than was ever known before, scarcely a single bridge being left standing between Berlin and Galt. At the latter place, property to the amount of several thousand dollars has been destroyed. Houses in the lower part of the town were removed bodily, and nearly the whole of the north side of the town was submerged.

At Brantford a great deal of damage has also been done. Families had to desert their houses; and it is stated that many were obliged to make their exit from the upper windows.

At Brantford the house of one family was surrounded with water to the depth of at least eight feet; and had they not succeeded in getting to the top part of the house, they must have perished. The loud and terrific roar of the waters seemed nearly equal to that of Niagara Falls. The cries for help were rendered more pitiable by the foaming and roaring of the waters, and by the great mistiness of the morning, which rendered it very difficult to perceive the sufferers, and to render proper assistance. A large amount of property was destroyed by the water, but fortunately no lives were lost.

At Port Hope there was also great destruction of property. Many bridges were carried away.

Items.

Child stealing, the New York papers say, is practised to a great extent in that city. Probably, on an average, two children a week are abducted from their homes while playing on the sidewalk, and are detained until the afflicted parents offer a reward for them, when the kidnappers bring their little victims to light and receive the money.

During the month of January, the total number of vessels lost was 131. The estimated value of ships and cargoes was $3,734,-200.

There were one hundred and eight steamboats built at Pittsburg last year.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.
ARRIVAL OF THE INDIAN.

PORTLAND, Feb. 24.

Steam propeller Indian, from Liverpool at 11 A. M. Wednesday, the 12th inst., arrived here at six o'clock this morning, making the passage in twelve days and nineteen hours. Her dates are four days later than those by the Asia.

PRUSSIA AND SWITZERLAND.—The Paris Presse says—"We state with regret that the news relating to the affair of Neufchatel is decidedly not so good as we had a right to expect. Letters from Berlin as well as from Berne, show that all difficulties are not yet surmounted.

AUSTRIA.—The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post (government organ) says—"The Emperor of Austria has decided on granting a general amnesty to all political offenders in the Empire. It is said that the Emperor of Russia will do the same with regard to his exiled Polish subjects. The Russian amnesty will take place about the time the Emperor Alexander visits Paris, in May or June next.

The relations between Austria and Russia are anything but improving, and the same may be said of Austria and France."

TURKEY.—The firmans of convocation are about to be forwarded to the principalities. All the political exiles are now at liberty to return. The Porte is about to take formal possession of the delta of the Danube Austria had officially notified the Porte that the evacuation of the principalities would be completed on the 24th of March. The Turkish troops were to enter afterwards.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.
Arrival of the Steamer Niagara.

HALIFAX, Feb. 28.

The Royal Mail Steamship Niagara, from Liverpool about 1 P. M., 14th inst., arrived here this morning. The Niagara had a boisterous passage.

GENERAL NEWS.—On the rumored termination of the Persian war the Daily News states:

"That it is not intended to send out any more troops from England to Persia. This announcement we make with the most entire confidence that it will be found to be correct. We believe we may add that the force already at Bushire will not advance into the interior, and that every effort is being made to bring about a peace.

The Murray affair we are assured forms no serious part of the negotiations which are being carried on at Paris by Ferouk Khan, the Persian Ambassador, and Lord Cowley; and there is at present every reason to hope that those negotiations will terminate in the reestablishment of amicable relations between the English and Persian Governments."

The Daily News gives prominence to the following paragraph:

"In another column we have stated that no troops are to be sent from England to Persia. We have equally good grounds for believing that no troops are to be sent from England to China."

PERSIA.—Troubles are reported between the Shah and the priesthood. Parties are accused of wishing to depose the Shah in favor of Murad the conqueror of Herat.

The powerful tribe of Babees are reported on the eve of an insurrection. The French Moniteur de la Flotte, however, contradicts all the above statements.

The British camp at Bushire is fortified and safe against attack.

A NEW CALCULATING MACHINE.—The French Moniteur gives some interesting particulars of a new calculating machine—from which we extract the following passages:

"M. Thomas, of Colmar, has lately made the finishing improvements in the calculating machine, called the arithmometer, at which he has been working for upwards of thirty years. Pascal and Leibnitz, in the seventeenth century, and Diderot at a later period, endeavored to construct a machine which might serve as a substitute for human intelligence in the combination of figures; but their efforts failed. M. Thomas's arithmometer may be used without the least trouble or possibility of error, not only for addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division, but also for much more complex operations, such as the extraction of the square root, involution, the resolution of triangles, &c. A multiplication of eight figures by eight others is made in eighteen seconds; a division of sixteen figures by eight figures, in twenty-four seconds; and in one minute and a quarter, one can extract the square root of sixteen figures, and also prove the accuracy of the calculation. The arithmometer adapts itself to every sort of combination. As an instance of the wonderful extent of its powers, we may state that it can furnish in a few seconds products amounting to 999,999,999,999,999,999,999,-999,999,999. A marvellous number, comparable to the infinite multitude of stars which stud the firmament, or the particles of dust which float in the atmosphere. The working of this instrument is, however, most simple. To raise or lower a nut-screw, to turn a winch a few times, and, by means of a button, to slide off a metal plate from left to right, or from right to left, is the whole secret. Instead of simply reproducing the operations of man's intelligence, the arithmometer relieves that intelligence from the necessity of making the operations. Instead of repeating responses dictated to it, this instrument instantaneously dictates the proper answer to the man who asks it a question. It is not matter producing material effects, but matter which thinks, reflects, reasons, calculates, and executes all the most difficult and arithmetical operations with a rapidity and infallibility which defies all the calculators in the world. The arithmometer is, moreover, a simple instrument, of very little volume and easily portable. It is already used in many great financial establishments, where considerable economy is realized by its employment. It will soon be considered as indispensable, and be generally used as a clock, which was formerly only to be seen in palaces, and is now in every cottage."—London Athenæum.

TERRIBLE FAMINE IN NORWAY—HUNDREDS DYING DAILY.—The English papers say that owing to the failure of their crops, the inhabitants of Lapland and Finmark, bordering on the North Cape of Norway, are in a state of dreadful misery. Hundreds are dying daily of starvation, and the living are compelled to subsist as they best can on the bark of trees ground and cooked with oats. In order to alleviate these sufferings, charitable committees have been organized on the opposite coasts of the Gulf of Bothina, to collect contributions in kind, such as corn, flour, vegetables, and spirits, which will be conveyed to them across the ice in sledges. As an addition to the suffering of these poor creatures, the cold is of a severity rarely experienced even in these ice-bound countries.

CHINA.—Dates from Hong Kong to the 13th of Dec. states that all the foreign buildings at Canton had been burnt and pillaged. Admiral Seymour had been throwing hot shot into Canton, but at the latest dates had ceased hostilities and was strengthening his position. The Chinese threatened to burn down Hong Kong.

THE RESURRECTION MAN.

Rom. 6: 3–6; Col. 3: 1–3; 1 Pet. 1: 17; Phil. 3.

I walk as one who knows
That he is treading
A stranger soil,—
As one round whom a serpent-world
Is threading
Its serpent coil.

I walk as one who feels
That he is breathing
Ungenial air,
For whom, as wiles,
The tempter still is wreathing
The bright and fair.

My steps I know
Are on the plains of danger,
For sin is near.
But looking up,
I pass along, a stranger
In haste and fear.

The earth has lost its power
To drag me downward—
Its spell is gone.
My course is now
Right upward and right onward
To yonder throne.

Hour after hour
Dark night is stealing
In gloom away.
Speed thy fair dawn
Of light, and joy, and beauty,
Thou Star of day!

For Thee, its God, its King,
Its long rejected—
Earth groans and cries:—
For Thee, the long beloved,
The long expected,
Thy bride still sighs.

A. ROSS.

No. II.

Forasmuch then as we read in the New Testament of the church (congregation) of God, we pass to inquire, what is it? It is something more than a promiscuous gathering of people: it is a company of people (not necessarily large or small, but as the case may be,) who habitually meet for the purpose of worshiping God and mutually benefitting each other, by teaching, by prayer, by exhortation, by almsgiving, &c. Says Dowling, "nothing could be more simple and unpretending than the form of church organization and government in primitive times. Each church consisted of a company of believers in the Lord Jesus, united together in covenant relationship for the worship of God, the maintenance of gospel doctrine and the due administration of the ordinances appointed by Christ."

Says Waddington, an Episcopalian, "the church in the management of its internal affairs was essentially independent of every other."

Sometimes the apostles spoke of the church as a unit, referring to all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. At other times, christians in certain localities are called the church, as the church of Corinth—of Rome, &c. The design of the church is expressed by our Savior in the following language:—"Ye are the light of the world." "Ye are the salt of the earth." "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

By being the light of the church exhibits to the world the matchless wisdom of God. See Eph. 3: 10, 11. "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in the heavenly places might be known, by the church, the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord."

FOUNDATION OF THE CHURCH.

"And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter; and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Matt. 16: 18.

"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 3: 11. By divine appointment the church has but one head. "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." Eph. 1: 22, 23. "But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." Eph. 4: 15. No one can arrogate to himself this title which belongs alone to David's royal Son, without calling down upon his head the divine vengeance; hence the awful end that awaits the Papal usurper.

The officers of the church are,

1. Apostles. These are a company of extraordinary officers numbering twelve, called directly by Christ and instructed by direct revelation, and also eye witnesses of his resurrection whose authority was confirmed by extraordinary signs and wonders and divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which at first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him. God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will." Heb. 2: 3. "Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds." 2 Cor. 12: 12. It appears from the above that the works, greater in themselves than what Christ had done, were for the specific purpose of confirming the word which began to be spoken by the Lord, and belonged especially to the Apostolic office. Hence the language of Saul—"the signs of an apostle."

It is argued by some that the apostolic office was to be perpetuated during the gospel dispensation; but I can find no such intimation in the divine record, but the reverse. If the apostolate has existed and does exist, why should not modern apostles be in possession of all that degree of inspiration and divine authority? and why should the sacred canon have been closed up eighteen hundred years ago? and how is it that there is only named in the foundations of the golden city, twelve apostles of the Lamb? Why had there not been the names of all? only one answer, in my mind, can be given. There were only twelve that were acknowledged apostles by divine appointment; and lest any should arrogate to themselves, as some have seemed to have a disposition, He, who foresaw the danger and liabilities of poor depraved humanity, set the names of those of his own appointing in the foundations of our eternal habitation.

But it may be urged, there are more than twelve set apart by divine appointment, reckoning Judas and Matthias. To this objection we would reply, Judas by transgression fell, and Matthias, though chosen by the eleven as a matter of human prudence, was not divinely recognized, but to make the heavenly conclave complete. Paul was chosen as one born out of due time. Of his own calling he seems to be conscious. He says, (1 Cor. 9: 1) "am I not an apostle? am I not free? have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord?" "The signs of an apostle were wrought among you."

The foregoing is sufficient to substantiate the design of the apostolate; viz. to bear testimony to Christ's resurrection; to fill up and confirm the canon of scripture by signs which were the legitimate productions of a supernatural power bestowed on them by the Head of the church: a power with which Satan, with all his arts of magic, and lying wonders, is not able to vie. The sacred record was completed about A. D. 96, from which point of time it may be said, "ye are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." Thank God, for such a system of truth! It needs no addition, and to take from it, is criminal. Papal Rome may keep its sacred lids closed by an iron clasp, nevertheless, it is in itself complete.

The next office to which we would invite attention is, that of the Eldership, Bishops, or Presbyters, which terms seem to imply the same thing. There are instances, however, when the term Elder is not used in an official sense, but in respect to age. God under the former as well as the gospel dispensation, has made it a divine requirement to respect the aged. In Lev. 19: 32, we read, "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honor the face of the old man, and fear thy God. I am the Lord." "Rebuke not an elder, but entreat him as a father; and the younger men as brethren; the older women as mothers." 1 Tim. 5: 1–2. Of course the term elder is not here used in an official sense, but in respect to age. The eldership is an office subordinate to the apostolic, to be perpetuated to the end of time; not to receive additional revelations, but, for this purpose, as Paul saith to Timothy, "the things which thou hast heard of me before many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men who shall be able to teach others also."

THE WORK AND CALLING OF ELDERS.

"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." Acts 20: 28. "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed. Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but of a ready mind. Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock." 1 Pet. 5: 1–3. Preachers, Teachers, Ministers, Evangelists, are terms used to designate a work, and not particularly an office; a work belonging to the apostolic office, and also to the eldership. Hence, Paul exhorts Timothy to do the work of an evangelist and make full proof of his ministry. Paul declares himself a teacher and minister of the Gentiles, showing that the work of teaching, and ministering is a work belonging to that office. This work was not to cease with the apostolate, but was to be perpetuated through coming generations by the Eldership. "Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men who shall be able to teach others also." 2 Tim. 2: 12. From the above in connection with other passages that might be cited, it is evident a regular succession was intended, not of apostles, but of holy ministers receiving from the hands of the apostles the new covenant complete. That such a class of men has existed since the apostolic age, is evident from historical testimony: for in the dark ages when Papal Rome had thrown its mantle of bigotry and superstition over the nations of Europe, enshrouding them in almost impenetrable darkness, even then, the valleys of Piedmont swarmed with living witnesses for Christ. Thousands were found in those sequestered regions who, by means of the scriptures, had become wise unto salvation.

Abstract of a Sermon

Recently delivered in this city to members of churches, on 2 Cor. 13: 5.

REPORTED BY W. C. STONE.

"Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?"

This text assumes that where true faith is there is Christ; and again, that if he is in us we know it, the witness being our own consciences. Now, there are many professors who take the sign of conviction of wrong for an evidence of being right; therefore they say, if they feel that they are sinners, it si good encouragement, and so they remain in that state. But the question,—am I like Christ in my walk? (each can put the answer for himself,) do I find that my temper, spirit and manner is like Him? Again, do others see Christ in me? what reason have I to believe that they see Him in me? If I should go anywhere, would others learn Christ by my example? Do I think my wife or my children would believe He was in me? Am I truly honest in making my profession, and keeping up an appearance of being like Jesus Christ? Do I use His name in vain? Do I use my time in vain? Do I use my property in vain? Am I honest with men, according to God's rule? Am I honest to my own interests as regards my own salvation? Am I honest with the church? Do I fear to look at my own character, and do I fear to look in the Bible to see what my character must be? Do I preach to others what I do not practice? If so, I am a hypocrite—I am utterly dishonest.

Am I seriously devoted to Christ? Is it the great object of my life? If so, Christ is in me. Is my heart so attached to Christ that it is a spontaneous thing with me to do for him, to love him; or, in other words, is it my meat and drink to do His will? Is it our life, our joy? Is it a personal experience? Is it the law of my will to serve Him, or is it only by spontaneous emotions that I serve Him? Am I so devoted to Christ that I love to do His requirements, or am I in the world, in its vanities? Can I go to parties of pleasure, and become so mixed in with their spirit that my prayers cannot be felt? What kind of reading do I like best? Is my mind satisfied with other books, and the Bible excepted? Can I find delight in them? Is the subject of my religion what I most love? Do I look after the lame and poor, to see if they are comfortable, or are my sympathies with the rich? Are my sympathies with those who need them? Am I anxious to get the poor out to hear the gospel preached? Do I as Christ would do in my position? Do I use time, do I use my property as He would do? or am I hoarding up as I know He would not? Am I using my influence for Christ? In fact, do I find in me a disposition to be utterly used for Christ? Is the end for which I live the same as His? (There is a certainty about this matter of our being in Christ, and He in us.)

Again. Am I peculiar? Am I zealous to do good to others? Is it, that you only have need to ask me, for I am zealous? If I had more of such religion as I now have, would I be any better than I am now? Has any one been converted to Christ by me? If all christians were like me, would they be hated for their devotion to Christ, or am I so unlike the world that they hate me? Is Christ the supreme attraction of my mind? Is He the Lover of my soul, so that He and I are one? The relation of husband and wife is thus likened by Paul: "For no man ever hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it; even so, the Lord the church. For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church." Have I the same spirit? Is my heart bound up in His interests? Have I renounced the world? Do I look to the world for sympathy? Have I lost my interests in them, and they in me? crucified to the world, and the world crucified to me? If I am a trader, do I find at my counter a desire to be eager for a trade, to take advantage and get more for a thing than I would be willing to give? or do I desire to be honest, to deal with a stranger as with a brother? or does the temptation come up to say, "Oh! that is another thing, he is a stranger?" Am I ambitious to make all mankind as my family? Do I find it hard to pray for my enemies? Is it a fixed purpose in me to avoid sin? Would I as soon avoid a small sin as a large one? Am I a good example to the world, in the use of property, to do good? As a minister of Christ am I a good example? As a deacon, or any other professor, am I a good example before others, so that they may see what Christianity is by my works?

Again; am I the light to the world, so that those that see me can read the epistle of a true follower of Christ? Am I meek or boisterous? Am I lowly in heart? Would I be ashamed to be asked to have Him and his fishermen come to dinner? Am I liberal as a christian must be, or do I walk in a vain show? Have I a lie in my right hand? Is it, that "a deceived heart hath turned him aside?" Do the church see in me an ornament, a pillar? Am I always in my place in prayer meeting? Has the minister found my instrumentality good to aid and advance the cause of Christ? Question, whether if now I was told that my last hour had come, and I, what I profess to be, would it be the spontaneous reply with me—"I am ready?" or would there be something wanting? Has conviction been taken for conversion? MARK WHAT I SAY. Is that all you know about it? Really, am I a new creature? or am I merely modified over? or am I in the bottom of my soul changed? or am I a nuisance in the church? Now, are not these plain questions, and which we must answer in a short time? Where is the lack? It is in the individual membership. If Christ is not in me, I am a lost sinner. Therefore, "examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith."

The discourse of which the above is an abstract, was listened to by myself with intense interest. Its prominent feature being self examination, the subject necessarily was forced home upon the heart of the christian hearer, who could but look into his own heart's recesses, and solemnly inquire, am I thine, Lord? or does my heart deceive me? It was a season of great profit—a time to learn that greatest lesson—"know thyself." It is such instruction, such presentation of the truth, devotion to Jesus, and complete conformity to his divine will, that the church at the present so much need. A lack of all this—unfaithfulness in the pulpit and at the altar, may explain the general complaint everywhere sounding in our ears: "O my leanness, my leanness!" May God grant us more of the preaching of the pure gospel—salvation from sin, and redemption through the name and blood of the Redeemer! M.

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

From Bro. J. P. Cowles.

Bro. Grant:—A few days since I received No. 72 of the World's Crisis. From articles in the editorial columns, I judged it was forwarded from the office of publication. With pleasure I read the contribution of those, who in former days were my familiar associates; with whom I have spent many a pleasant and profitable hour. It was to me a rich treat to peruse their communications to the Crisis.

A few years work wonderful changes. A short time ago, you and myself abode in the same village, in our own native State, Conn. Then and there we were often in company, with others of like precious faith. After I left my business to proclaim the eternal truth of Jehovah God, I often drove my faithful steed from a preaching tour, into the village of Winsted, with a scanty pittance in my pocket, still less in my stomach, but I feared nothing, for I knew that at Bro. Grant's was a welcome home for the weary pilgrim. These times I often bring to remembrance, and that, too, with a grateful heart. But times and events have changed. I left for the west, you for the east. I am among the mountains of Del. Co., N. Y., (where dwell wolves, wild-cats, deer, black bears, and other wild animals uncommon to our native State,) bearing testimony to the truth. Since taking up my residence in this State, (three years ago,) I have proclaimed the truth in six counties, covering an area of territory as large as the state of Conn. I have been persecuted by the different sects above measure, even to a malicious charge of a State's Prison offence, and placed under bonds for the same. But thank God, he that was for me, was more than all who were against me, so that by the help of God, I continue unto the present time, witnessing both to small and great, the truths which pertain to their eternal welfare.

Notwithstanding these hardships, I have had joy; for I have seen the sinner turning unto God, and those of various faiths acknowledging the truth and adapting their lives thereunto. Still another joy has been mine. I have embraced a first-born child. The fact has been realized that I was a father. O! what a realization of pleasure, and responsibility. I have witnessed a mother's love as manifested in my wife. But ah! this life's but a dream—an empty show. . . . I left home to herald the truth. A few nights after, I put up at a friend's, thirty-two miles from my residence. I had retired to rest, and was quietly sleeping, when, at eleven o'clock a man stood by my bed. I looked upon him; his countenance was familiar. What could have brought him to me at this time of night? my thoughts were hurried, my wife must be sick. He spoke—"I have come after you." I started up, and asked, "why? What's the matter?" Again he spoke. "Your child is dead!" . . . Before day-break my faithful pony had borne me to my home, there to witness the fact of the sad tale. Our child, our only child is dead! Sweet babe! Her days were few, numbering only twenty-nine. We mourn indeed. Our souls with heavy grief are bowed. Our tears have fallen fast. But we can smile out from under them in view of the promises of God.

We believe that Jesus died, and rose again, by which means he obtained the keys of death and hell; and in his own good time will unlock the graves of his sleeping lambs, and call them forth to life immortal. O, blessed, glorious hope! With this hope, while mourning, we have often cried, in the kingdom we'll meet our darling child.

But we must not stop to dwell upon these scenes. We have important duties to perform. A world in sin, fast approaching the judgment, calls for action on the part of the children of God. Then, Bro. Grant,

If sorrow's gate be opened wide,
And on us pour a flood;
Should hopes we cherish, withered lie,
E'er they begin to bud;
Should clouds upon our pathway loom,
And all seem dark and drear—
Our motto in that hour should be,
Look up, and persevere!

Your Bro. in love, J. P. Cowles.

P. S. I should be happy to receive letters from any of the Brn. at my address, Griffin's Corner, Del. Co., N. Y.

How to Make Sleep Refreshing.

1. Take sufficient exercise in the open air during the day.
2. Eat light suppers, always two or three hours before retiring.
3. Avoid tea and coffee, and all unnatural stimulants.
4. Retire early. All animals, except those that prowl all night, retire to rest soon after the sun goes down. The early hours of sleep are the most sweet and refreshing.
5. Eschew feather beds; sleep on hair or cotton mattresses with a light covering of bed clothes.
6. Be sure and have your room well ventilated.—Golden Rule.

Philosophy of Drowning.—Man is the only animal that drowns naturally. He does so because he is endowed with reason; that is to say, with a large spherical brain with a skull on it, which rises above his nose. If he falls into deep water, in spite of his great brain, he has not presence of mind enough to put his nose out and keep it out, as he might easily do, but lets his heavy head, like a stone, press his head under water. In this position he inhales, and fills his chest with water, so that he becomes, on the whole, so much heavier than water as to sink. While the lungs are filled with air, the body is lighter than its bulk of water, and of course swims, just as an iron vessel does. All, therefore, which is necessary to keep a person from drowing in deep water, is to keep the water out of the lungs.

Do you ask how this is to be done? Suppose yourself a bottle. Your nose is the nozzle, and must be kept out of water. If it goes under, do not breathe at all till it comes out. Then to prevent it going down again, keep every other part under—head, legs, arms, all under water, except your nose. Do that, and you cannot sink in any depth of water. All you need do to secure this, is to clasp your hands behind your back, and point your nose at the top of the heavens, and keep perfectly still. Your nose will not go under water unless you raise your brain, hand, head, knee, or foot, higher than it. Keep still, with your nose turned up in perfect impudence, and you are safe.

This will do in tolerable still water. In boisterous water you will need a little of the art of swimming.

A Remarkable Case.—Dr. Jacob Bigelow of this city, communicates to the Medical and Surgical Journal the particulars of a remarkable case that has been under his care for the last twenty years. The patient is a lady 79 years of age, who at the age of 39 or 40 experienced a severe fever, on recovering from which she found herself unable to retain either food or liquid upon the stomach in any considerable quantity. During the whole forty years she has never retained a meal but has vomited regularly at least three times a day. The vomiting is easy, and without pain or effort. She takes her food with relish, and in most instances throws it off quickly, being often obliged to leave the table abruptly for that purpose. Her daughter retains about one-fourth of her food. She has led an active life, in the enjoyment of a competent degree of health, except an occasional attack of acute disease. She is still in fair health, and has made a journey of a hundred miles within a few months. Her appearance, spirits and bearing are those of a person who has been benefitted, rather than injured, by the smallness of the nutriment left for her support.

Immortality.—Why is it that the rainbow and the cloud come over us with a beauty that is not of earth and then pass away, and leave us to muse on their faded loveliness? Why is it that the stars, which hold their festival around the midnight throne, are placed above the reach of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And why is it that bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view, and then taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of affection to flow back in Alpine torrents upon our heart? We are born for a higher destiny than that of earth. There is a realm where the rainbow never fades, where the stars will be set out before us like islands that slumber on the ocean, and where the beautiful being that passes before us like a meteor, will stay in our presence forever.—Prentice.

If we would give ourselves one half an hour's reflection at the close of every day, we would preach to ourselves several of the best sermons that could be uttered every week.

The essential inherence of self-denial in the christian system, is a doctrine that has faded, or appears to be fading from the consciousness of the church.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION
TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

LIFE IS A DREAM.

Life's a fairy dream,
  Gliding swift away,
Like the silver stream
  Bound for ocean's bay.

Images e'er bright,
  Gild its morning's prime,
Like the gems of light
  Found in India's clime.

Yet alas! they fade,
  Like a shadow fair,
Which is quickly made
  To dissolve in air

Life's a checkered scene,
  Though but brief its days;
Hopes and fears between,
  Cloud its brightest rays.

Like the clouds of morn
  Is its short career;
Like the notes of song,
  Steals away each year.

Life's a winter's day,
  Soon its course is run;
Bright its noontide ray—
  Night obscures its sun.

Like a vision past,
  Like a tale that's o'er,
Soon the die is cast,
  And life, is no more.

Sanctification,

AS CONNECTED WITH THE COMING OF THE LORD;
—OR—
THE APOSTLE PAUL'S EARNEST PRAYER.

BY H. P. SIKES.

No. II.

2. I next notice the language, "preserved blameless," &c. The apostle here breathes forth the most ardent prayer, that his brethren, having become "wholly sanctified," would continue entirely the Lord's. Says he, "I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." This comprehends the whole man. He most emphatically begs them to repeatedly and constantly dedicate their entire being to God, everything, soul, body, and spirit, all they have and are; not for once, or twice, or thrice merely, but that they would unceasingly and without any intermission, continue to "walk with God" until their work should be accomplished, faith swallowed up in sight, and the great jubilee trump should sound, which is to usher in the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Perhaps we may regard this particularizing of the Apostle something in the following light. The spirit is the living principle, or that which gives life. The spirit, or breath and body, both together constitute the soul. So, the term soul seems to be generally used in the Bible. Thus, when man was created: "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Gen. 2: 7. "All the souls of the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were threescore and ten." Gen. 46: 27. So in a multitude of passages. The term "body," needs no comment. But the foregoing distinction may to some appear fanciful. Receive, or reject it, as you deem fit.

How sweet and blessed, how peaceful and heavenly is such a state! "PRESERVED BLAMELESS!" O charming, delightful sound! Pure, and without fault. What a privilege for a lost, depraved mortal! How far removed from the low-grounded pursuits of the man of this world! But this high attainment is not retained without incessant prayer and watchfulness. We must guard every nook and corner of our hearts, and that continually. We must be constantly at our post, and be ready at any moment to give battle to the enemy of all righteousness, and resist all his temptations, however specious, or insidious. We must ever be ready to do every duty, bear every cross, and suffer every persecution, reproach, or shame, that the Lord either requires us to do, or suffers our adversaries to heap upon us. We must be willing, also, to bear any trial whatever that the Lord permits to come upon us, feeling the utmost confidence in the care of a loving, watchful Redeemer; that he will in no wise suffer the least trial to fall upon us above what is for our good; but, "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him."

All this must be performed, or we cannot be "blameless." Surely, here is work enough! Yes, it is too much for us to be able to perform in our own strength. Relying upon ourselves, we should fall at the very first breath of temptation, the slightest trial, cross, or persecution. We could never do the smallest duty, perform the minutest act, acceptably to our Heavenly Father. But, glory be to God, a way has been provided. All our wants, our weakness, our imbecility,—all are completely met in Jesus Christ. He is our advocate, our defender, our strength, our Redeemer, our all. Yea, he is our very life. It is he that conquers our enemies and gives us the victory, or we should not for a single moment remain pure and spotless, nor could we ever become so. The way, then, for us to continue in a sanctified state, and live acceptably to God, is for us unremittingly to look for strength to Him, in whom alone our strength lies. We must rely continually on our all-powerful Savior, as though he were ever by our side, strengthening, defending, and conquering for us. While we are thus united to Christ, we can no sooner sink than the Almighty himself would sink! We can no sooner be overcome, than would He who has himself overcome—He who once voluntarily placed himself as a mark to be shot at by wicked men and devils, all combined, and triumphantly conquered them all! While faith in Christ maintains her grasp, we stand. If we look away from Christ, and begin to look at the difficulties that lie in our path, as Peter did at the waves; or, if we look any where else but to Christ, we fall. Says the apostle, "now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Then, if we have faith, the substance—the victory—we have already overcome, or rather JESUS has overcome for us. Faith is all the requisite. If we fall, it is simply for the want of it; for, if we have it, the Omnipotent power, or strength of the Almighty, is in some sense our own. When we are enabled to exercise faith, at that very moment our covenant-keeping God lays underneath us the "Everlasting Arms," and lifts us above any and all the shafts of temptation, which wicked men or devils may send against us. Now, this faith is a relying upon Christ, expecting he will deliver us out of all temptation, keen and trying as it may be, according to his many promises.

Some of these promises I propose to notice. 1 Cor. 10: 13,—"There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." Here, we have an assurance of our Father's tender care over us and solicitude in our welfare. How attentively he watches over us in the moment of temptation! Like as he tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, so he tempers temptation to our ability to sustain it. Our tempters, "the world, the flesh, and the devil," though they may seem insurmountable, yet they are held in check, and can try, torment, and tempt us, only as they are wisely permitted by our kind and tender Heavenly Father. Wicked men may threaten, and boast themselves never so much; they may endeavor, by contempt, ridicule, threats, or feigned tenderness, to make us neglect our duty, and prevent our close "walk with God," but it is entirely out of their power to do us any real harm, for He that is higher than the highest holds them as with a "hook in their jaws." Thus, David declares in Ps. 76: 10,—"Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." The Bible abounds with passages much like the above.

The next text which I notice, in which God promises, or if I may so say, pledges himself to sustain and deliver us in the time of temptation, is found in Rom. 14: 4,—"Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth; yea, he shall be holden up; for God is able to make him stand." Again, Heb. 2: 18,—"For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." Sweet words! Fellow christian, neither you, nor I, nor any of the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, can ever be called to endure such fierce and long continued assaults of Satan as our Master endured. Consider the furious onslaught of the arch Enemy of forty days continuance, during all which time he continued fasting; his struggle with our common enemy being so dreadfully severe as probably to preclude his natural appetite for food. But he was triumphant. Satan was obliged to succumb, and yield to Jesus as his conqueror! Such a Savior as this, promises to come to your rescue whenever you are tempted! And can you sink? Can you be overcome? If you are, it is because you will be, rather than ask for help. He stands ready and waiting to deliver, if you will but apply to him for aid. 'Tis only "look and live." "Ask, and ye shall receive." Think not that he takes little notice of you. So far from this, he is intensely interested in your case. He sees your sharp conflict, and stands anxiously waiting to deliver you. And he is abundantly able to hold you up, and give you the victory, however keen may be your trial or temptation. He declares, "all power is given unto me, in heaven and in earth."

But I notice another promise. In Isa. 49: 15, we find this language: "can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee." As if God would secure the confidence of his people by showing the utter impossibility that he should be unmindful of their wants, he refers to an act, which every one knows to be unnatural and abominable—the detestable conduct of a mother towards her own offspring, which no one who bears the name would ever be guilty of, except such as are below a level even with the brutes. Again, says David in Ps. 125: 1, "they that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever." Truly,

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent
  Word."

Yes, from the whole tenor of Inspiration, the compassionate character of God, and the tender gushing love of our dear Redeemer, we might look for support in the hour of trial, reasoning as did Paul, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" If Jesus so loved us when we were enemies and using all our power to rebel and "tread him under foot," if he could voluntarily stoop so low, and finally give himself up to the death of a malefactor upon the cross, and all this in return for the most violent hatred, what may we not expect from a Savior of such boundless love and tenderness, when our natures have been tamed down to that of a lamb: when we have been transformed from children of the devil to children of God—Christ's own loving brethren and sisters, whom he sees struggling with a common enemy, through love and obedience to himself?

And he has set "us an example that we should follow his steps." He is our pattern. Was Jesus hated and despised? So may we expect to be. Was he singular, wandering about from place to place, with twelve rude, ignorant fishermen; going through lots, and corn fields, a gazing stock to community, walking back and forth, amid a collection of people, like a dumb man, (Jno. 10: 23,) intent only on doing the will of God? So must we be willing to be peculiar. Was he poor in the things of this world? So must we be willing to have our lot cast in the deepest shades of poverty, if such be the will of the Lord. Was he tempted by the devil? We should "count it all joy when we fall into temptation." Did he refuse the honor of the world, and applause of men? (John 5: 41, 6: 15,) so should we refuse it; or, if men are resolved to put it upon us, we in our turn should give it again to God, to whom all praise and honor belong. Was he exceedingly temperate, and plain in his diet? So should we only eat to support life and health, in order that we may be qualified to do the will of God; and on no occasion descend to the mere indulgence of appetite. Was he plain in his dress? so should we be; and never be guilty of the folly and wickedness of decorating these poor, mortal, corruptible bodies, or trying to array them with a view to please the eye, or to gain the notice of our fellow worms. Did Jesus spend his life in doing good to others? so should it be our main business, next to honoring God, to do good to others, our fellow men, thereby securing our own highest good. Was he free from selfishness, or self-seeking? so must we be willing to sacrifice our own interest for the benefit of others. Was it more than meat and drink to him to do the will of God? so should it also be to us. Had he a yearning compassion, tenderness, and love to mankind? we must possess such a feeling also. Did he exercise a spirit of forgiveness towards his enemies? we too must forgive the deepest insult, the greatest injury, or we cannot ourselves receive forgiveness. Was he willing to humble himself to the very lowest place among men? we too must be willing to take the lowest place, to be looked down upon, and as it were trod upon, by our fellow men.

Then, if we are like him in this world, we shall be forever like him in the world to come. We shall be owned as his, when he comes to "make up his jewels." "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." "To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." We shall have shared in his humiliation, we shall then share in his exaltation. No more temptation, no more sorrow, no more care, no more poverty, no more crucifying of the flesh, nor watchfulness against sin. These things are all past, and past forever. Though our discipline in the school of Christ may have been severe, yet our education is now complete. The warfare is ended, and the soldier discharged. The sweet welcome and approbation—"well done, good and faithful servant," "come ye blessed of my Father," &c., will make up for all. And O, the songs, the rejoicings of those who "have gotten the victory!" Our minds, so carnal, so earthly, can form little conception of the glory then to be revealed! Nay, the carnal eye, accustomed to look upon the fallen world, a world groaning beneath the curse of Jehovah, is all in the dark here. Such an one may suppose himself to understand concerning the nature of the inheritance promised to Abraham, but alas! he is dreadfully deceived! he needs to be enlightened by the possession of the faith of Abraham. This is the heavenly "eyesalve," with which the eyes of our understanding must be "anointed." Here is the key—faith which "works by love, and purifies the heart." We know both the willingness and the ability of Him who has undertaken our cause, to procure for us the utmost stretch of blessedness and felicity of which our immortal powers will be capable. He has already made known to us his intense desire to do so, by showing us the strength of his matchless, unbounded love—a spectacle which astonished angels, and may well astonish men! He assures us, too, of his ability to bestow all this upon us, declaring, "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Will he not then make us as blessed, and as happy as we can possibly be made, after he has taken such infinite pains to give us a pledge of it. Nothing but the most soul-damning unbelief can doubt that he will. Ah, what tongue can tell, what imagination can paint the glories in reserve for the righteous? The earth blooming in Eden beauty; the society of all the faithful and truly lovely, from first to last; martyrs, apostles, prophets, saints and all; the presence of our dearly beloved Savior, who has bought us all with his precious blood, and given us an entrance here; pure, disinterested, unselfish love, from each to all, and from all to each; millions of resplendent, immortal beings, all shining as the sun; the most enrapturing music, far richer and sweeter than mortals ever heard; all sickness, sorrow, pain, and death, entirely done away forever; joy unutterable, constantly filling every heart, and beaming from every countenance: these things may perhaps give us some faint idea of the blessedness in reserve for the overcomer, in God's everlasting Kingdom.

And now let me ask, my brother, my sister, are you willing to be like Jesus? I do not ask whether you are willing to profess to be his follower, neither do I ask if you are willing to have your name reckoned among the despised, but can you afford, and are you willing to lay everything at his feet? yourself, and everything else,—to take up the cross daily, hourly, momentarily, for the sake of him who has shown such unparalleled love, who has given up the glories of Heaven, undergone a life of untold reproach and suffering, and finally died as an accursed malefactor upon the cross, and all for you? Now can you not in turn give up all to him? yield your entire being into the hands of such a Savior? Can you not for his sake suffer any temptation, reproach, destitution, sickness, or trials of any kind? Is it too much—any trial too great? The keenest trial can scarce begin to compare with those which he voluntarily took upon himself, on your account. Oh, the cold-hearted selfishness of fallen, depraved human nature! How little do we experimentally know, or feel, of self-sacrificing, disinterested love! Yes, even any of us!! Let us from this hour be christians in very deed.

For the Crisis.

The Atonement.

"We also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement." Rom. 5: 11.

Inasmuch as "the carnal mind is enmity against God," the necessity of an atonement, (or, at-one-ment,) is apparent. By some wise scheme, a reconciliation must be effected; and since "without the shedding of blood there is no remission," it follows that a sacrifice must be slain by virtue of which a reconciliation may be attained, or an atonement made for the sinner. But what sacrifice has God provided for this purpose? This is the point to be settled.

1. In the Mosaic dispensation, a lamb was slain, typical of "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," to be slain as a sacrifice on Calvary. Well, how much of the typical lamb was slain as a sacrifice? A part of it merely, or the whole of it? You correctly answer, the whole. But how much of the antitypical Lamb must be slain—the Lamb which God prepares for a sacrifice? Obviously the WHOLE, not an abstract part merely, as mistaken theologians teach. God does not make a mock of the matter when he furnishes a lamb for the sacrifice. If He furnishes a whole lamb, it will be thus sacrificed! Hence the prophet testifies, in portraying the death of Christ, "Thou shalt make His SOUL an offering (oshom, a trespass-offering) for sin." And again; "He hath poured out His soul unto death." Isa. 53: 10–12.

2. This sacrifice is a divine sacrifice; something more than humanity died. If a human sacrifice would have been enough, Enoch, or Elijah would have sufficed. But the son of man would not answer alone; the Son of God is required. Yes, even He who "was once rich, and became poor, that we through His poverty might become rich," DIED; even He who said to the Father, "glorify me with the glory which I had with thee before the world was", was CRUCIFIED; even He who said to the Jews, "before Abraham was, I am," EXPIRED ON CALVARY; even He who said, "what and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before," LAID DOWN HIS LIFE. O! what condescension upon the part of Christ to leave an angel home, to leave "riches, to leave "glory" to die for sinful man! What wisdom and benevolence upon the part of the Father to prepare such a sacrifice!!

3. But how was it possible that the Son of God, who was superior to undying angels, should actually die? Well, this would have been impossible if He had retained his former state; but He "was made a little lower than the angels FOR the suffering of DEATH." Heb. 2: 9. He took this step for the purpose of rendering Himself capable of dying. Humanity and Divinity were blended; hence, it is said, 'a body hast thou prepared me." Thus blended, He was both the Son of God, and the Son of David; and as such He died. He died not only as the Son of David, but also as the Son of God! To illustrate: suppose a law is enacted that every Jew in Great Britain be put to death. Here is a man who is half Jew, and half English. How can the Jew be put to death unless the Englishman dies too? So with blended Divinity and humanity: they die and are resurrected together, having become one, no more to be separated.

Here is unfolded untold wisdom. A Divine Sacrifice has been slain to effect an atonement for man. The once exalted Son of God, who was ever above the angels in riches and glory, comes to earth and is blended with humanity, taking upon himself the seed of Abraham, "for the suffering of death."

"O! for this love let rocks and hills,
  Their lasting silence break;
And all harmonious human tongues,
  The Savior's praises speak."

OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

1. In opposing this great truth, the question is propounded,—"If God died, who upheld the world during His death?" This question betrays a misunderstanding of our sentiment; for we do not believe that the ever living God, the Father, died; but the Son of God. Says the apostle, "when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His SON;" (Rom. 5: 10,) and again, "Christ died for the ungodly." Jesus testifies, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten SON," &c., John 3: 16.

2. It is claimed that Christ's soul went to Paradise on the day of His crucifixion, and therefore could not have died. This argument is founded upon a misunderstanding of Luke 23: 43; "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." It is abundantly evident that Christ did not here teach His exit to heaven, from several positive facts. After His resurrection, He made this emphatic declaration to Mary; "I am NOT YET ASCENDED to my Father." John 20: 17. This plain statement from Christ's own lips, proves that He did not go to Paradise before His resurrection. It harmonizes with the declaration that He "poured out His soul unto DEATH,"—not unto the gates of Paradise! But, inquires the reader, does not this testimony conflict with Christ's statement upon the cross? I answer, it flicts with the construction which you have put upon it, proving that you have not correctly understood his language. Now let us examine the case. What called forth this remark from the Savior? It was a reply to the penitent thief's petition, which is recorded in the preceding verse. What was that petition? It was not, "Lord, remember me when thou goest into heaven." It was not, "remember me when thou goest up to Paradise." It was not, "remember me when thou GOEST into thy kingdom." But what was it? It was simply this: "Lord, remember me when thou COMEST into thy kingdom." But why present such a request? Obviously because he had heard the Savior teach the establishment of His kingdom upon the earth, at His second coming. Before Pilate's tribunal he had heard Jesus accused of claiming to be a king; he had heard Jesus explain the matter by saying: "My kingdom is not of this world, (or age,) . . . my kingdom is not from hence:" (John 18: 36.) that is, not from this time onward. He had also heard Jesus say, "HEREAFTER shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and COMING in the clouds of heaven." Matt. 26: 64. From this and similar lessons, as well as from the writings of the prophets, he had heard that the Messiah was to come in the clouds of heaven, to establish his kingdom upon the earth, when He is to reign upon David's throne. With these truths indellibly impressed on his mind, he witnesses the darkening of the orb of day, he hears the adamantine rocks rend, and the earth loudly quake, which convinces him that Jesus is truly the Messiah who is to reign on earth; hence he prays, "Lord, remember me when thou COMEST into thy kingdom." Jesus responds, "verily I say unto thee to-day, shalt thou be with me in Paradise," or in "my kingdom" to come, which is the same; for Paradise will bloom in Christ's kingdom, on the new earth. See Rev. 2: 7. Rev. 22: 2. It will be seen that we place the comma after "to-day," as found in some Greek manuscripts, thus preserving a harmony between the request and the reply, and preventing a collision with the Savior's own words to Mary, "I am NOT yet ascended.

3. Another objection represents Christ's soul as going to the prison of the ungodly, and preaching to them; hence, from these premises it is claimed that Christ's soul could not have died. This idea is founded upon a wrong application of 1 Pet. 3: 18–20. "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened (or made alive) by the Spirit; by which (spirit) also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometimes were disobedient, (when did he preach to them?) when once the long-suffering of God waited IN THE DAYS OF NOAH, while the ark was a preparing." This simply teaches us that Christ was quickened, or raised from the dead, by the same spirit by which the antedeluvians were warned, or preached to through Noah. They are now in the prison of death.

Who cannot see that the two latter objections are at war with each other? Certainly if Christ's soul went to Paradise, it could not have gone to hell on a preaching tour; or if it really went to hell to hold a three days' meeting, it certainly could not have gone to Paradise! One of these objections must annihilate the other; and more than this, the Bible kills them both, leaving one fairly dead, and the other doubly dead. W. SHELDON.

For the Crisis.

From B. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—I have now been nine weeks in the Aroostook country, and I see a great destitution of light and information on the Advent of our Savior; and there is not only a willingness, but a desire to hear and learn the truth upon that subject. There is less of sectarianism here than in places where they have churches and regular ministers; here there are few churches, and fewer ministers. I have found a readiness to hear, almost everywhere, and many inquirers after truth. Several have embraced the Advent views, and want more light.

They are anxious to read books and pamphlets they see advertised in the Crisis, and would send for them, but they are almost moneyless. Here, in this new country, they are very poor and destitute. They have never had any but myself to instruct them on this subject. Three years ago I came here, staid a few weeks; on my return, I recommended brother Merriam to send the Crisis to several individuals, and he did, and the result was, many were convinced and enlightened; but since then, as they did not pay anything, the papers have been stopped, so that I don't know of but one No. of the Crisis that comes into this large county of Aroostook, 100 miles long and 50 broad. There may be others, but I don't know of them. Much good might be done by having the Crisis sent here free, and other of the Advent publications; and probably some might pay for them, others could not. Could not this case be laid before the Advent brethren, and something done for them? I barely make the suggestion. I have been among them in this neighborhood nine weeks: I have done what I could for this cause, gratis; I consecrate my life, my time, and bear my own expenses, and wish I could do more. My whole soul is in the work, I love it, I enjoy it. My health and spirits are good.

Should there be any disposition to send books or papers here, they must be directed to Presque Isle, Me., Aroostook Co.

I have traveled the whole length of this country on foot; have preached everywhere the coming and Kingdom of Jesus, the literal resurrection of the body, the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked, to very candid hearers, and there is much hope that the truth will prevail extensively.

They need living epistles also,—the living preacher, who will come more for the love of men's souls than for money; such would be well received and kindly treated, for this people are very remarkable for hospitality.

I remain yours, waiting for, praying for, and expecting the Kingdom of Jesus soon to come, BENJ. SPAULDING.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 11, 1857.

Question.

BRO. GRANT:—Your article in the Crisis of Feb. 4th, on "What is meant by the soul?" No. 2, I could not harmonize with Matt. 10: 28,—"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear Him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." You said that primarily the soul means the whole man; but it seems to me the text in Matt. makes a distinction between the soul and body. I think we have abundant testimony from Scripture that the destruction of the wicked will be their punishment. It is for your ideas upon the soul and body in the above text that I write.

Your sister, seeking for truth.

ANSWER.

"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, (psukee,) but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul (psukee.) and body in hell. In Lk. 12: 4, it reads,—"And I say unto you my friends, be not afraid of them that kill the body and after that they have no more that they can do; but I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear; fear him which after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell." In Matt. 6: 25 we read, —"Therefore I say unto you, take no thought for your life, (psukee) what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life, (psukee) more than meat, and the body than raiment?"

It will be noticed that the word rendered soul in Matt. 10: 28, and life in 6: 25, is the same. The same word is found in 1 John 3: 16.

"Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life (psukee) for us; and we ought to lay down our lives (psukee) for the brethren. Again in Acts 15: 26,—"Men that have hazarded their lives (psukee) for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." Matt. 2: 20,—"They are dead which sought the young child's life," (psukee.) In Rev. 8: 9, we find the same word applied to the animals in the sea. "And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, (psuke) died."

We might give many more examples, but these are sufficient to show the use of the word rendered soul in the passage under examination. It will be noticed that beasts have this soul (psukee) in common with men; that men hazarded these souls (lives) for Christ's sake; and that we ought to be willing to lay down our souls (lives) for the brethren. Are we to suppose that the primitive christians hazarded their immortal souls, in the common understanding of the subject, for Christ's sake? or in other words, did they put themselves in danger of eternal torment for the sake of saving others? The idea is absurd. In Matt. 16: 25, we read,—"For whosoever will save his life (psukee) shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life (psukee,) for my sake shall find it." Here we have the same word again, which is rendered soul in the next verse. Are we to understand from this scripture that we must go to hell in order to be saved, and that if we seek to save our immortal souls, we shall lose them? The obvious teaching of this passage is, that if we seek to save this present life by denying Christ, we shall lose the future one, or be destroyed in hell. We come back to Matt. 10: 28, to consider more carefully the meaning of the word soul. After a moment's thought we shall see that it does not stand for the real man, for if it does, then it will be correct to put it in the place of the word man, and address it as such, for all who claim that the soul is immortal, contend that it is the conscious part, the real entity that we name and to which we speak; that which we call David, Lazarus, Moses; and the part for which stand the pronouns he, his, him, &c.

Let us suppose that Matt. 10: 28, was spoken of David;—"Fear not them which kill the body (of David) but are not able to kill (David;) but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul (David) and (his) body in hell." Now read Acts 2: 29. "Men and brethren let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried." This was spoken some time after the scripture in Matt. 10: 28, but it cannot be true if the soul is the real man and does not die. Again, in John 11: 14, we read,—"Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." How could this be true if the soul is Lazarus, and is immortal? If Lazarus cannot die or be killed, then it is not true that he was "dead."

But the question arises, to what does the word soul refer in the verse under examination? We answer,—the future life of the man, and not the man himself. Men may take away life here, but have nothing to do with our future existence; or as Luke expresses it, they "have no more that they can do." Why? The apostle answers,—"your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." This life men cannot destroy, as it is deposited in safe hands. It is evident the apostle, in Matt. 10: 28, is speaking of the future life, because the destruction of soul (psukee, life) and body is after the judgment, and not in this world. Life is here spoken of as an attribute or principle, and not as the real man, the conscious being, for he dies, and when dead knows "not anything."

The verse we have been examining, we consider the strongest that can be produced as proof that man does not die. but when rightly understood, we think it is in perfect harmony with the great truth that the whole man dies, and remains unconscious between death and the resurrection.

Explanation.

Some who sent money a few days before the close of the last Vol. of the Crisis may not understand why the amount is charged on the first number of the new Vol. The reason is this: The wrappers are written a few days before we issue the paper, and consequently written before the receipt of the money.

Lafayette.

Our meetings in this place have resulted in the conversion of some eight or ten, and have caused backsliders to return to the Lord. For several years, things have looked discouraging here, but the people have found the Lord willing to bless them, soon as they were ready to repent.

Bro. Bellows has labored faithfully in Lafayette, but has at times been almost disheartened, when beholding the want of interest among the professed children of the Lord; but "man's extremity" has proved to be "God's opportunity." There is said to be more interest now than there has been for seven years. He baptized two last Lord's day, and others intend to follow soon. My Brn. in the ministry, let us labor more earnestly for the salvation of sinners, and I feel confident we shall see fruits from our labors in the Lord. We have but a little time left to work for Jesus. O Lord, arouse the watchmen, and fill them with thy Spirit.

Quoting Scripture.

When our correspondents quote scripture, we wish they would be particular to write it precisely word for word as it is in the Bible. If any word or words are omitted, put three or four periods in the place of them, so that all may see that a portion is left out. Never write a passage for publication without turning to it in the Bible and being sure that you have written it correctly.

To the Poor Brethren.

A Bro. from Connecticut writes;—that to his own advantage he has availed himself of the offer of Bro. Abraham Flagg, and is making sale of quite a number of the History of the late Russian War; and thinks that others may do likewise without violating righteous principles. The facts are a matter of history which is now compiled in a condensed form for future reference, and is a part of the great drama of warfare which we have looked upon as being delineated in prophetical history; a knowledge of which it is right to obtain and retain, and to scatter among those who wish to read and preserve the same.

The Extensiveness of Creation.

It is impossible for the human mind to conceive the proper idea of the immensity of creation. We call our earth, which is nearly 25,000 miles in circumference and nearly 8,000 miles in diameter, large: and to us it seems so, and is so. But what is this globe, with all of its furniture of mountains, forests, oceans, rivers, minerals, vegetables, and animated tribes, when compared with the immense mass of created matter which exists in the Creator's empire? A mere speck. A mere trifle. As we commonly contemplate the heavens, with the unassisted human vision, we behold bodies in comparison to which our globe is but a top; but when we aid our vision with the power of scientific invention, what created wonders do we behold! Worlds and systems contiguous to worlds and systems, reaching on, on, on, into the distant regions of space, comprising orbs before the magnitude of which our planet sinks into entire insignificance—and still the undefined borders of other worlds and systems are discovered—and still the dim light of other worlds and systems is faintly discerned—and the oppressed mind reels beneath its own conceivings! O how great! E. B.

For the Crisis.

"Elias which was for to come."

Was John the Baptist the Elias which was to come, or do we look for another? This question is sometimes asked at the present day, in some form or other, by those who are unsettled in faith about the events of the last portion of this dispensation. I learn that some who are looking for the Lord soon to come, expect that "Elias must first come." Perhaps it is because Dr. Cumming, of England, is looking for such a personage. This was the error the scribes taught in the days when Christ was here, and the message was going abroad that He was the Messiah. They had started the idea that a prophecy in Mal. 4: had not been fulfilled, and of course the message about Jesus being the Messiah must be false. It appears that Jesus, knowing the hearts of all men, attempted to check this error in the bud, by calling the attention of the multitudes (Matt. 11: 7–14) to John the Baptist, who was now in prison, and who entertained some doubts whether Jesus was the Messiah, and sent two disciples to ask whether he was the Christ or not. After Jesus had cited the inquirer to the things which he did, as evidence of his Messiahship, he turns to the multitude and asks them several questions, referring to John's ministry in a clear and pointed manner, to fix their attention on John, who, he says, is "more than a prophet," and then gives the reason why; "for this is he of whom it is written, behold I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. . . . For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John. And if ye will receive it, this is Elias which was for to come. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." This settles the question fully, that John the Baptist was the messenger of Malachi 3: 1, and the Elijah of Malachi 4: 5, as well as "the voice of one crying in the wilderness." Isa 40: 3. Notwithstanding his testimony of himself to "the Priests and Levites from Jerusalem," (John 1: 21,) they asked, "Art thou Elias? (or Elijah the prophet?) And he saith, I am not." By turning to the account of John's birth, and of his father Zacharias' interview with the angel of the Lord in the temple, (Luke 1: 11–17,) the angel said of John, "and many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him (the Lord) in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." Thus the angel says, he was to come in the SPIRIT and POWER of Elias. This is "the Elias which was to come." But it was not the old prophet Elias, or Elijah, looked for by the blind Jews, and some modern Judaizers. Had they asked John if he was "the Elias which was to come," he would doubtless have told them he was. It seems some of Christ's disciples fell into the same error, of not discerning the fulfillment of this prophecy in John. On the occasion of the transfiguration of Christ, when he was charging them to "tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead," "his disciples asked him, saying, why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? (Matt. 17: 9, 12.) And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things, (all things promised.) But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. . . . Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist."

The question being now fully established that John was "the Elias which was to come," the next question is, DID JOHN FULFILL HIS MISSION? It would seem to many who are well read in the scriptures, that this question was a foolish one, and that the inquirer should be "answered according to his folly." But as "old wives' fables" are yet too often received instead of truth, they should be distinguished from it, that the truth may appear.

Man is endowed with faculties which make him very serviceable to his fellow when he improves them properly, but which make him a very injurious instrumentality when his powers of mind are abused and perverted, so as to caricature the truth, whether he intends to do so or not. A quick mind, with fluent speech, may do much good or evil, according as it is directed, either by the spirit of Elijah on the one hand, or of Ishmael on the other. We should all learn the lesson which Paul refers to in Col. 2: 2, "lest any man should beguile us with enticing words," or by "a show of wisdom in will-worship and humility," or "by good words (or smart words) and fair speeches, which deceive the hearts of the simple." But to the question.

Did our God cause a prophecy to be uttered, that when Elias should come, "he SHALL turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers," or cause the angel to tell Zacharias—"and many of the children of Israel SHALL be turned unto the Lord their God; and he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, TO MAKE READY A PEOPLE PREPARED FOR THE LORD," and then not cause it to be done? Such an idea is now being eloquently asserted, and, by a system of allegories and typology, argued that John began his work, and did not finish it; that it is to be finished just prior to the second advent of our Lord, by a special message, producing apostolic union, order, and gifts. If any who see this article doubt whether John did the work he was sent to do, please read Matt. 3, and Luke 3, which passages are clear on the point. Then read John 1: 22–37, and John 3: 23–30, and it will be seen that John finished the work of "Elias that was to come," and "made ready a people prepared for the Lord." He then decreased, and his disciples followed Christ, while John was imprisoned by Herod, and then beheaded. It seems to me there is TRUTH enough to preach in these days, without vamping up John's message, to make another class of John's disciples, and another edition of the baptism of John. I. C. Holiness.

BRO. GRANT:—The subject of Holiness has dwelt upon my mind with considerable weight for some time, and I feel that I cannot conscientiously dismiss the subject from my mind, without addressing a few thoughts to my brethren in tribulation. Malcom says, to be holy, is to be pious, or religious; Webster says, holiness is perfect rectitude, hence John the Baptist was called "a just man and an holy," because he was purely religious, upright, or pious. Things that were hallowed and consecrated to divine use, were called holy: hence the holy law, holy covenant, holy Sabbath, holy gifts, holy sanctuary, holy water, holy instruments, &c. &c. It is also applied to the Trinity, to the Father, to the Son, and it is also the common epithet of the third person of the glorious Trinity. It is applied also to angels. The saints are called holy, by separation and choice, according to the Apostle Peter's testimony, which saith, "ye are (speaking of the saints) a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people," &c. By this we are to understand, that Christ's holiness or righteousness was imputed unto them, and by partaking of the holy principle of grace, whereby the soul is renewed in holiness, until it is perfected in it. The Lord saith, "be ye holy, for I am holy." And again, the Apostle Paul to the Hebrews saith,—"follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord;" or, without holiness of heart, and a corresponding rectitude of life, no man can see the Lord and be accepted of him as his humble child. Now for us to serve God acceptably here, and to dwell in "His holy Hill" hereafter, we must be pure, or free from the pollution of sin. Paul saith to the saints which were at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ, "according as he (Christ) hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we (saints) should be holy and without blame before him in love."

Again, the same Apostle declares to the christians at Colosse, saying; "you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy, and unblamable, and unreprovable, in his sight." O! what condescension! what meekness! what humility! and what unbounded love is manifested by the Lord Jesus Christ to his weak, imperfect, sinful, dependent children! O! "what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we might be called (not the sons of the Baptist, nor the sons of the Methodist, nor the sons of the Orthodox, nor the sons of the Adventist, but) the sons of God!" And with my present views and impressions, had I ten thousand tongues, I could heartily employ them all in praising, honoring, and glorifying God forever, for his unspeakable gift! O, brethren and sisters, "let love be without dissimulation." God requires us to be holy; yet the Prophet Samuel declares, that 'there is none holy as the Lord." He is said by another to be "glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders." Now, as the law of God is holy, and the commandment holy, just and good; so in our obedience to Christ, we are required to present our "bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."

Holiness is much talked about, but little lived up to as God requires. Jesus Christ so loved his church, that he gave himself for it, "that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy, and without blemish." Oh! what a beautiful church that will be! How exalted its position! How full its joy! and how unending its pleasures! Shall I be numbered with the truly blessed? The word of the Lord comes back again to me with redoubled force,—"and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."

Holiness is attainable, else it would not be required of us. David says, that "holiness becometh thine house, (or church) O Lord, forever." Paul exhorts the saints at Rome to "yield their members servants to righteousness unto holiness." And again he saith, "let your fruit be unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." The same great Apostle, when preaching to the Corinthian church, and exhorting them to purity of life, said, "Come out from among them, (that is, unbelievors and the ungodly, whether in the professed church, or out of it,) and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; (that is, the spirit and practice of the world,) and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Now it does seem to me, dear brethren, that if we wish to be "partakers of his holiness," we must serve him in faith, love, holiness and sobriety, until the Messiah comes. Amen.

Yours in earnest desires for holiness,

P. Tandy.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. I. Achorn writes from Washington, Me.:—"I still look for and love the coming of Jesus. I think sometimes I feel as Mary did when she went away to the sepulchre; she had been disappointed, and thus it is with me. And so,

'There's nothing round this gloomy earth,
Can fill my large desire;
The happiness that I approve,
Lies not within its power.'

I am often made glad by the blessed instructions from the word, and my good paper, which helps me understand the truth. May the writers be blest of God in this world, and in that to come with eternal life."

—:o:—

Bro. E. G. Hayden writes from Otis, Mass.:—"There are a few in Otis who are not sleeping, but looking and waiting for the king to come in his glory It cheers my heart to think we are almost home. The Crisis is a welcome visitor to me.

Brn. and Srs. in Christ, do not give up your hope, for the promise is sure; yes, we soon shall have the promised inheritance. Glory to God, the prospect of our speedy redemption grows brighter. I believe that we are almost up to the Judgment. I am thankful that I was ever aroused by the cry, 'behold the Bridegroom cometh,' and rejoice that still I am found among the despised ones whose names are cast out as evil and everywhere spoken against. But Christ says, 'I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.'

'How sweet the christian's hope to me,
While here I'm called to roam;
It points me to a better land,
That I may call my home.'"

—:o:—

Sr. M. T. Taylor writes from Dorchester, Mass.:—"One thing I feel assured of, and that is, that the Lord is very good and kind to us all. For his goodness and wonderful works are all around us, and I feel to praise Him; 'Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord.' Oh! that all that love Him might feel to say,—'although He slay me, yet will I trust in Him.' Yes, He is worthy to be trusted and worthy to be praised. In Him all fullness dwells. He has a supply sufficient for all our needs, and why should we not put confidence in Him and trust Him as long as we live. We have the promise that all things shall work together for good to those who love God. Then let us love Him with our whole heart, endeavoring by His help to fulfill the great obligations we are under to our Maker, and to each other. Dear Brn. and Srs., let us hold on by faith to the Son of God, and press our way onward a little longer, for it is but a little while we have to remain here; let us improve on the same.

May the good Lord help us to serve Him faithfully and glorify His name. Let us look to Him continually for forgiveness for all sins and errors, and for assistance and wisdom to be kept right at all times; for we must bear in mind that we are weak and ignorant, and can do nothing right without His help."

—:o:—

Sr. L. Meeker writes from Granville, M. T.:—"We are here in this distant country destitute of the many privileges which most of you enjoy. The Bible and Crisis are my only sources of comfort or consolation. In this gloomy world of sin and sorrow, where trials increase on every hand, and draw our minds off from all created good, I would not be without the blessed hope of having an inheritance in a better world than this. And I do hope the day is not far distant when we may all meet where there will be no more parting, sorrowing or sighing. I hail with joy every appearance of the near approach of that day that will be so glorious to those who are counted worthy. Shall I have a part with the ransomed host? Lord grant it, is the constant desire of my heart; for this I am striving to overcome this world with all its temptations. Brethren, be strong in the Lord, be faithful, and pray for unworthy me, that I with the rest of you may have a right to the tree of Life. It did cheer my heart to know that Bro. Sheldon was in this Territory sounding the alarm. I pray the Lord may send him or some other one of his servants this way."

—:o:—

Bro. W. C. Clark writes from Portland, Me.:—"I am happy in the Lord while anticipating the bright prospect of the future, feeling assured of the immutability of God's promise. My hope is confirmed amid the perils of these last days. The majority of mankind are willingly going down to destruction. Their minds being wholly engrossed in the things of the world, and suffering the duties, cares, and pleasures of this life to overcharge their mind, have forgotten the design of Omnipotence in their creation; hence their destruction. Few of the professed righteous are yielding their hearts and wills to the purpose of God; complying with his immutable Word, and drawing divine consolation therefrom. What a contrast is there between a worldling and a christian, a saint and a sinner! The one's mind and treasure is in this world; the other's in the world to come. The first, his treasure being here, employs all his ability to increase it; the second having his in heaven, is striving to lay up a good foundation against the time to come; for he, as a wise man, foresees the evil, and hideth himself; while the other passes on and is punished.

Notwithstanding the many difficulties we have to pass through, the great amount of tribulation and sorrow we meet with, we have, as a shining light in a dark place, this blessed consolation,—'be of good cheer, I have overcome the world.' In that He overcame, he puts a sword in our hands, which, if wielded well, will secure us victory. I think I can say with David, 'O how love I thy Law! it is my meditation all the day.' How sweet are thy words to my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth.' O, I am glad in God my Savior, that I heard the call to the Marriage Supper. Praises, and thanks be to His name, my fe t have been taken out of an horrible pit and placed on a rock,-and my going established. I am trying to serve the Lord, not in my way, but in his; though imperfect in judgment and wisdom, yet following his unerring counsel, I trust I am accepted in the Beloved who is the head of the cherch.

Obituary.

Died in Middlefield, Feb. 7th, after an illness of six days, Irene Clarissa, daughter of Charles C. and Mary E. West, aged 4 years and 10 months.

She was a child of much promise, gentle and affectionate, and of an uncommonly sensitive and retiring disposition. She was easily affected with the grief of others, and her childish tears would flow at any tale of sorrow. She was not fitted to buffet with the cold storms of a long life, or bear the chill breath of the unfeeling world. She now rests in an early grave, but Christ will bring her again from the land of the enemy and clothe her with immortality. We feel deeply afflicted in the loss of our little one. But we rejoice in Him who is the "resurrection and the life," and are looking for him to appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

That fragile form, low in the tomb's extended,
Dimm'd those bright eyes, and still'd the fleeting breath;
Alas! her sojourn here on earth is ended,—
The music of that voice is hushed in death.
No more her laugh, so sweet and clearly swelling,
In joyous strains shall greet our list'ning ear;
No more her presence glad our peaceful dwelling,
Our cares to soften, and our hearts to cheer.

Oft is our path o'ercast with grief and sadness,
As on we journey to the silent tomb;
And hearts that beat to-day with joy and gladness,
May be to-morrow overwhelmed with gloom.
'Tis meet to weep! yet while these tears are flowing
For her who sleeps so early in the grave,
May we see through the darkness sweetly gleaming,
The power of Him whose mighty arm shall save.

He soon shall come, yet while he is descending,
The sleepers in their graves will hear his voice,
And will come forth with songs of joy unending,
And in his Kingdom evermore rejoice.

F. E. Bliss.

East Lee, Feb. 25, '57.

Died at Chester Factories, Mass., Feb. 24th, '57, Hannah Eliza, youngest daughter of William and Lois Twiss, aged 3 years, 9 months and 6 days.

Hannah was taken Saturday night, the 21st inst., with the croup, from which she suffered intensely, though conscious till within the last half hour of her death. While alive she was her father's idol and her mother's darling; her prattling voice was music to their ears. She was one of those uncommon children that cannot be expected to live long; hence, death, the cruel monster, must lay his icy hands upon her. O death! she soon will be thy conqueror. O grave! she will bloom again, a little cherub in the Kingdom of God.

Fare-thee-well my father, mother,
Farewell brothers, sisters, dear;
While you round my coffin hover,
Let not drop a single tear!

Weep not o'er me, for I am now
Beyond the power of pain;
Look up in faith, and meekly bow,—
Sweet Hannah shall live again!

The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Charles Goodrich, from Mark 10: 14,—"Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of God."

May the prayers and sympathies of those who have been called to drink from the bitter cup, be extended to these afflicted friends. Amen.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.
ARRIVAL OF THE ATLANTIC.

New York, March 5.

The Collins steamship Atlantic, from Liverpool afternoon of 18th ult., reached her dock at this port about 7 o'clock this evening.

France.—On the 16th, the Emperor opened the Legislature with a speech from the Throne, amidst great pomp and enthusiasm. The Emperor referred to the peaceful solution of the recent difficulties amongst various European powers, and, considering that the best understanding now prevails between all the great powers, thinks the time auspicious to endeavor seriously to regulate and develope the strength and riches of the Nation at home. He rejoices over the prosperous condition of the country, as evinced by the largely increasing revenue; reports the suffering caused by deficient crops and recent inundations; says expenditures are to be reduced, and the war tax abolished from January next; the annual army contingent fixed at 100,000 men; says application is made for a transatlantic line of steamers; and after referring to sundry local topics, winds up with a panegyric upon the state of the Empire.

Italy.—Italian affairs remain in the same satisfactory condition.

Great distress, bordering on famine, prevailed throughout Finland.

Persia.—Constantinople, 6th.—French despatches from Teheran recommend Feruk Khan to make peace with England.

British reinforcements had arrived in the Persian Gulf, and the English corps d'armee had arrived in Cabul, and was marching, with the troops of Dost Mahommed, on Herat.

The Russians were concentrating troops on the banks of the Caspian.

The Russians in the Caucasus.—The news from Circassia shows that the mountaineers are still carrying on their war of nationality against the Russians with the greatest energy, and that in the contests which take place they are often victorious. About the beginning of last month a Russian army of 10,000 men. which had sacked and burnt the village of Tarta Kariksi, was met on its outskirts by a son of Emir Sefer Pacha, at the head of a strong force of Circassians, and, after a bloody battle, the Russians were driven back, leaving 700 men dead on the field

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.
ARRIVAL OF THE PERSIA.

New York, March 6.

Steamship Persia, Captain Judkins, from Liverpool, has arrived. She brings dates of the 21st ult.

Her news possesses several features of interest.

The London Morning Advertiser asserts that the government is in possession of a despatch announcing the total destruction of the city of Canton by the British.

The Persian difficulty, which, a few days since, appeared in a fair way of settlement, has taken an unexpected and unfavorable turn, Feruk Khan, the Persian Envoy, having suddenly ceased negotiations with the British Minister at Paris, and will not come to London. The French government has instructed its representatives at London, Vienna, St. Petersburg and Berlin, to invite those powers to accredit their resident ministers at Paris as Plenipotentiaries, to settle the Neufchatel affair.

THE PILGRIM'S REWARD.

Gen. 15: 1.

Lone pilgrim to Mount Zion bound,
Through storm and gathering gloom,
While foes unnumbered watch around
To lure thee from thy home,
Look up, fear not their power to harm,
Thy Refuge still remains;
The potent, everlasting arm
Of Israel's God sustains.

He sees thee from His high abode,
And marks thy weariness,
As onward still the tiresome road
To life, thy footsteps press.
Thy mournful sighs, thy burning tears,
Do not unheeded fall;
Each agonizing prayer He hears,
And He'll reward for all.

Heed not a scoffing world's abuse,
But keep thy garments pure,
Thine armor bright by constant use,
And to the end endure.
Remember, Jesus trod before
Life's rugged, thorny path;
Remember how He meekly bore
Derision, scorn, and wrath.

Like Him the shameful cross endure,
The base reproach despise;
Thou shalt eternal life secure—
A home in Paradise.
A peerless crown will soon adorn
Thy pallid, care-worn brow,—
The light of an eternal morn,
Its radiance round thee throw.

Soon thou wilt all thy grief exchange
For everlasting joys;
The verdant bowers of Eden range,
Where Death no more annoys.
Soon will thy tearful eyes behold
The city's dazzling light;
Its gates of pearl will wide unfold
To thy enraptured sight.

Soon will the victor's triumph song
In strains celestial rise;
While join with them the angel throng,
In matchless symphonies.
O pilgrim, keep the narrow path,
Though earth and hell combine;
Fear not, nor dread their blended wrath,
The victory shall be thine.

Domestic Summary.

Is there a Maelstrom?—Every school boy of the last century has been taught to believe that there is a wonderful vortex on the coast of Norway, with an eddy several miles in diameter, and that ships, and even huge whales were sometimes dragged within its terrible liquid coils, and forever lost "in ocean's awful depths." A correspondent of the Scientific American says:

"I have been informed by a European acquaintance that the Maelstrom has no existence. A nautical and Scientific commission went out and sailed all around and all over where the Maelstrom was said to be, but could not find it; the sea was as smooth where the whirlpool ought to be, as any other part of the German ocean"

We presume the above is correct. The latest geographers and gazetteers barely allude to the Maelstrom. Colton in his large Atlas gives the site upon his map, but does not allude to it in his description of Norway. Harper's Gazetteer in its article on Norway, says that "among the numerous islands on the West coast there are violent and irregular currents, which render the coast navigation dangerous. Among these is the celebrated Maelstrom, or Meskenaes-Strom, the danger from which has been greatly exaggerated, since it can, at nearly all times, be passed over even by boats." The romance of the Maelstrom has been pretty effectually destroyed.—Rochester American.

Death of the Original Uncle Tom.—The Indianapolis Journal mentions the death in that city, on Sunday last, of Thomas Magruder, an old negro, aged about 110 years. He is supposed to have been the one who suggested the name and the leading features of the character in Mrs. Stowe's novel, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." This supposition is based on the coincidence of name and character, and on the fact, says the Journal, "that Henry Ward Beecher, during his residence here, was a constant visitor of 'Uncle Tom's,' well acquainted with his history, and a sincere admirer of his virtues We have been told that Mrs. Stowe herself sometimes called to see the old man 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' too, was the name of his house, among his acquaintances, and was a familiar phrase here long before Mrs. Stowe immortalized it. At all events, we know it is the impression with all the friends of Mrs. Stowe and her brother, in this city, that 'Old Uncle Tom' was the original, or at least, the suggestion, of the hero of the 'Cabin.'"

A Speaking Curiosity.—The Portland State of Maine has seen an ingenious invention of Mr. Charles Whitus, of that city, which is so arranged as to articulate distinct vocal sounds, and answer questions when propounded.

Items.

The city of Candia is to be rebuilt, and the damage done to Sinope repaired.

J. B. Wallace, of Oswego, has lost a little son, owing to the mistake of an apothecary, who sent wine of opium instead of antimonial wine.

Grant Thorburn has completed his eighty-fifth year, and says he is not tired of the world, but would "live the world over again" with all its joys and sorrows. A happy old man.

In Manchester, England, they are apprehensive of a cotton famine. The consumption of cotton is proceeding with so much more rapidity than the growth, that with the present limited supply, prices are certain to come to a point which will arrest trade.

Married.

In Boston, Feb. 21, by S. G. Matthewson, Abraham Flagg, of Worcester, to Mrs. Nancy A. Tuttle, of Lowell, Mass.

A Bro. has sent us No. 4 and 5 of an Exposition of the 14th of Revelation. We have not seen the former numbers; doubtless there is some mistake. Will the Bro. explain?

A part of a communication from a writer in Bigelow's Mills, Ind., is received, and it being unfinished, with no name, we cannot publish until we hear from the author.

The conclusion of the article, "Divine Order," will be given next week.

RESURGAM!

"IT SHALL RISE AGAIN."

The bells are tolling, tolling, tolling solemnly and slow,
And mournfully the mourners tread the crowded street below;
The hearse moves, and we follow on, as is the fittest plan,
Since life is all a solemn march, with Death to lead the van,—
A solemn march o'er plain and hill, up mountain and through glen,
A long, sad, dreary funeral, a burying of men.
Yet onward in procession, onward with a stifled groan,
Each following a brother's corpse, and carrying his own.
Turn from the stony pavement, leave it for the dusty road,
Out in the fields and all alone, man finds his last abode;
On the bleak bare hill that rises close beside the marshy lake,
Upon whose rocky side the wailing storms of wind can break—
Wailing winds that wander on, wander, seeking for a shore,
Where they too may freeze to stillness, moaning nevermore.
Lay thy boy there, mournful Mother, thy fair boy in the ground,
Let the clammy dirt fall on him, with dull and sick'ning sound;
Lay him there within the damp earth, the cold earth soaked with rain,
The clinging, calm, remorseless earth, where hot tears fall in vain,—
Then listen, mournful Mother, listen with thy heart of pain,
For the whisp'ring Angel singeth, "all the buried rise again;"
Unseen, whisp'ring Angels chant, o'er and o'er the soft refrain—
Death is Life in strange disguise—"all the buried rise again."
Give back my Youth, comes trembling from the withered lips of Age,
And let Life's foes to me throw down once more the battle gage;
Give to my nerveless hand again, youth's grasp upon the steel,
A sharp wound, well repaid, would ease this want of power to feel.
The corpse of Love lies stiff and cold upon my sunken breast,
My bony arms are round it flung, as lulling it to rest.
My shaking voice moans frightened o'er the tones it used to sing,
When living Love walked by my side, among the flowers of Spring;
Its mild blue eye is glassy now, its rich brown locks turned grey,
But I cannot bear to loose my hold and put the corpse away.
Give back Ambition's manly form, and eyes of strong desire,
'Neath lofty brows like vine-clad rocks o'erhanging caves of fire!
Give back its will, its energy, its trust, its eagerness,
Its hopeful power to be and dare, to punish, and to bless.
Lo! now within the ground it lies, a helpless mass of clay,
But I cannot bear to bury it, and put its dust away.
Yield thee, Old Man, yield thee, and give the earth her own again,
Resign thy dead, while coldly fall the drops of drizzly rain;
And listen then with thy dull ear, listen for a martial strain,
Hear! the strong-voiced Angel shouts, "all the buried rise again."
Unseen, strong-voiced Angel shouts, o'er and o'er the deep refrain,—
Love, Faith, and Hope are deathless,—"all the buried rise again."

In the hope of "rising again" through Christ,

2300 Days.

In Daniel 8: 14, we are told, the vision is for 2300 days. In Daniel 9: 24, we are told "seventy weeks are determined," or cut off; and of necessity, time must be cut off from time: and as there is no time in the vision but the 2300 days, it would follow of necessity, that the seventy weeks are cut off from, and are a part of the 2300, and commence with that period. In Dan. 9: 25, we learn when to commence reckoning the time of the vision; viz., "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem." Now the point of interest is, has there such a commandment gone forth? if so, when? To ascertain this fact, we must go the law and to the testimony.

In Ezra 1: 2, Cyrus declares that the Lord, the God of heaven had charged him to build him an house at Jerusalem. In chap. 6: 3-12, we find a record of that decree. In the last clause of ver. 12, Darius confirmed that decree. In ver. 15, we are told the house was finished "in the sixth year of the reign of Darius, the king." Nothing said here about building Jerusalem; nothing but the house of the Lord God, in Jerusalem; consequently, the vision cannot date from this decree. Do we find any other decree in the law and testimony? Yes, in the 7th chap. of Ezra, in the seventh year of the reign of Artaxerxes, the king, we find the record of a decree by that king, to Ezra, "that all they of the people of Israel, and of the priests and Levites in my realm, which are minded of their own free will, to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee." At the 15th ver. and onward, we are given the details of that decree; that is, to carry the gold and silver which the king and his counsellors had freely offered unto the God of Israel, whose habitation is in Jerusalem. Ver. 19. "The vessels, also, that are given thee for the service of the house of thy God, these deliver thou before the God of Jerusalem." Thus reads the decree to the treasurers of the king as to what they shall do for Ezra, to promote his mission; and in ver. 27, we find Ezra blessing the Lord God of our fathers, which hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart. (What thing?) "To beautify the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem." So we find this decree of the king to have reference only to the furnishing and beautifying the house of the Lord in Jerusalem; not one word in this decree about restoring and building Jerusalem; hence we have not yet found the decree from which to date the vision. Now shall we from the word of the Lord be enabled to find such a decree?

In the 1st chap. of Nehemiah, in the twentieth year, (of Artaxerxes,) as he was in Shushan the palace, we find him inquiring of certain Brn., which came down from Judah, concerning the welfare of the Jews that were left of the captivity and of Jerusalem; and was informed that they were "in great affliction and reproach; the wall of Jerusalem also is broken down, and the gates thereof are burned with fire." After hearing this, Nehemiah is in great affliction, and wept certain days; so we find Jerusalem is yet broken down and desolate, and no decree to restore and to build In chap. 2: 1, we are told "in the month Nisan, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, the king, that wine was before him," and while Nehemiah was in the discharge of his duties as cup-bearer, his countenance being sad, the king inquired the cause, and is answered in the 3d ver.—"Why should not my countenance be sad, when the city, the place of my father's sepulchres lieth waste, and the gates thereof are consumed with fire." Ver. "Then the king said unto me, for what dost thou make request?" In the 5th ver., we find his request—"That thou wouldst send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it." The last clause of the 6th ver. reads,—"So it pleased the king to send me;" and in the 7th and 8th verses we read that letters were given him to the governors beyond the river, and to the keeper of the king's forest, that they would administer to Nehemiah such things as he should need for the work of building the city. Ver. 9. "Then I came to the governor's beyond the river and gave them the king's letters." For what were these letters or this decree of the king? "To restore and to build Jerusalem;" hence we find here in the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes, a decree which meets the prophecy exactly. Now, when was the twentieth year of that king? Newton tells us in his chronology, that it was 444 years before Christ. We subtract 444 from 2300, and we have 1856 full years remaining, which must reach to the same time in the year that they commenced, or to the first month; so that 444 full years before Christ, and 1856 full years after Christ make the whole length of the 2300-day vision. Commencing in the first month, they must of necessity end in the first month, or this spring.

Another line of evidence is the Julian period. In a very extensive and comprehensive French work on Astronomy and chronology, Art. de verifier les Dates, the Julian period before Christ is 4270, to which if we add 2300, we have the Julian period for the year 1857; viz., 6570. If we commence the 2300 days in the month Nisan, 444 before Christ, they must end in the month Nisan 1857 after Christ: which to my mind makes a very strong argument, that the 2300 days will end in the next first month, or this Spring, when the sanctuary will be cleansed. I see but one chance of mistake in this argument; that is, that the 20th year of Artaxerxes was not 444 before Christ, which is the testimony of Newton, and the Julian period harmonizes with it. If this testimony is not correct, will some one correct it, and show us the truth? for it is the truth that will do us good and make us free.

Yours in the Lord, SILAS HEWIT.

It should rather be our desire to use what we learn, than to remember it. If we desire to use it, we shall remember it, of course; if we wish merely to remember, it is possible we may never use it.—Sampson Reed.

Conversation Between a Brother and Sister.

No. IV.

Bro. In our last conversation you advanced sentiments tending towards a very dangerous heresy. I am astonished that you should have been led so far from sound orthodoxy as to deny the immortality of the soul.

Sr. Does the Bible anywhere say the soul is immortal? If the doctrine is so very important it ought to be plainly revealed.

Bro. It may not positively say, in so many words, the soul is immortal, but Scripture is full of expressions implying the doctrine.

Sr. Understand me, brother. I do not deny the doctrine of a future state. On the contrary, I believe, with full assurance of faith in the resurrection from the dead, and the life everlasting. What I deny is, the doctrine of inherent or natural immortality. Will you refer me to a text which even implies such a doctrine?

Bro. I do not call to mind any particular passage, just now, but am confident the Bible is full of the doctrine.

Sr. The reason why you cannot recall it, brother, is not that your memory is defective, but that there is no such passage to recall. Now I can recall plenty of Scripture which proves us to be entirely dependent upon Christ for immortality which is to be put on at the resurrection; (1 Cor. 15.) that immortality is not inherent, but it is to be sought after by patient continuance in well-doing; (Rom. 2: 7,) that God only hath immortality, and will bestow it as a free gift upon those who seek after it, when they will become "equal to the angels;" (Luke 20: 36,) while the other class are as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, (2 Pet. 2: 12,) like the beasts that perish.'. Ps. 49: 12. Understand, if the spirit of Christ (which is an immortal principle) dwell in us, that spirit will quicken our mortal bodies. Rom. 8: 11. Otherwise, we have no preeminence above a beast Eccl. 3: 19. (Solomon is speaking of the natural man.)

Now just observe the figures used to represent the two classes; "wheat", (containing a germ of life,) "chaff," (containing no such principle,) "tares," &c. As the farmer gathers up the tares and burns them because they are good for nothing so shall it be with the wicked at the end of the world; (Matt. 13:) burned up, because they are good for nothing, or no use in the universe. I know this is humiliating to the carnal mind, but it is true, nevertheless.

Bro. Hold, sister, you are talking very confidently about the wicked being burned up. Now hear this: Rev. 14: 9-11; "If any man worship the beast, . . . the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God which is poured out without mixture, into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever, and they have no rest day nor night who worship the beast and his image."

Sr. Beast, when used symbolically, always represents government. This is spoken of a certain class, who render homage to a certain government, and appears, from the connection in which it is used to have its fulfillment on the earth, and during this dispensation. Observe; they are to be "tormented with fire and brimstone," probably, gunpowder. You laugh, but turn to Rev, 19: 20, and you will see that the beast and the false prophet, which you will allow are both governments, are to be cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone, (and what lake but a battlefield, would be likely to destroy a government?) in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb." While the final punishment of the wicked is described thus, in 2 Thess. 1: 9,—"punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord." You see, they are first (in symbolical language,) tormented in his presence, then (in positive scripture) destroyed out of his presence.

Bro. But what do you say of the 10th verse—"and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever?" Pray, sister, how long do you expect for ever and ever will last?

Sr. Let me read a similar passage, in Isa. 34: 9, 10; "and the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever; from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever." Read on into the next chapter, and you will find smoke goes up forever, until "the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them," &c. Now let me read its parallel passage in Isa. 32: 13, where the prophet in speaking on the same subject says,—"Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers; yea, upon all the houses of joy in the joyous city, because the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; the forts and towers shall be for dens for ever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks; until the spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field," &c. You see how long the smoke is to go up in these passages. Forever is to last until a certain time. In Proverbs 11: 31, we read,—"the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinner." And this is said in as plain language as the "smoke of their torment," &c. The only difference is, that the latter occurs in a book of symbolical imagery, and the former, in a book of plain declarations. So that if the smoke is still future and to ascend up forever and ever, it will ascend from the earth Besides, I am not so much interested to know what will become of the smoke, as I am to know what will become of the wicked, and this is very plainly revealed. "They shall consume away into smoke." Ps. 37: 20. "They shall be as though they had not been," speaking of all the heathen. Obadiah 16. "Yet a little while and the wicked shall not be." Even his "place" shall not be, Ps. 37: 10. They shall be "burned up root and branch." Mal. 4: 1. "Shall be ashes." 3 ver. "Shall be burned up with unquenchable fire." Matt. 3: 12. Let us notice this passage. The wicked are here called chaff, which, it is said, shall be burned up with unquenchable fire. Now suppose you have a handful of chaff and throw it on the fire, while some one at the same time dashes on water, quenching the fire, the chaff may be saved. But suppose the fire is not quenched, what can save the chaff from being burned up? Just as John the Baptist says.

Bro. I will just read Matt. 25: 46. "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Do you not see that the punishment upon the wicked, is to continue as long as the blessing upon the righteous, both eternal?

Sr. Certainly, and this punishment is defined in other places to be death, "the second death." "everlasting death," &c.

Bro. Just notice the expression-everlasting death. It is to be a short punishment, and then over, but everlasting death.

Sr. Certainly; not an everlasting process of dying, but everlasting death. When we sentence a criminal to hang by the neck till he is dead, dead, dead, is he not punished? Does the torment inflicted in the process of dying enter into his sentence at all? No, he is punished with death, and if there were to be no resurrection it would be an everlasting punishment; that is, the sentence of death would remain on him forever.

JULIA A. FERRIS.

To Friends in Iowa.

As several brethren, in different parts of Iowa, have earnestly solicited my labors, I hereby give notice of my intention to visit them this Spring and next Fall, D. V. My tour in the Spring will necessarily be short; but shall probably remain some time in the fall. Glad to receive such warm invitations from several whom I once buried in baptism, and who after passing through years of trials, are still clinging to the "faith once delivered to the saints." These will be favored with my first visit. No notice will be given in the papers, except of general meetings, as letters are so long on the road; hence, none will expect me who do not make arrangement with me, as to time, by private letters.

Hope to hold several conferences with you this coming fall. Let those who wish them, and have not yet spoken, communicate their wishes to me in season, that timely arrangements may be made. If sufficient interest is felt, I shall try to enlist the labors of Eld. H. L. Hastings, in such meetings.

Until Fall the most of my preaching will be in the vicinity of home.

The Spirits in France.

DANTE.

The following account of remarkable manifestations in Paris is from the correspondence of the Evening Gazette:

"The wonderful production of the spirit-hands, not only visible to the eye but tangible to the touch, has filled us with awe, the fact of such appearance being now established beyond doubt. The spirit called answers through the medium, on whose request the hands of the spirit became visible. One of our greatest English poets, being in communication with the medium, asked for the summons of Dante. The presence of the latter was immediately made manifest by the written answers returned to the questions of the inquirer, and Mr. B—— then asked the medium to request the great Italian to make himself visible! Presently there arose, as if from the ground beneath the table, two long, thin, yellow hands, unmistakable as to their Italian origin—undeniable as their having belonged to a student and a gentleman. While the assembly were yet gazing in breathless awe, and, may be, something of terror likewise, the hands floated away, or were rather borne, as it were, across the room, and rose to the marble console opposite, upon which stood a vase containing an orange tree in blossom. The hands slowly and softly, without noise, but visibly to all, plucked from the stem a sprig of the orange flower with its leaves and buds, and returning to the table paused, above the head of Mrs. B——, the poet's wife—herself an exquisite and beautiful poet likewise—and, placing the sprig upon her raven hair, disappeared gradually from sight, seeming once more to sink to the floor, while the audience remained speechless and awe-struck, and but little inclined to renew the experiments, the same night, at all events.

"The sprig of orange blossom is religiously preserved by Mr. B——, whose honor and truth is unimpeachable, while the witnesses gathered round the table at the time of the occurrence all testify to the apparition, as well as to the utter unconsciousness of the medium, who neither spoke nor moved during the whole time the circumstance was taking place."

HOLY FEELING.—To myself the most effectual church is that in which I see the signs of christian affection in those around me, in which warm hearts are beating on every side, in which a deep stillness speaks of the absorbed soul, in which I recognize fellow beings, who in common life have impressed me with their piety. One look from a beaming countenance, one tone in singing from a deeply moved heart, perhaps aid me more than the sermon. When nothing is said, I feel it to be good to be among the devout; and I wonder not that the Quakers, in some of their still meetings, profess to hold the most intimate union, not only with God, but with each other. It is not with the voice only that man communicates with man. Nothing is so eloquent as the deep silence of a crowd. A sigh, a low breathing, sometimes pours into us our neighbor's soul more than a volume of words. There is a communication more subtile than freemasonry, between those who feel alike. How contagious is holy feeling! On the other hand, how freezing, how palsying is the gathering of a multitude who feel nothing, who come to God's house without reverence, without love, who gaze around on each other as if they were assembled at a show, whose restlessness keeps up a slightly disturbing sound, whose countenances reveal no collectedness, no earnestness, but a frivolous or absent mind! The very sanctity of the place makes this indifference more chilling. One of the coldest spots on earth is a church without devotion. What is it to me that a costly temple is set apart, by ever so many rites, for God's service; that priests, who trace their lineage to the apostles, have consecrated it, if I find it thronged with the worldly and undevout? This is no church to me. I go to meet, not human bodies, but souls; and if I find them in an upper room, like that where the first disciples met, or in a shed, or in a street, there I find a church; there is the altar, the sweet incense, the accepted priest. These all I find in sanctified souls.—Channing.

CHARITY.—Night kissed the young rose, and it bent softly to sleep. Stars shone, and pure dew drops hung upon its bosom, and watched its sweet slumbers. Morning came with its dancing breezes and they whispered to the young rose, and it awoke joyous and smiling. Lightly it danced to and fro in all the loveliness of health and youthful innocence. Then came the ardent sun-god, sweeping from the east, and smote the young rose with its scorching rays, and it fainted. Deserted and almost heart-broken, it drooped to the dust in its loveliness and despair. Now the gentle breeze, which has been gamboling over the sea, pushing on the homeward bark, sweeping over hill and dale—by the neat cottage and still brook—turning the old mill, fanning the brow of disease, and frisking the curls of childhood—came tripping along on her errands of mercy and love, and when she saw the young rose she hastened to kiss it, and fondly bathed its forehead in cool refreshing showers, and the young rose revived and looked and smiled in gratitude to the kind breeze, but she hurried quickly away; for she soon perceived that a delicious fragrance had been poured on her wings by the grateful rose; and the kind breeze was glad in heart, and went away singing through the trees. Thus charity like the breeze gathers fragrance from the drooping flowers it refreshes, and unconsciously reaps a reward in the performance of its office of kindness, which steals on the heart like rich perfume, to bless and to cheer.

The Poor Girl in Boston.

I now hastened to church, telling the youth who had been injured, that I would call to see him on the morrow. A few steps from the house of God I found a little, thin, pale-faced girl, without either shoes or stockings, and very scantily clad for such a raw day, sitting upon the curb stone, crying. No one of all the passers by took any notice of her; they were too much interested in themselves, or something else, to regard a wee little crying girl. I said, "My little girl, what is the matter?"

"O, sir!" she answered, while sobs almost choked her utterance, "I am cold, very cold; and I'm so hungry I don't know what to do!" "Well, take that," said I, throwing a small bit of money into her lap, "and go to some baker's for bread and then run home, and at noon I will call in to see you." After divine service was over, I told one of the deacons I would like to have him go with me and see this child, and what sort of a home she had. So, following the directions she had given me, we turned into a little, narrow, filthy court, from B—— Street, and after ascending two flights of rickety stairs in an old, unsightly, decaying wooden house, we entered a room—the child's home. And what a home! Ah, that home is found, in the almsgiving, benevolent, Christian city of Boston! A more dreary, desolate, heart-breaking scene, I had never witnessed, though I have visited hundreds of the wretched abodes of the miserably poor. There was nothing in this cheerless home; no bedstead, nor table, nor chairs, nor dishes, nor fuel; literally nothing but rags and dirt; while the bleak winds of a blustering March day were whistling through broken panes in the windows and long, broad cracks in the door.

"My Father in heaven!" cried the deacon. "Do my eyes deceive me? Is it possible? Can human beings live so?" "Yes," answered a voice from under a pile of rags in a corner of this home; "we live so until we die, and that can't be far off, thank God!" "But, my good woman," said I, addressing myself to an emaciated, sorrow-stricken figure, which was beginning to rise up amid the rags, "we should be willing to wait the Lord's time, even if we do suffer." "Yes, yes, the Lord's time!" she interrupted, before I could say all I intended; "it is all well enough for those to preach such things who have plenty to eat and drink, and clothes enough to cover them; but just let 'em take my place, and be half froze to death, and not eat a morsel for two whole days, and then see if you would'nt want the Lord's time to be a pretty quick time! Yes, the Lord's time! Well, I wish it was his time now to take me and my poor child out of this world; but, at any rate, it can't be a great way off, for we are dying with hunger. We haven't tasted a mouthful of anything since the day before yesterday, till this forenoon, when somebody gave my child money to buy a little bread."

"O mother, mother!" said the little girl, "this is the gentleman himself,—this is the same one as gave me the money."

"The dying blessing of a poor woman on your head!" said the mother.

"You are not dying yet," I answered, "and we hope you will live many years, and see better days."

"Better days!" she quickly replied, and her sunken but bright eyes were fixed upon me with such a look, so startling and unearthly, that I involuntarily turned away from their gaze. "Better days! I've seen better days; but now all I want is to die."

"O, mother dear," said the now weeping girl, "don't talk so! what could I do if you should die? Perhaps this kind gentleman can get me some work, and then we may be happy again."

"Work!" said the deacon, while great tears were chasing down his cheeks. "Why, what work can you do, you poor little thing, you? Work! why you look now as if you ought to be in bed, and be taken care of, instead of talking about work."

"O," said the child, her pale little face brightening up, "when I a'n't hungry,—when I have enough to eat so that I am strong,—I can do lots of work; I can wash, and iron, and scrub floors, and do most anything; if you'll only get me a place to work, you'll see if I can't work, and work hard, and all day too."

"Well, you shall have work, my dear," said the deacon. "It shan't be said that in the city of Boston, a child with such a disposition is freezing and starving in a miserable hole like this." "O mother, dear mother!" said the little one, not waiting for the deacon to end his sentence, and with an earnestness and animation quite beautiful to witness, "hear what this good man says; he says I shall have work. You won't again say you want to die, will you?"

"God bless his kind heart!" ejaculated the mother. "God bless him."

And nobly the deacon redeemed his pledge. That very day that child was an inmate of his own house. That very day the mother's wants were relieved, and that dismal room made comparatively a palace.

And nobly, too, did that child redeem her pledge. Many a time has the good man told me that in all his life he never saw such a willing, kind, grateful little creature, and that she had already paid him more than an hundred fold for all that he had done for both mother and daughter.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

"LOVE THE BRETHREN."

Hast thou a brother?—love him, do,
With love divine, holy, and true;
Is he by earthly care dismayed?
Go, gently lend a brother's aid.

Is poverty with direful mein,
Upon thy brother's threshold seen?
Go thou, and from thy duties bring,
A brother's, bounty's offering.

Do years despondent dim the eye,
While blasts unpitying pass him by?
Go thou, in friendship's mantle clad,
And cheer thy brother lone and sad.

Do foes unite?—do friends impart
No ray of love to glad his heart?
Go thou, and with thy kindness cheer
The path that darksome doth appear.

Do fearful waves around him roll,
And bid him bow to death's control?
Go, light with love the rayless gloom,
That shrouds thy brother in the tomb.

And when at Jesus' high command,
All nations round the throne shall stand;
He shall come forth, the rescued one,
And sing, "behold what love hath done,"

Sanctification,

AS CONNECTED WITH THE COMING OF THE LORD;
—OR—
THE APOSTLE PAUL'S EARNEST PRAYER.

BY H. P. SIKES.

No. IV.

(Concluded.)

3. If unsanctified, we are unprepared to meet the Lord at his coming, and unfit for the kingdom of God. Says Paul, "preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." This he regards as all important, that we be found in this "blameless," or sanctified state at the coming of Jesus. He elsewhere declares emphatically, that without this character no one can ever enter the kingdom of heaven. The reason which he gives is this: none others are fit for that holy place. It never was prepared for them. The "Divine nature" is not sufficiently enstamped upon their hearts to be admitted there.

"Those holy gates forever bar pollution, sin, and shame,
None shall obtain admittance there but followers of the Lamb."

O, the purity of the Redeemer's blissful kingdom! What a vast transformation these vile, corrupt natures must experience, ere they can gain an entrance there! Did mankind but see themselves in God's light, methinks pride would drop its head in shame and cry for mercy. God has given a short description of our character in these words;—"And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Gen. 6: 5. But fallen as we are by nature, the blessed Lamb of God has undertaken our case, has undertaken to make us "meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." And how does he accomplish it? What does he undertake to do for us? What must our characters become, in order that we may be qualified for the kingdom of immortal glory? We must become entirely sanctified to God, "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing." This is the character Jesus proposes to give us. To accomplish this mighty change, he sends the Holy Spirit to commence and carry on a work of grace in our hearts, until "the headstone shall be brought forth with shouting, crying grace, grace unto it." For such he has prepared a kingdom, and prepared it "from the foundation of the world." He has gone to prepare mansions for them, and is just about to return; yea, his harbingers have already announced his approach. But for whom, I ask, has he prepared such a kingdom—these mansions? We look to his word for an answer. Acts. 20: 32,—"And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified." Thus, they are all "sanctified ones" who are partakers of this heavenly inheritance. None others can be admitted there. Mark, St. Paul does not say partially sanctified; he makes use of no qualifying expression, but plainly intimates that that glorious immortal throng is composed of those only who are wholly sanctified. He speaks plainly; we need not misunderstand him. But another text, Acts 26: 18, last clause of the verse;—"that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me." Tit. 2: 14,—"Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Here, although the word "sanctify" is not used, yet surely to be "redeemed from all iniquity" is to be sanctified, entirely so. Eph. 5: 25–27,—"Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy, and without blemish." Rom. 6: 11,—"Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord." As much as a dead man has to do with the business and concerns of the world, so much may the children of God have to do with sin. Again. Heb. 13: 12,—"Wherefore, Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate." 1 Cor. 6: 11,—"And such were some of you; but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." 2 Tim. 2: 21,—"If a man, therefore, purge himself from all these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work." Bear in mind that in all these texts, no such thing is mentioned, or even hinted at, as being partly sanctified, sinning and repenting, rising and falling: of course, no such thing is meant, but whole, or entire sanctification only. How strange that any one should ever think that any thing less is required. O, what folly to imagine that we can be received to inherit God's everlasting kingdom without this character!

And it is, perhaps, equal folly to suppose our characters will undergo any change after we witness the coming of the Lord of glory. The conditions of salvation are these; believe, and be saved; believe not, and certain damnation follows. It is FAITH in a dying, risen, and coming Savior that secures our salvation. But where is the room for faith, or the possibility for its exercise, when our eyes shall behold, and our absent Lord shall return? Will not faith be at that very moment lost in sight? Most certainly. No more change of character. That work—the formation of character—being assimilated to the Divine nature, must all be done previously, here, whilst we "walk by faith, not by sight." If undone at the moment we first witness the King and Judge of all the earth, it must remain undone forever! No more chance for any change! We must overcome "the world, the flesh, and the devil," while we have them to contend with; not after they shall have passed away forever. It is here, in this state of corruption and wickedness, trial and temptation, that the Lord requires us to be entirely sanctified, "body, soul, and spirit."

This has been the character of all those who have died in the Lord, from Abel down to the present time. They have all been "sanctified ones." It is true that, while the world receded, and death drew near, they could feel (which we cannot) that they had done with all sublunary things; that they had no more concern here; and hence, were enabled to realize the overwhelming importance of Divine things, with a vividness with which it may, perhaps, be more difficult for us to apprehend them. They could then see clearly that without full and entire sanctification to God, they could never see his face in peace. They saw that they must be pure and spotless, thoroughly cleansed from all sin. Thus it has been with all who have died in faith in all generations. And the same is required of us. Nothing short of this will gain us admittance into the kingdom. In vain have we suffered, and prayed, and sung, and conversed about and fondly anticipated the coming kingdom of Jesus, if we come short of this! If we fail of possessing this character, all is lost! Thus the word of God declares. Says John the Revelator, "and there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Rev. 21: 27. Says Paul, "follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord:" or which is the same thing, "follow holiness; for without holiness, (complete, or entire,) no man shall see the Lord." Heb. 12: 14. He who "spake as never man spake," says, "blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." This language seems plainly to imply, that none except the "pure in heart" shall see God.

What a scene is just before us! And who shall stand? Let David answer,—"he that hath clean hands and a pure heart." That tremendous day is just about to burst upon us. Perhaps in less than twenty-four hours that day of days, at once so dreadful and so glorious, will break upon a sin-besotted world, like as a bird is caught in a snare! But as "the children of Israel had light in their dwellings" when the Egyptians were plagued with darkness, so thick and dense that it might even be felt; so have Adventists light and knowledge on the immediate coming of the King of kings, amid the thick, gross, moral darkness that surround us. "Ye beloved are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." How vast the difference, in point of light, between the Adventist and the mass of the world! How highly are we privileged!

"Where much is given, much shall be required." So says our Master. How much then will be required at our hands! What careful walking with God and watchfulness, lest we displease him; what fervent, childlike, humble love towards him; what strong, vigorous faith; what weanedness from the world, and willingness to be considered the very off-scouring of all things for the sake of our blessed Lord and his precious truth, may the Lord look for from those upon whom he has bestowed such a vast amount of light and knowledge! But alas! alas! the heaven-daring worldliness, covetousness, pride, contention, backbiting, self-exaltation, and want of the lowly, meek, loving spirit of Jesus, of which we are guilty! And are these the "Elijahs" that are to be translated at the coming of Jesus? No, never! without the deepest repentance and humiliation. Oh, is it not time, my dear brethren and sisters, for us, one and all, to break down before God? Think of the barren fig-tree; think of the lament and threatening of Jehovah against backsliding Israel. (Isa. 5: 4, 5, &c.) Oh, let us humble ourselves in the dust before the Lord; lest it be said of us as of Ephraim, "he is joined to his idols, let him alone."

The prophet Elijah furnishes us an example of what kind of character is necessary in order to our being changed as in the twinkling of an eye from mortal to immortality. For a long time previous to his change, he only staid and waited for his discharge—all ready for the glorious event—ready for an exchange of worlds. His nature had been completely transformed, totally unlike depraved man, and like to God and angels. He breathed the very atmosphere of Heaven, where he was soon to be taken. No change of character was experienced after the fiery chariot appeared which was to convey him thither. He was all ready.

4. God promises to accomplish this work in us. Thus, in the text, says Paul, he "will do it." He will answer the Apostle's prayer, to "sanctify us wholly," and "preserve us blameless, unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." This he will do the moment we perform the conditions. And the conditions are, first, that we be deeply and truly willing to have it done; willing to give up all sin, and cheerfully to bear any and every cross for Jesus' sake. Second, we come in faith to him, confidently expecting him to perform his many promises, and cleanse us from all sin. Then we are to believe it is done, according to his word; to "reckon ourselves dead unto sin, and alive unto God." That moment the work is done, and we shall probably have the witness of the Holy Ghost testifying to the fact, sooner or later. But let us be careful, lest Satan take the advantage of us here, if we have not this witness as soon as we expect, and persuade us that the work is not accomplished, and thus overthrow our faith, and defeat the whole. It may be withheld for a long time, and we be left destitute of feeling, simply to try our faith. The work which we have to do is to consecrate ourselves; then, we may rely upon it, God will do his part. It is ours to consecrate ourselves to God; it is his own prerogative to sanctify us; it is our own act to cast ourselves upon the altar; it is his to accept and consume the sacrifice. And we may rely upon it with the most perfect assurance, that the Lord will perform his part of the work the very moment we are ready to do ours. "He is faithful." He stands as it were with loaded hands, waiting for an opportunity to bestow upon us this inestimable blessing. For this, Jesus spilt his precious blood. For this, the Holy Spirit is sent into the world, and is become our sanctifier. Yea, for this, this world was created; and, though so guilty as scarcely to be able to bear up under the weight of sin which it contains, has been permitted to roll on from year to year, for so many centuries. 'Tis purely for the sake of those who are "chosen out of the world."

O what heart can imagine—what stretch of thought can reach and fathom the immense sacrifice which our dear Redeemer made for our sanctification and salvation! Consider what a work it was for him to leave the bosom of his father, to descend into the very lowest depths of humiliation and disgrace; and that, too, among mortals! not equals, but vastly his inferiors; and finally, to give himself up to his enraged enemies, to be mocked, spit upon, crowned with thorns, and then put to death in the most cruel and ignominious manner! And, think you, after doing and suffering all this for this object, he will withhold it—withhold it, too, from those dear ones whom he so tenderly loves, when he sees them all ready to receive this blessing, and earnestly seeking to obtain it? No, never! Rely upon it, the work is done the moment we perform the conditions. We must then believe that it is, and continue thus to believe. Believe, trust, and not wait and look to ourselves, to see, in the first place, whether we have any feeling. All our faith (or what we flatter ourselves is faith) in that case, would be no faith at all.

But I notice one or two objections. Says one, "this is Methodist sanctification." I answer, it is Bible sanctification. It matters little to you and I who believe it, and who do not. Will you dare to reject this precious doctrine, so dear to the Lord, because, forsooth, the Methodists believe it? Surely you must have too much sense and independence of mind to be guilty of such supreme folly and wickedness as this! What a miserable plea this will be at the judgment seat of Christ for rejecting this, the vast key-stone, as it were, of the arch of man's salvation! Besides, look at the extreme absurdity of this objection; the Methodists believe the Bible as being Inspiration from God; now, my brother, will you reject it, and be an infidel, because they profess to believe it?

But again, it is objected "that we cannot live thus while actively engaged in the duties of life." And does our tender Redeemer require of his followers that which they cannot perform? He requires us to be "perfect, even as our Father which is in Heaven is perfect." O, the shocking unbelief, to indulge such a thought for a moment! What! the dear, suffering, dying Lamb of God, require us to be "perfect," and at the same time withhold grace to enable us to be so? Ah no! After the wonderful exhibition which we have had of his matchless, unfathomable love, we need have no fear, but come to him boldly, expecting that he will perform every iota of his promise. But the utter futility of this objection is shown conclusively by the experience of a multitude of persons who have lived thus for years, and that too in the midst of the cares, labors, and pursuits of life. Such were James B. Taylor, Mrs. Hester Ann Rogers, Madame Guion, &c.

Did not our blessed Savior live without committing a single sin during his whole life long? He withstood temptations far greater than you or I have to bear; "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." And the same power and ability to "overcome" which he possessed, he seeks to impart to us; or, at least all that which we need. It was as a man truly, and properly a man, that he passed through all these things. And he says, "every one that is perfect shall be as his Master."

Oh, my dear brethren, would to God we duly felt the awful importance of this subject! 'Tis the only way into the Kingdom. If we fail here, all is lost! Better that we had never been born, than that we should come short of this, our high privilege! Our whole life a total failure! In vain would it be that we had borne the name and the reproach of "Adventist" for these many years. "And have ye suffered so many things in vain, if it be yet in vain?" I earnestly entreat all not to rest short of this, the believer's privilege. Consecrate all anew and entirely to God. Keep nothing back. Take Christ as a WHOLE Savior, and resolve from this time forth to be wholly the Lord's. And may the Lord help us all, and prepare us for his coming.

A Vision of the Redeemed.

There, before the throne of God and the Lamb they stand, all clothed with immortality! O joyful, glorious, eternally blessed state! Now tears shall never fall, and hearts shall not be sad. The days of labor, perplexity, mourning and pain are ended. The son of wickedness now no longer afflicts, and the principles of evil no longer oppress. No fears shall ever be expressed for the future, or sighs be heaved for the past. The days of darkness and gloom have all passed away before the opening scenes of unending brightness and cloudless light. Hail eternal triumph! Hail state of bliss unspeakable! Hail condition of wondrous glory! In rapture, now, the innumerable multitude feast their eyes on the loveliness of "the King in his beauty." Now bread shall be given them and their waters shall be sure. Now, parted loved and loving ones have met to part no more. Now human beings, perfected, and holy angels mingle, with the most unrestrained familiarity. O how joyful the countenances of the saved millions! How sweet their songs! How high their raptures!

For the Crisis.

The Scarlet Colored Beast.

In Rev. 17: 1, the great harlot is represented as sitting upon many waters. In verse 3, she is represented as sitting upon a scarlet colored beast having seven heads and ten horns, full of names of blasphemy. In verse 15, the many waters are explained to be "people, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." In chap. 13: 12, it is stated that the two-horned beast is to exercise all the power and authority of the first wild beast in his sight; i. e., the one that preceded it, which was the ten-horned beast, described in the first ten verses. In verse 7, we are informed of the extent of the dominion of that beast; "and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations."

What shall be done with these symbols? Shall we cast them away as unprofitable? By no means; because, all scripture is declared "profitable." But we should be more careful in adopting theories, and urging them as "divinely inspired truths," when they conflict with other portions of Revelation. It is conceded that the scarlet colored beast and the two-horned beast, represent one and the same power, and that the former is an explanation of the latter, and that they, jointly, symbolize the eighth and last form of the great Roman beast, or earthly government; the one that is to carry the great harlot to the judgment; the one that is to be broken to pieces by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands. It is conceded, further, that the proper place for its development in the great prophetic stream of time, is after the ending of the 1260 years of the Papal beast, or head; which power, I claim, is the allied powers of Europe, and will now introduce a few historic facts as proof. It is admitted by nearly all, that 1260 years expired near the close of the last century, and that the Papal head was wounded, and the ten-horned beast was "killed by the sword" and "carried into captivity" by Napoleon I. about that time. The entire history of that wonderful man proves, that it was his great design to establish another universal, consolidated monarchy or form of government, like that of imperial Rome; he even went so far as to claim the prerogative of a successor of the Cesars, and for a time prospects indicated success, but eventually failed. He found in the Allies of Europe, headed by England and Russia, a power more potent than himself; one that frustrated his proud schemes, and proved his destroyer. Hence, they were greater than he. The same historians that record the foregoing facts, record still further, that his whole career was that of a destroyer of the then existing dynasties of Europe; that he established nothing that survived the brief power of his own sword; that at his overthrow in 1813–14, the Allies found Europe, with the exception of England and Russia, in almost a chaotic state, much like that of a forest uprooted by a violent tornado; that in the Vienna Congress, assembled for that purpose, order was restored by his conquerors, and a new era dawned upon Europe, and especially upon the Holy See. That in that general wreck, lay prostrate and lifeless that power, which for ages wielded its sceptre over the kings of the earth, and all kindreds, and tongues, and nations, but the momentous events of 1814 brought instantaneous and vigorous life.

After the battle of Leipsic, the Allies found the Pope a prisoner in France, whom they released and permitted to return to Rome. Afterwards they restored to him temporal power over, what is now called, the papal states of Italy, and acknowledged his pontifical dignities. In that Congress, the German empire was blotted out of the map of Europe, the smaller states mutilated and divided up as best suited the cupidity and avarice of the more powerful. New international laws were formed, and measures adopted to carry out and perpetuate the acts of that Congress, as the basis or rule of action not only for Europe, but for the habitable world. Subsequent history records the fact, that since that time, even to the present, those laws, in the main, have been carried out, even to the coercion of the turbulent into subjection. Therefore, I claim, that since 1813–14, the fragments of the old Roman empire have been, and are still controlled by a universal form of government, answering to the eighth in prophecy and history; which power did restore the ten-horned beast, and caused it "to live again," according to the prophecy. At which time the Papal hierarchy, in her ecclesiastical capacity, took her seat upon the beast, (or the many waters,) as the great Harlot, those powers having acknowledged and guaranteed to her the rights then conferred, which rights she has maintained to the present day.

Again. Those Allies did at that time, and have to this moment, comprehended this identical kingdom or empire of France, as an integral part thereof, which has in the main, and still continues to be governed in her intercourse with the other nations of Europe, by the treaties and regulations of that power, as witnessed in a recent, and the present European Congress now in session in her own capitol. It is conceded that Napoleon III. is acting an important part in the great national events of the day, and is rapidly rushing them onward in their preparation for the battle of the great Day of God Almighty.

In order to explain more fully our point, we will state the matter thus:—Imperial Rome was the 6th head, and was succeeded by Papal Rome, which was the 7th. That when the papal head was wounded by Napoleon I. and carried into captivity, then the beast was not; all the seven heads were then ended or in the past, and so continued in an inorganic state till his overthrow in 1814; at which time, "the many nations" of the Roman beast revived from that chaotic state, under the Allies of Europe, which constituted the 8th head; then the beast "was" again, and "yet is," at the present time.

It is urged that the eighth head is merely a revival or a restoration of the seventh head only. Now by a careful examination of verse 11, chap. 17, it will be seen that such an inference is not warranted. It is as follows:—"And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the SEVEN," (mark, not the seventh as is claimed); also part of verse 9,—"the seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman SITTETH;" this language seems to indicate, that this form will require a revival or restoration of all the preceding seven, and when thus restored, the great Babylonish harlot will sit upon them all, as active living heads of the scarlet beast, governing and controlling the body thereof. It is quite certain that the Papal hierarchy never did, in any sense, sit upon the seven ancient forms of government; for six of them had past when she came up, and she, being clothed with the secular power, and wielding the sword, constituted one of those heads, as before shown. Various prophecies clearly teach that the Roman beast was to comprehend the leading elements of the Babylonish lion, the Persian bear, and the Grecian leopard. In like manner, these, and some other passages, seem to justify the conclusion, that in the last form of Roman government, will be found all the dreadful elements, not only of the three preceding kingdoms, but all the varied forms and elements of all the preceding seven forms. Thus it must be when the great metallic image is smitten upon the feet "by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands," and all its parts destroyed. By a careful examination of the European governments, the remarkable fact is found to correspond with this conclusion, there being no less than seven distinct forms of government now in actual existence, which are as follows; viz.,

1. The Papal states of Italy.
2. Imperial, 4 Empires.
3. Regal or Kingly, some 17 Kingdoms.
4. Republic, some 8.
5. Confederacies, 2.
6. Aristocratic, or Aristocracies, of which there are several.
7. The Henseatic League.

All of which are parts and parcels of the European Alliance, and either aided or concurred in the restoration of the Papacy in 1814.

The subject may be summed up as follows:

1. In the scarlet beast are found the multitudes and nations of earth, (or many waters,) which constitute its body.

2. The 7 different forms of European government constitute the 7 heads thereof, and all are now in actual being or life.

3. The original 10 kingdoms now exist, and are parts of this beast, being embraced in that alliance, and now, as in ancient days, sustain the Papacy, and will continue so to do, till overcome by the King of Kings.

4. The names of those "multitudes and nations" which make up the body of the beast, are a fulfillment of the names of blasphemy of which this beast is full, and may appropriately be considered as the number of the name of the two-horned beast; viz., 666.

5. Upon all which sits the great Babylonish Harlot having in her hand a golden cup full of the abominations of her filthiness, of which she causes them to drink, and they are made drunk.

In the light of this subject, we see the sad picture drawn by the Revelator relative to the character and position of the kingdoms of this world, including great Babylon, is filled out to a letter, and all are rushing on with more than railroad speed to that hour when God's righteous judgments will be made manifest, and all destroyed together at the brightness of the coming of Christ. No farther changes or new forms of government are to be looked for prior to the opening scenes of that Day.

A further examination would make the subject still plainer. P. ALLING.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 18, 1857.

Moral Signs.

"Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." 2 Tim. 3: 13.

When will this scripture be in process of fulfillment? Paul tells us in the beginning of the chapter, that "in the last days perilous times shall come;" and after speaking of the state of the church, and telling us, that at the time specified, it will love pleasure more than God, "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof;" he goes on to describe the state of things in the last days, and declares as in our text that evil men will grow "worse." How can this be harmonized with the idea that the world is growing better, as many declare?

Says Jesus, when speaking of the state of things at his second coming,—"as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man; . . . likewise also as it was in the days of Lot . . . even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." What was the moral condition of the antediluvians, and the Sodomites? Were they growing better or worse? Were the righteous many or few? But one answer can be given, and "thus shall it be" in the last days.

I purpose now to introduce some facts showing that wickedness is rapidly increasing, or as Paul expresses it,—"evil men and seducers" are waxing "worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."

The New York Mirror says that the nightly robberies in the streets of that city have led to a brisk business in dirks and revolvers, the people finding it necessary to arm themselves for their own protection. People go to the theatre and the prayer meeting with revolvers and dirks in their pockets. "The next step will be a vigilance committee; and the first work on hand will be to 'hang the authorities,' who are receiving a million a year for protecting life and property; and who spend it in seeking their own pecuniary advancement."

THE ARABS OF THE CITIES.—Robberies by the new garroting process occur almost every night in New York, and the people are justly alarmed at the audacity of the robbers. A few nights since a gentleman was attacked by five men at the corner of fifth avenue and Broadway, about 10 o'clock, and awoke to sensibility at 3 o'clock in the morning, at the bottom of a flight of cellar steps. He had been stunned by a slung shot, robbed and thrown down the cellar, and was so paralyzed with his wounds and the cold, that he could only crawl home on his hands and knees. Two men were seized, about two o'clock Monday morning, by a gang of six of these robbers, who rifled their pockets without doing any personal injury. One of the robbed afterwards followed them to a drinking house, where they were all arrested by the police, but two escaped on the way to the Tombs. New York will soon be as badly off as London, if things go on in this way. The condition of the British metropolis is thus described by William Howitt:—

"I am posted betwixt Highgate and Kentish Town. Since the dark nights set in there have been round here at least two dozen burglaries and robberies, not one of which I have seen mentioned in the newspapers, and not one of the perpetrators of which has been detected. One man only, so far as I have heard, has been taken up on suspicion. On the contrary, such is the impunity with which the thieves proceed, that they have three times, in about as many weeks, thoroughly ransacked a large ladies' school, not 400 yards from this spot. They were so well instructed, that on one of the occasions the young ladies were going to have a little fete, and the thieves walked in the night previous, and carried off all their dresses."

CRIME IN NEW YORK.—One man is knocked down, half choked and robbed at ten o'clock in the evening, in so quiet and respectable a street as Irving Place, and within three blocks "of the greatest ball of the season," another is treated similarly in Broadway, others still in Madison Place at an earlier hour; another gentleman, standing at his own door, on the corner of Thirteenth street and Third Avenue, of an afternoon, is clutched by the throat and robbed of his watch; a lady is robbed of her watch and port-monnaie in St. Mark's Place, before dark; a young man of sober habits disappears with $500 in his pocket between the Metropolitan Hotel and South Brooklyn; another man is murdered in his own house, stabbed and left weltering in his own blood. Cases like these are happening every day and night, and one might almost add, every hour of the night, in the streets of that city."

Says a New York paper,—"We doubt if there ever was a period in the history of our country, when crime of all kinds was as prevalent as at present. . . . The surges of crime are rising higher and higher from day to day, and the fear is not unnatural, nor vastly irrational, that they will ultimately overwhelm us."

Another New York writer says,—"that crime has increased, is increasing, and ought to be diminished in our country, but especially in this city, is a fact universally assented to, and men are very naturally inquiring why this is so, and what shall be done to stem the appalling tide and reverse its current."

Says the Christian Advocate and Journal,—"There is an alarming state of morals in our city . . . . and we fear our neighbors are not far behind us. If we have made a correct induction from the periodical press of the country, iniquity, in its various forms, is becoming fearfully prevalent and impudent."

The Toronto Christian Observer says,—"The increase of crime is becoming one of the most startling notices in our daily newspapers. Of the fact there can be no doubt. Three, four, five, and, in one case, eight murders are announced in New York for one week. Like the reports of an epidemic disease, they may sometimes show a decline, but on the whole there is a steady advance. We are becoming familiar with what, twenty years ago, would have shocked the universal conscience. The burglaries, forgeries, arsons, are in like proportions. If there be any difference, the more enormous and startling crimes are multiplying more rapidly than the minor and less bold offences. The fact, we say, is beyond all doubt, whatever may be the cause or causes."

The Colporter, the organ of the American and Foreign Bible Society, says,—"Of the one million of people in our city, (New York) and the places immediately adjacent, it is estimated there are more than eight hundred thousand who do not attend divine worship, which is a number six times as great as the entire population of the Sandwich Islands. In Philadelphia and Boston, it is believed at least three fourths of the people habitually absent themselves from church; and the same may be said of New Bedford, Fall River, Lowell and Worcester. The religious denominations, too, have greatly decreased within ten years."

Says Kendall in his Expositor,—"Crimes unprecedented in number and unequalled in atrocity, fill every section of our country with horrors, exhibiting a hardened barbarity in their details, only to be exceeded in the bosoms of demons."

Says the Boston Recorder,—"Within forty years commitments for crimes have increased in England from 5,000 to 31,000, more than six fold;—four times faster than the increase of the populaton. In Scotland the increase of crime in the same period, has arisen from 89 to 3,884—forty-three fold, and has advanced twenty-five times faster than the population."

These are but a few among many similar statements that might be given. But what do these facts show?

Our Paper.

We feel anxious that all our readers should pray earnestly that the editor of the Crisis, and all connected with its publication, may be filled with the spirit of God, doing all in their power to make it a messenger that the Lord will delight to own and bless. We are conscious that many daily prayers do ascend in our behalf, and, be assured, dear brethren and sisters, that these are of more real value to us than the richest of earth's golden mines. In vain we write and publish unless the Lord approve and bless. As we have before said, we again say, we do not wish to continue our paper a single week longer than will be for the glory of God. At present, we can honestly say, we feel his approving smile; still, we are anxious that our paper should be baptized more fully with the spirit of true christianity. We wish to make it a fountain ever sending forth the pure principles of our holy religion.

☞ Some little time since, some one lent the Editor of the Crisis an old book, entitled,—"A Dialogue of Devils." The borrower has forgotten who lent it to him, and consequently does not know where to return it. Will the owner please give the needed information?

Remember,

We wish no one to stop their paper because they have not the means to pay for it now. We will trust your honesty, for we hope that all of our readers are preparing for the coming of the Lord; consequently, we believe them to be of that class who walk "uprightly." So long as you like the paper, so long we shall be pleased to send it, knowing that you will pay soon as you can.

Mistakes.

It is very probable that we have made some mistakes in sending our bills, but if our readers will inform us, we will gladly make everything right.

The Crisis.

We wish all our subscribers to remember that the Crisis is the property of its patrons, and that our interests are mutual; that the editor and publishing committee are only their agents, having no more personal interest than the readers. The profits are employed in sending the paper and tracts to the poor. Let every one who is pleased with the Crisis, do what he can to extend its circulation. It is time to work.

Pres. Finney, from Oberlin, is preaching with much success in this city. The Lord is signally blessing his labors.

For the Crisis.

Christian Integrity.

Christian integrity is honesty, uprightness, probity, uncorruptedness, and is the legitimate consequence of a careful and faithful observance of the principles of christianity. Integrity is exhibited by some from a natural love of the same, and a just appreciation of its worth; yet it is not a christian virtue unless it springs from and is actuated by pure love and a disinterested observance of christian principles, as expressed in the revelation of God's will to men. If it is permanently established and sustained upon the broad and never fluctuating basis of scripture motives, it becomes one of the brightest ornaments of christian character, giving force and beauty to the whole assemblage of christian graces. Piety never has, does not now, and never will exist without it. Indeed piety without integrity is a perfect anomaly; yea, an absolute impossibility, and therefore how very essential is its culture. Christian integrity then, uninfluenced by any sinister motive, as the love of honor, domestic associations, unchastity, pecuniary considerations, treachery, being in the minority, extreme affliction, personal safety, governmental authority, or unchristian preferences, is well pleasing to God, and proffers the assurance of religious success and ultimate glory to its possessor. How very precious and important then is it to the saint. Such was the christian integrity of Noah, who, being with all his family connection by divine providence appropriated for the accomplishment of a specific work adequate to the world's condemnation, which therefore exposed him to the reproach of his generation, steady to his purpose, prosecuted his high mission with unflinching obedience to God, and passed a long, long period of time, through the hostile scorn of the multitude;—of Abraham, who, in compliance with the requirements of the true God whom his fathers knew not, cheerfully relinquished every home association, renounced the idolatry of his ancestors, and unrelentingly pursued his journey to a land of which he knew nothing, only, that "he should after receive it for an inheritance;"—of Lot, who poetically illustrated the important truth, that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," without the least misgiving respecting the faithfulness of God, and delighting in the obedience of the triple command of Jehovah, fled for refuge from impending ruin across the plains of Sodom, leaving his wife a monumental sacrifice to the love of the world;—of Joseph, who from motives of virtue and equity opposed the nobility of Egypt, fearless of the consequences which indeed secured the glory of God, and preserved inviolably his chastity;—of Moses, when, after refusing the honors and magnificence of the court of Egypt, he "esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than all its treasures;" and being assisted by the miraculous interposition of God, he demonstrated to the hardened king that every successive miracle would prove to him an increasingly greater curse, apprised him of the destroying angel's approach by the midnight cry of Egypt's mourners, and extorted from him the summons to the leader and host of Israel: "Rise up, and get you forth from among my people, both ye and the children of Israel; and go, serve the Lord, as ye have said;"—of Caleb and Joshua, who, amid the treachery of Israel in the wilderness, were all that constituted the nation of Israel except the children, and, as has been affirmed of another, yet equally true of them, were "Faithful found.

Among the faithless, faithful only they.
Amid innumerable false, unmoved,
Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified;
Their loyalty they kept, their love, their zeal;
Nor number, nor example with them wrought
To swerve from truth, or change their constant mind,
Though single."

Very beautiful and becoming characteristics of "another spirit;"—of Elijah, when, notwithstanding he was in the minority, he fearlessly entered into competition with the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal; proved them all liars, and their deity imaginary:—of Job, who, in the greatest extremity of his sufferings, withstood his miserable, self-sufficient comforters, who were always talking and never saying anything to the purpose; vindicating the justness of his cause even against the foes of his own house, and in the sequel of his afflictions, he became by divine appointment a mediator between God and those who had apparently delighted to enhance his sufferings; and therefore, by virtue of his christian integrity, he was favored with a twofold increase of temporal mercies, and proved himself a suitable medium through which God could express mercy to his enemies;—of the Hebrew worthies and Daniel, all of whom waived every consideration of personal safety, and in defiance of their idolatrous persecutors worshiped the Lord God of Israel only; rebuking the folly and impiety of kings and nobles, and causing them to acknowledge the only living and true God;—of the primitive christians, when forbidden by the authority of the governments under which they lived the privilege of speaking the things concerning Christ and the resurrection, in the dignity of their high moral position replied,—"whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye;" thereby presenting in vivid contrast their christian integrity with the malice of their enemies, and triumphantly demonstrated, that with the "little ones" of Jesus, the requirements of God are of paramount importance to every other consideration.

Such ought to be the christian integrity of the whole church of God, who, by a just appreciation of moral worth, may avoid the danger of being offenders of the law in one point, and being recognized as criminally violating the whole; by having our intercourse with each other predicated upon the principle of true moral equity, and therefore be preserved from equivocation or exaggeration in all our expressions of christian friendship; and by the purity of our virtues, be enabled successfully to combat all the vices and unhallowed allurements of this Noachian and Sodomitish age; proving our piety, by the grace of God, superior to all the contaminating influences of abounding iniquity, and obtaining once more the development of that truthful statement, respecting the moral power of the church, by the beloved disciple, expressed in the phraseology of the scripture, that "greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world;" indicating that the cause, principle, and consequence of scripture piety, in its moral power, is pre-eminently greater than any agency which can be brought into competition with it. Ah, yes! a church arrayed with that beautiful assemblage of christian graces expressed by the apostles, standing out in the open face of worldly influence with perfect christian integrity, as God's designed antagonist of the world, to repel its vices and as its archetype of piety and virtue, would cause infidelity to retreat from its presence and hide itself in the oblivion of its own creation; worldly mindedness would speedily retire from her circle; the church miser would cease to pay his devotions to the shrine of mammon, or leaving the church go to his own company; that bane of church harmony and christian affection, an unbridled tongue, would be by common consent silenced, and its "fire of hell" extinguished. Indeed, "time would fail me" to enumerate its virtues, to delineate the loveliness of its graces, and weigh the power and measure the extent of its influence.

Where is the christian integrity of ancient time? Where is the church who do not sacrifice to motives of convenience or expediency, interest or honor, some parts if not all that really constitute the gospel of the grace of God? Is the christian integrity of those who are professedly waiting for Christ to come to judgment, wholly unimpeachable? Is it thus with the ministry? Do we in every association, relation, and duty, present an example of Christian integrity? In our modes of defence, as well as in the reception of those principles which we believe to be true, do we sustain it unequivocally? Are we ever found "handling the word of God deceitfully," even when opposing the sentiments of others? Oh, to be right, to be perfectly upright! How easy to preach it; how hard to perform. But then, preach it we must, and if we ever would be saved, live it also. Perhaps the reader is identified with those who are waiting for the reign of Christ. Have you ever critically examined your christian integrity in its relation to the business transactions of life? Is that contract still fresh in your memory, in which you engaged to finish Mr.'s work at a specific time—a time sufficient to accomplish it in, no unforeseen circumstance occurred to prevent it, and he gave you the employment because you were a christian professor? But alas! he is disappointed; and your excuse, although it seemed to quiet his mind, never satisfied your own, but convicted you of deception. Do you remember that honest debt you contracted, perhaps for a religious paper, which you declined paying, very likely in consequence of some private or imaginary cause of difference between you and its editor or proprietor? It may have been for a variety of books or tracts for the purpose of disseminating religious truth. Did you know that, in consequence of your neglecting to pay the author or publisher, he is deeply involved in debt? God tells him to "owe NO man anything," and does he not tell you the same? Now, while you violate the command of God, you also oblige him to do so too, and does not the guilt of both rest on you? By the way, perhaps you have disposed of your interest in some lucrative business, pledging your purchaser that you would no more transact the same kind of business in the place for a stipulated time, if ever, and then from motives of pecuniary interest you have violated your contract, broken your vow, and to mammon sacrificed your christian integrity. Did you vow to your own hurt? Then, like Jephthah, change not. Brother, was it not you who promised God, that if he would give you success in your present enterprise, that you would faithfully serve him, and appropriate some part of your profits for the advancement of his cause, and having obtained your desire in your prosperity, have forgotten God? He remembers your promise. When in the hour of danger, of sickness and trial, forsaken of friends and oppressed by your enemies, you pledged yourself to God and his cause, and when deliverance was granted to you in such a manner that you could not mistake who wrought it, and still you lived as before, and thereby sacrificed your christian integrity, did you recognize the fact that you had sacrificed upon the same altar of a broken pledge, your piety also?

O, brethren, is it true that we believe that Jesus soon will come; that he will come to judgment, either to acquit or condemn us? Do we believe that unbending christian integrity is positively essential to our salvation? that the least departure from its strictest observance is fraught with dangerous and distressingly fearful consequences, that mars our confidence before God, disturbs the harmony, and impeaches the purity of christian friendship, and deals a heavy blow to the world against the genuineness of our piety? Then may the grace of God assist us in the cultivation and preservation of christian integrity, that he may "present us to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing;" and therefore "faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." Amen.

JOHN HOWELL.

"The 20th of Artaxexes."

"That the 20th of Artaxerxes did not synchronize with B. C. 444, is so well determined by chronologers, that to state the contrary in a public print would be either designedly or ignorantly stating an error. The discovery of the "Canon of Ptolemy," the accuracy of the dates of which is substantiated by more than twenty eclipses has forever settled this point; . . .

The seventy weeks cannot be dated from B. C. 445, nor 444; for then they would not have ended till A. D. 46, or 7. But Christ's crucifixion was to be in the midst of the last week; and no one, who makes any pretensions to any knowledge of the subject, places it later than A. D. 34.

1857

Others date it as early as A. D. 28; but Dr. Hales, the most logical of all, places it in A. D. 31, making the seventy weeks to end in A. D. 34. No writer possessed of any chronological information has thought that those weeks could be extended later than A. D. 37; and individuals who have attempted it, have only thereby shown their want of knowledge on this subject. Every chronologist who has dated the seventy weeks from the 20th of Artaxerxes, synchronized, not with B. C. 445, its true date, but with B. C. 454, a manifest error, and then made the seventy weeks end in A. D. 34. This error in the date of the 20th of Artaxerxes, is followed by Usher, and others, who give but twelve years to the reign of Xerxes, which was 21, and then commence the reign of Artaxerxes nine years earlier than its true date, and make him to have reigned fifty years instead of forty-one, its true length.

The word 'determined,' in Dan. 9: 24, while it may be rendered 'cut off,' or 'cut out,' can only be so by a metaphor; for one time cannot literally be cut from another. But the use of this metaphor is not proof that the seventy weeks were part of the longer period. It is not so affirmed, that conclusion was arrived at only by an inference; and that inference is shown to be erroneous by the passing of the time."—Advent Herald.

For the Crisis.

Two Thousand and Three Hundred Days.

WHEN DO THEY END?

I still believe they have not ended, and that the seventy weeks were cut off from the first part of the days, and that sixty-nine weeks or 483 years reach to the death of Christ, or the Testator; (Heb. 9: 15–18;) and that the remaining week was allotted for the confirming of the testament or covenant (Heb. 2: 3, 4,) by the apostles, his chosen administrators; and that the last heir will have become of age (which comes in under this covenant,) when the two thousand three hundred years end.

It seems almost useless to present an argument to show when they will end, for we have been mistaken so many times. The time is in the Bible, and there is no reason why we should not inquire, "how long to the end of these wonders?" as it is declared—"the wise shall understand." The arguments that I shall now present are drawn from a different source than is usually presented. I shall first commence with the reign of Herod the Great. There appears to be a general agreement in respect to the beginning and ending of his reign. He reigned thirty-seven years from the time he received the kingdom from the Romans, which was six years and seven months before the battle of Actium, which took place on the 2nd of Sept., thirty years and four months before A. D. 1. Herod's death must have occurred about A. D. 1, as that would complete his reign. Herod had three sons, and in his will left his kingdom to Archelaus, who reigned ten years, and was banished by Augustus Cæsar. To Antipas Herod, he gave Galilee and Perea, who reigned until he was banished by the successor of Tiberius; and unto Philip he gave Gaulonitis, Trachonitis, and Paneas, who reigned thirty-seven years according to Josephus in his Antiquities, (Book 18, chap. 4, sec. 6,) who says,—"about this time it was that Philip, Herod's brother, departed this life, in the 20th year of the reign of Tiberius, after he had been Tetrarch of Trachonitis, and Gaulonitis, and of the nations of the Bataneans also, thirty-seven years." A note by Wm. Whiston A. M. (who translated this work of Josephus,) on this passage, says, "this calulation from Josephus' Greek copies is exactly right." This would make the death of Philip A. D. 37; likewise the 20th year of Tiberius. Josephus states in his history of Jewish wars, (Book 2, chap. 9, sec. 5,) that "Tiberius died after he had reigned twenty-two years six months and three days," which would bring the death of Tiberius, A. D. 40, which I shall endeavor to prove was the year our Savior was crucified.

We are informed in Luke 23, that Herod (the brother of Philip) was at Jerusalem, and with "his warriors contemned" Christ. (Syriac version.) There is but one time in history, of which we are informed, when Herod was at Jerusalem under any circumstance when he could have fulfilled this prophecy, which we have recorded in Ps. 2: 1, 2.

The circumstance that brought this about was remarkable. Herod married the daughter of Aretas, king of Arabia, and lived with her a "long time," when he made up his mind to abandon her and marry Herodias, his brother Philip's wife. The daughter of Aretas left Herod and went home. Aretas raised a large army and sent to chastise Herod for his wickedness. Herod had a large army to oppose him, but Herod's army was overcome and destroyed. The Jews said it was the judgment of God upon him for killing John the Baptist. Herod wrote to Tiberius, and informed him that Aretas was rebelling against Cæsar, and informed him of the misfortune he had met with in opposing him. Tiberius, in a rage, sent word to Vitellius, who was king of Syria, to fetch Aretas to him in chains, and if he could not to bring his head. "So Vitellius (Ant. Book 18, chap. 5, sec. 3,) prepared to make war with Aretas, having with him two legions of armed men. He also took with him all those of light armature, and of the horsemen which belonged to them, and were drawn out of those kingdoms which were under the Romans, and made haste for Petra, and came to Ptolemais. But as he was marching very busily, and leading his men through Judea, the principal men met him, and desired that he would not thus march through their land; for that the laws of their country would not permit them to overlook those images which were brought into it, of which there were a great many in their ensigns: so he was persuaded by what they said, and changed that resolution of his which he had before taken in this matter. Whereupon he ordered the army to march along the great plain, while he himself with Herod the Tetrarch, and his friends, went up to Jerusalem to offer sacrifices to God, an ancient festival of the Jews then just approaching. And when he had been there, and been honorably entertained by the multitude of the Jews, he made a stay there for three days . . But when on the fourth day letters came to him, which informed him of the death of Tiberius," &c. There was sufficient time for the news to have arrived at Jerusalem, from the death of Tiberius, (who died March 16,) before the Jewish passover, which must have been A. D. 40, as I have before shown that the death of Tiberius occurred A. D. 40.

Josiah Litch in his Prophetic Exposition, Vol. 2, pages 40, 41, says "that Christ was crucified soon after the death of Tiberius Cæsar," and quotes from the same history to prove his interpretation; and likewise asserts, that it was at the Jewish passover which occurred after the death of Tiberius. It has been generally supposed that Herod had his soldiers at Jerusalem when Christ was crucified. That would not have fulfilled the prophecy, which says, "the kings of the earth and the potentates stood up, and they consulted together against the Lord, and against his Anointed . . . Herod and Pilate, with the Gentiles and the congregation of Israel have been combined together in this city, to do whatever thy hand and thy pleasure previously marked out to be done." Acts. 4: 26–28. (Syriac) Here the apostle mentions Pilate, Herod, and the Gentiles, which must have been the king of Syria, for the prophecy names kings, and potentates or rulers; and it is said that Pilate and Herod were made friends at that time. There was a good reason for that. Pilate had been trespassing upon Herod's jurisdiction sometime before, and likewise had been killing some of the Samaritans and was complained of to Vitellius, king of Syria; and Vitellius had ordered him to go to Tiberius at Rome sometime before, but before he got away the news came that Tiberius was dead, and he was anxious to become friends with Vitellius as well as with Herod. He embraced the first opportunity to become reconciled, and there could not have been an opportunity better calculated to accomplish this, for it was not only honoring Herod but it was honoring Vitellius and his friends. Again. Herod would not have been allowed to come into the jurisdiction of Pilate with an armed force while Pilate and he were at enmity, for it would be insulting to Pilate.

Perhaps many will admit that Christ was crucified soon after the death of Tiberius, and inquire at the same time, why historians, in general, placed the death of Tiberius three or four years before A. D. 40. I have but one answer to give, and that is, if Christ was crucified after the death of Tiberius, and his death had happened before A. D. 40, the two thousand three hundred years must have ended before this, and the sanctuary would have been cleansed. And I suppose that no one will claim that the sanctuary is cleansed in any sense, at the present time; and I consider that this argument is sufficient to establish the fact that historians in general, are incorrect. It will be seen at a glance, that if the sixty-nine weeks or 483 years ended at the cross in A. D. 40, the remainder of the vision would end A. D. 1857, in the spring. The question will naturally arise, how can you reconcile the 1335 days or years with this calculation? That there is good reason to believe that there are some days beyond the 1335 years, which years might have ended last fall, is evident, as I shall prove by giving a translation of Dan. 12: 11, by Charles Thompson, from the Septuagint; and would here remark, that Prideaux endorses the Septuagint, as a correct version of the scriptures, and that it was used by Christ, and the apostles, and the early christians more than any other. The translation reads thus: "Now from the time of the change of the daily sacrifice, when the abomination of desolation shall be set up, there will be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Happy he who will wait and come to the 1335 days. But as for thee, come, and go to rest, for still there will be days and hours to the final accomplishment. And thou shalt stand up for thy portion at the end of days." Charles Thompson was a learned man, and had the reputation of being a good man. The translation was made in A. D. 1806, while he was senator of the United States. I think this translation meets the case, and shows that there are some hours (days) beyond the full years, or 1335 yomeem, which, we are informed by Pick in his Hebrew Concordance, mean full years.

M. E. GREEN.

New York, Feb. 24, 1857.

Divine Order.

A. ROSS.

(Concluded.)

The next office suggested in the divine economy of heaven to be considered is, that of deacon. "Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the servants in Christ Jesus at Philippi, with the bishops, elders and deacons." Phil. 1: 1.

THE WORK OF DEACONS.

To distribute alms, serve tables, attend to the financial concerns of the church. "In those days when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration. Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, it is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables. Wherefore, brethren, look you out seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business." Acts 6: 1–3.

The necessary characteristics of a deacon are brought to view in 1 Tim. 3: 11.

CHURCH ORDINANCES.

Baptism and the Lord's supper are the sacraments introduced for the observance of the church. These are miniatures of his death, (which was designed to be kept always in remembrance) having embodied in them a typical feature of the glory to be revealed. Says Paul to the Romans, 6: 3–5,—"Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." No person can be baptized understandingly who does not believe in the death and resurrection of Christ; and no one thus believing can repudiate the doctrine of a future, literal resurrection. Christ's death and resurrection, our profession of faith, baptism, newness of life, final resurrection, are so many different elements which make up a great whole; and the denial of one of those elements is necessarily the denial of all. "What shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?" inquired the great apostle. Or, in other words, why does this shadow exist if there is no substance? The ritual law was but a shadow of a coming substance, and that, the body of Christ. So baptism is not only a confession of our faith in Christ's death, but also a shadow of that resurrection which his death and resurrection secure to us. It is to be feared that many have been baptized without being properly instructed upon this point. They have been taught that Baptism is the door into the visible church, when it is but an ordinance in the church, consequently, they remain in darkness in relation to the proper import of the ordinances of the Lord's house. The institution of the Lord's supper is an acknowledgment of our faith in the Man of sorrows, and also a pledge the great Redeemer left with his disciples, if he went away he would return; hence, "as oft as ye do this ye do show forth the Lord's death till he come." This ordinance points in two directions. It not only points to Calvary's cross, with the sacrifice of expiation suspended in agony most intense, saying, "behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," but it also points down to the end of human probation, when the Son of God shall be revealed as one coming from Edom, traveling in the greatness of his strength, saying, "behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen."

Ecclesiastical conventions were held by the apostles for the purpose of considering questions of importance. See Acts 15: 5–29.

CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

"Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head." Psa. 141: 5. "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between him and thee alone. If he shall hear thee thou hast gained thy brother, but if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them tell it to the church, what if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican." Matt. 18: 15–17. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." Gal. 6: 1.

Directions for the edification of the church. "As we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait our ministering; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation; he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness. Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another." Rom. 12: 4–10. "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." Rom. 14: 19. "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification; for even Christ pleased not himself." Rom. 15: 1.

Brotherly love, fellowship, and unity in churches required and exemplified.

"Then Jonathan and David made a covenant, because he loved him as his own soul." 1 Sam. 18: 3, "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard even Aaron's beard; that went down to the skirts of his garments." Ps. 133: 1. 2. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." John 13: 34, 35. "Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another." Rom. 12: 10. "The God of patience and consolation grant you to be like-minded one toward another, according to Christ Jesus." Rom. 15: 5. "I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment." 1 Cor. 1: 10. "Be perfect, . . . live in peace; and the God of love and peace be with you." 2 Cor. 13: 11. "As touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you, for yourselves are taught of God to love one another." 1 Thess. 4: 9. See also Heb. 13: 1; 1 Pet. 1 22; 2: 17; 2 Pet. 1: 5–7; John 3: 11.

Limits of Christian fellowship prescribed.

"John, the son of Hanani, the seer, went out to meet him, and said to king Jehoshaphat, shouldst thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord?" 2 Chron. 19: 2. "I wrote unto you in an epistle not to company with fornicators, Yet not altogether the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world. But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat. 1 Cor. 5: 9–11. "I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils." 1 Cor. 10: 20. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them." Eph. 5: 11. "We command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly." 2. Thess. 3: 6.

The church of Christ one body.

"By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles." 12 Cor. 1: 13. "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling." Eph. 4: 4.

Church unity and fellowship not to be extended to unbelievers. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? 2 Cor. 6: 14, 15.

I have given the above quotations without note or comment of my own, believing they are so lucid and plain that any explanations I might offer would only have a tendency to obscure, in the room of making clearer. Simple faith in God and his word is all-sufficient to make us wise unto salvation.

"The Seven Seals."

I still have a quantity of these tracts on hand for sale. I now offer to send fifty copies, pre paid, for one dollar, as I wish to obtain funds for the publication of another tract. Direct to Vermillion, Dakota Co., Minnesota.

EXHORTATION.

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand." Rom. 13: 12.

Let us be up and doing;
We cannot be deceived,
That our salvation's nearer,
Than when we first believed.
The night is now fast wearing,
And soon will break the dawn,
Which ushers in the glory—
The resurrection morn.

And as the fig-tree's buddings
Bespeak that summer's near;
Lo! all the signs foretelling,
Christ soon will reappear.
Then let us up, be doing,
Keep all our armor bright;
Get ready for the conflict,
Be ready for the fight—

"The fight of faith"—and conquer,
As soldiers of the cross;
And for the sake of Jesus,
Count all things here but dross.
Tight buckle on the armor,
The panoply of God; *
And with the sword two-edged,
Which is the blessed word,

Ye shall achieve a triumph,
In spite of death and hell;
And enter in the kingdom,
And there forever dwell.
O, what a blissful future,
Is for the saints of God!
They shall inherit glory,
And reign with "Christ the Lord"—

As "kings and priests" in ages,
Of splendor yet to come;
With heavenly "fashioned" bodies,
Bright shining as the sun.
Then let us up, be doing,
For, lo! the Savior's near;
Soon "every eye shall see him,"
With angel bands appear.

THE QUIET MIND.

I have a treasure which I prize,
It's like I cannot find;
There's nothing like it on the earth,—
'Tis this, a "quiet mind."

But 'tis not that I'm stupefied,
Or senseless, dull, or blind;
'Tis God's own peace within my heart,
Which forms my "quiet mind."

My Savior's death and risen life
To give this were designed,
And that's the root, and that's the branch,
Of this my "quiet mind."

The love of God within my breast,
My heart to his doth bind;
This is the mind of heaven on earth—
This is my "quiet mind."

I've many a cross to take up now,
And many left behind;
But present troubles move me not,
Nor shake my "quiet mind."

And what may be to-morrow's cross,
I never seek to find;
The Savior says,—leave that me,
And keep a "quiet mind."

And well I know the Lord hath said,
To make my heart resigned;
That mercy still shall follow such
As have this "quiet mind."

I meet with pride of wit and wealth,
And scorn, and looks unkind;
It matters nought—I envy not,
For I've a "quiet mind."

I'm waiting now, to see the Lord,
Who's been to me so kind;
I want to thank Him face to face,
For this my "quiet mind."

Conversation Between a Brother and Sister.

No. V.

Bro.—I have been thinking of your suggestion that the lake of fire and brimstone of Rev. may be a battle-field, and should like to hear further reasons for the supposition.

Sr.—I have already given my principal reason, which is, that the objects destroyed in that lake are GOVERNMENTS, symbolized by beast, false prophet, &c. Certainly, John could not have chosen a finer figure in describing a modern battle-field (as it must have appeared to him in vision,) than that of a lake of fire and brimstone. Recollect, John wrote before the invention of gunpowder, and would of course use language then in use to describe what he saw. Let me read Rev. 16: 17, 18, as I understand it,—"and the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air, . . . And there were voices, (of command) and thunders, (of artillery) and lightnings," (of firearms) &c.

Bro.—Well, the idea is quite new, and I am not prepared to contest the question, therefore we will waive the subject for the present. I would now like to call your attention to Jude 7. I infer from the language here used, that the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrha are now suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. You see, the participle is in the present tense—sufFERING.

Sr.—The text is speaking of the cities, and says they are set forth as an example Now suppose the inhabitants were at this time in such a place as you fancy; what example could that be to the world, since no one sees them, or knows anything about it? But the burning of the cities was an example and a solemn warning to the world. Read 2 Pet. 2: 6,—"and turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an example to those that after should live ungodly." You see, this turning of those cities INTO ASHES, is what Jude calls an eternal fire; and you will see by reading Mal. 4: 3, that the wicked are to be turned into ashes, which destruction is called in other places everlasting fire; not that the burning in either case was, or will be an eternal process, but eternal in its effects, as putting a final end to the cities in the one instance, and to the wicked in the other. See Heb. 6: 2,—"eternal judgment;" not that the judgment must be eternally in session, but that its decisions are to be final.

Bro.—Here is a passage which certainly implies the idea of the separate existence of the soul. Luke 23: 46,—"and when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," &c.

Sr.—If Jesus, when dying, is not quoting Ps. 31: 5, he uses the very language of David when not dying; "into thine hand I commit my spirit; thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth." And I can say every morning, and every noon, and every night, "into thine hand I commit my spirit; thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth."

Bro.—But here is Stephen's expression, Acts 7: 59,—"Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." What can you say to this?

Sr.—And so saying, "he fell asleep;" not went away to glory. Of course, in such an hour as that, Stephen would most emphatically commend himself to God.

Bro.—Will you now turn to 2 Cor. 5: 1. "For we know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens."

Sr.—Eternal, not eternally in the heavens. It is an eternal house, and is now in the heavens. John, in his vision on the isle of Patmos, sees it coming down upon the new earth. Rev. 21: 2.

Bro.—We will read the fourth verse. "For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life."

Sr.—"Not that we would be unclothed, (or disembodied,) but clothed upon," &c. We shall understand Paul's meaning by reading Rom. 8: 23,—"even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." You see now, what it is for which the church groans. It is for the redemption of the body, when mortality shall be swallowed up of life, at the resurrection of the dead.

Bro.—How will you explain the 6th verse?—"Whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord." And also the 8th verse,—"willing rather to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord."

Sr.—I seldom attempt to explain scripture, but simply read and believe it. This passage is explained by the intervening verse;—"for (because) we walk by faith, not by sight." That is, when we walk by faith, we are absent from the body and present with the Lord; but when we walk by sight, we are at home in the body and absent from the Lord. Paul, in another place, speaks of being absent from his brethren in body but present in spirit.

Bro.—Let us read the 10th verse,—"for we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body," &c. Does not this imply that he will be out of the body when standing before the judgment seat?

Sr.—Look at the text again, and you will see that "done" and "his" are in italics, consequently, are not in the original. Now read it, without the supplied words,—"that every one may receive the things in body according," &c.; implying that he will be in body when standing before the judgment seat.

Bro.—Will you please turn to Phil. 1: 21–23. "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain; but if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor; yet what I should choose, I wot not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better."

Sr.—Far better than what? Why, than either to live or die. He has just said he had no choice between life or death; but he has a choice for something which is far better than either; namely, to depart and be with Christ. Read 1 Thess. 4: 14. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." You perceive here is where Paul's desire to depart and be with Christ will be realized. You recollect the expression of his hope,—"henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the righteous Judge shall give me at that day." Paul nowhere expresses a hope to be with Christ till that day.

Bro.—I will refer you back to the 21st verse. "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

Sr.—Gain to what? Why just read the verse before it. "So now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death."

LINES.

"He giveth His beloved sleep."

The toiling, hurried day is gone,
And night, deep, silent night comes on,
Drawing above the pillowed head
A curtain soft of starry shade;
The blessed hush of balmy rest
Steals, soothing, o'er the throbbing breast.
The sweat-drop dries upon the brow
Of the task-burdened laborer now;
The poor thought-weary brain is still,
The heart forgets its woes to feel.
The eye hath ceased awhile to weep,
The hands their restless move to keep;
The feet no longer hasting run
Their wonted round, but with the sun
The tired frame to rest sinks down;
An arm unseen around it's thrown,—
For Oh! above the christian's bed,
An angel-watch his wing hath spread.
Our Father safe His own doth keep—
"He giveth His beloved sleep."
How sweet to lay us down in peace,
And know His love-care will not cease;
To wake, His name to praise, and pray —
Strength needful for another day;
For He through all life's ills will keep,
Who "giveth His beloved sleep."

The Works of Demons.

"They are the spirits of devils working miracles." Rev. 16: 14.

We have just read the following startling phenomenon in The Tipton Advertiser, published in Iowa, Sat. Feb. 14, 1857. We expect to hear of greater things soon. The last signs are passing before us; soon Jesus will come.

A NEW PHASE OF SPIRITUALISM.

"We have received the following letter from Dr. John Moreton, a gentleman of veracity and high professional standing"

* * * *

Grand Traverse, Mich. Dec. 23, '56.

EDITOR ENQUIRER:—I send you the following account of a most extraordinary event or transaction—or what you will—because in my opinion, it ought not to be suppressed: but on the contrary, thoroughly investigated. * * * * * *

I left your city to establish myself here, as you well remember, sometime in July last—a young and inexperienced physician. Almost the first patient I was called to visit was a Mrs. Hayden—a woman of thirty-five years of age, a strong constitution and a well balanced mind, (apparently) and (apparently) with little or no imagination. She was, however, a "spiritualist," with the reputation of being a superior "medium." Her usual physician, Dr. J. N. Williams, was absent—hence her application to me. I found her laboring under a severe attack of typhus fever, which threatened to prove fatal. Having prescribed for her I left promising to send Dr. W. as soon as he returned. This was on Saturday morning. At night Dr. W. took the patient off my hands, and I did not see her again until Friday evening of the ensuing week. I found her dying and remained with her until her decease which took place precisely at midnight. She was, or appeared to be rational during the whole of my visit, though I had been informed that she had been delirious the greater part of the week. There was nothing remarkable about her symptoms. I should say the disease had taken its natural course.

At the time of her decease there were in the room, beside myself, her husband, Mrs Green, (her sister,) and Mrs. Miles (a neighbor.) Her husband, whom I particularly noticed, was very thin and weak, then suffering from quick consumption, already beyond recovery. He bore the character of a clear-minded, very firm, illiterate but courteous man, a strenuous unbeliever in spiritualism.

There had been some subdued conversation—such as is natural in such scenes—the patient taking no part in it, except to signify, in a faint, and gradually diminishing voice her wants, until about an hour before her death, when a sudden and indescribable change came over her features, voice, and whole appearance—a change which her husband noticed by saying with, as I thought, wholly unwarranted bitterness.

"There go those cursed spirits again."

The patient thereupon unclosed her eyes, and fixed a look of unutterable emotion on her husband—a look so direct, searching and unwavering, that I was not a little startled by it. Mr. Hayden met it with something like an unhappy defiance, and finally asked of his wife what she wanted. She immediately replied in a voice of perfect health. "You know."

I was literally astonished at the words and the voice in which the words were uttered. I had often read and heard of a return of volume and power of voice just preceding dissolution; but the voice of the patient had none of the unnatural intonation of such—it was as I have said perfectly healthy. In a few moments, she continued, in the same voice, and with her eyes still fixed upon her husband.

"William, in your secret soul you do believe."

"Wife," was the imploring reply, "that is the devil which has stood between us and heaven for so many months. We are both at the very verge of the grave; and in God's name let him be buried first."

"You dare not disbelieve."

"I do!" he replied, excited by the manner, "while you are dying—nay, if you were dead, and should speak to me, I dare not believe."

"Then," she said, "I will speak to you when I am dead. I will come to you in your latest moment, and with a voice from the grave I will warn you of your time to follow me.

"But I shall not believe a spirit."

"I will come in the body and speak to you; REMEMBER!"

She then closed her eyes, and straightway sank into her former state.

In a few moments—as soon as we had somewhat recovered from the shock of this extraordinary scene—her two children were brought into the room, to receive her dying blessing. She partially aroused herself, and placing a hand on the head of each, she put up a faint prayer to the throne of grace—faint in voice indeed, but a prayer in which the strength of her great unpolished soul heart and mind was exerted to its utmost, dying limit—such a prayer as seraph might attempt, but none but a dying wife and mother could accomplish. From that moment her breathing grew rapidly and more difficult; and at twelve o'clock she expired apparently without a struggle.

I closed her eyes, straightened and composed her limbs, and was about to leave the house, when Mrs. Green requested me to send over two young ladies from my boarding house, to watch with the dead. All this occupied some ten minutes.

Suddenly Mrs. Miles screamed, and Mr. Hayden started up from the bedside where he had been sitting. The supposed corpse was sitting erect in the bed, and struggling to speak! Her eyes were still closed, and, save her open mouth and quivering tongue, there were all the looks of death in her face. With a heave of the chest, at last the single word came forth:

"REMEMBER!"

Her jaw fell back to its place, and she again lay down as before. I now examined her minutely. That she was dead, there could be no further shadow of doubt; and so I left the house.

On the following day, Dr. Williams made a careful and minute post mortem examination of the body. I was prevented by business, from attending, but was and am informed by the Doctor, that he found her brain but very slightly affected, (an unusual fact in persons dying of typhus fever,) but that her lungs were torn and rent extensively, as if by a sudden, single and powerful effort, and suffused partially, with coagulated blood. These were all the noticeable features of the case. She was buried on the afternoon of the same day.

* * * *

About two weeks after the death of his wife, I was called to visit Mr. Hayden. On my way, I met Dr. Williams and told him my errand, expressing some surprise at the preference of the family for myself, as I knew him to be a safe and experienced practitioner. He replied that nothing could hire him to enter that house again. He "had seen things there—well, I would find out when I got there." I was considerably amused by the Doctor's manner and warmth; and beguiled my way by fancying what had alarmed him—a physician—from his duty.

On my arrival, I found no person present with the patient except Mrs. Green, who informed me that the spirits had been playing such pranks that not a soul, Dr. W. included, could be induced to remain. The children had been gone some time. They were at her house.

Found the patient very low, and with no prospect of surviving the attack. He was, however, quite free from pain, though very weak. While I was in the house, I noticed many manifestations of the presence of that power called spiritualism. Chairs and tables were moved and removed, billets of wood thrown upon the fire, and doors opened and shut, without any apparent agency. I heard struggles and unaccountable noises, too; and felt an unusual sensation, caused, no doubt, by the mysteries which surrounded and mocked me. Noticing my manner, the patient observed, "It is nothing. You must get used to it, Doctor."

"I should not be content unless I could explain them, as well as become indifferent to them," I replied.

This opened the way to a long conversation during which I probed my patient's mind to the bottom, but without detecting a shadow of belief. Speaking of his wife he said:

"You heard Ellen promise to warn me of my time to die?"

"I did—but do you believe her?"

"No. If it is possible, she will keep her word in spite of heaven or hell. But it is simply impossible. She promised to come in the body and speak to me. I shall accept no other warning from her save the literal meaning of her words."

"And what then?"

"How much of the body is there left, even now, Doctor? and she has not come yet. She promised to come from the grave. Can she do it? No, no—it's all a humbug—a delusion: poor Ellen! Thank God, Doctor, the devil which so haunted her life and stood between her soul and mine cannot reach her now."

"But if she should come; you may be deceived."

"I cannot. Others must see her, too, and hear her. I shall believe no spectre, if there are such things. Her body as it is, or will be—let that speak if it can!"

From that day up to the hour of his death, I was with him almost constantly; and was daily introduced to some new and startling phenomenon. The neighbors had learned to shun the house and even the vicinity, as they would the plague, and strange stories traveled from gossip to gossip, acquiring more of the marvelous at every repetition. Nevertheless, my practice increased.

On the morning of November 30th, I called earlier than usual. During this visit, the manifestations of a supernatural presence were more frequent, wild and violent, than ever before. I was informed that they had been exceedingly violent during the preceding night. Their character, too, had greatly changed. Besides the moving of all movable articles, the tinkling of glasses and the rattle of tin ware, there were frequent and startling sounds, as of whispered conversation, singing, and subdued laughter—all perfect imitations of the human voices but too low to enable me to detect the words used, if words they were. Still however, none of the unusual sounds had entered the sick room. They followed the footsteps of Mrs. Green, like a demon echo, but paused upon the threshold of that room as if debarred by a supreme power from entering there.

I found Mr. Hayden much worse and sinking very fast. He had passed a bad night. Doubtful whether he would survive to see another morning, I left him promising to call at evening, and spend the night with him, resolved in my secret thoughts to be in at the death. If there was to be a ghostly warning I meant to hear it, and, if possible, solve the strange enigma.

* * * *

The day had been exceedingly cold and stormy, and the night had already set in, dark and dismal with a fierce gale and a driving storm of rain and hail, when I again stood beside my patient.

The moment I looked at him I perceived unmistakable indications of the near approach of death upon his features. He was free from pain, his mind perfectly clear; but his life was ebbing away with every feeble breath, like the slow burning out of an exhausted lamp,

Meanwhile the storm rose to a tempest and the gloom grew black as death in the wild night without. The wind swept in tremendous gusts through the adjoining forest, rattling the icy branches of the trees, and came wailing and shrieking through every crack and cranny of the building.

Within there was yet a wilder commotion. All that had been said or sung, written or dreamed, of ghostly visitations, was then and there enacted. There was the ringing of bells, moving of furniture, crash of dishes, whispers, howls, crying, laughter, whistling, groaning, heavy and light footsteps, and wild music, as if in very mockery of the infernal regions. All these sounds grew wilder with the rising gale, until towards midnight they were almost insufferable.

As for us three—the patient, Mrs. Green and myself—we were as silent as death itself. Not a word passed our lips after eight o'clock. As for the state of our minds God only knows. Mine in the wild whirl of thought and event which followed forgot all of the past save what I have recalled and penned bit by bit above. I remember only looking for the final catastrophe, which grew rapidly nearer, with a constant endeavor to concentrate all my faculties of mind and sense upon the phenomenon which I, at least, had began to believe would herald the loss of my patient.

As it grew closer upon twelve o'clock, (for upon the striking of that hour had my thoughts fixed themselves for the expected demonstration) my agitation became so great that it was with extreme difficulty I could control myself.

Nearer and nearer grew the fatal moment—for fatal I perceived it would be to the patient at least; and at last the seconds trembled on the brink of midnight; the clock began to strike. One—two—three! I counted the strokes of the hammer, which seemed as though they never would have done—ten—eleven—twelve! I drew my breath again! The last lingering echo of the last stroke had died fairly away; and as yet, there was no token of any presence save our own.

All was silent. The wind had lulled for a moment and not a sound stirred the air within the house. The ghosts had fled!

I arose and approached the bedside. The patient was alive—drawing his breath very slowly—dying. The intervals between his gasps grew longer; then he ceased to breathe altogether—he was dead.

Mrs. Green was sitting in her place, her elbows resting on her knees, her face buried in the palms of her hands. I closed the open mouth and pressed down the eyelids of the dead.

"It is over," I whispered.

"Thank God," was her fervent reply.

* * * *

Then we both started. There was a rustling of the bed clothes! Mr. Hayden was sitting erect, his eyes wide open, his chest heaving with a mighty effort for one inspiration of the blessed air. Before I could reach him, he spoke:

"My God! she is coming!"

At the same instant the wind came back with a sudden and appalling gust, and a wild shriek as it swept through the crevices of the building. Then there was a crash of the outer door! then a staggering and uncertain step in the outer room! It approached the sick room! the latch lifted! the door swung open! and then my God! what a spectacle!!

I wonder even now that I dare describe it—think of it—remember it. I wonder I believed it then, or do now: that I did not go mad, or drop down dead.

Through the open door there stepped a figure—a figure not of Mrs. Hayden, not of her corpse, not of death—but, a thousand times more horrible, a thing of corruption and decay, of worms and rottenness!

The features were nearly gone, and the skull in places, gleamed through white and terrible. Her breast and abdomen and neck had been eaten away, her limbs were putrid green and inexpressibly loathsome. The cavities of her shoulders, chest, abdomen, neck and thighs were a living mass of great and ugly grave worms, which as she stepped, dropped away to the floor, together with gouts and clots of putrid flesh! Her trail over the threshold and into the outer darkness was marked by these loathsome tokens, a luminous line of corruption and crawling worms, the effluvia of which was most horrible!

And yet to these putrescent jaws there was born a voice—smothered, indeed, and strange, but distinct:

"Come! William! they wait you—I wait!"

I dared not turn my eyes from the intruder—I could not if I dared—though I heard a groan behind me and a fall.

Then it—the thing before me—sank down upon the floor in a heap, dark and loathsome—a heap of putrescence, and dismembered fragments.

I remember that I did not faint, that I did not cry out. How long I stood transfixed, fascinated, I know not; but at last with an effort and a prayer, turned to the bed. Mr. Hayden had fallen upon the floor, face downward, stone dead. I raised and replaced him, I composed his limbs, I closed his eyes, I bound up his chin, I crossed his hands upon his breast and tied them there. Then I bore out the body of his sister, insensible but not dead, into the pure air—out of that horror and stench into the storm and darkness—out of death into life again!"

"Mrs. Josepha H. Green, being duly sworn, deposes and says that the letter of Doctor John Moreton, hereto appended, which she has read, is strictly true so far as it goes, though much of the history of what occurred at her brother's (the late Hayden) house is omitted, and she deposes of her own knowledge.

James Husson being duly sworn, deposes and says that he in company with George Green, Albert J. Bailey and Henry K. Sead, on the 1st day of Dec. last past, in the afternoon of said day, did go to the house of William H. Hayden, then deceased, for the purpose of burying the body of said Hayden deceased; and that they found upon the floor of the room in which the body of the said deceased lay, and near the door of the said room, the putrid remains of a human corpse—a female, as the deponent verily believes and avers; and that they carried away and buried the body of said Hayden deceased, and found the grave of the wife of the said Hayden, deceased in the month of August last, open at the head of the said grave, and that said grave was empty of the body of the said wife of the said Hayden deceased; the body of the said wife of the said Hayden being gone from the said grave and that they then returned to the said house, where said Hayden died; and after removing the furniture from said house, the deponents' did, at the request of Mrs. Green, sister of the said Hayden, deceased, and of Mr. Green, brother-in-law of the said Hayden, deceased, set fire to said house, and that said house was thereby entirely consumed, with all that remained in said house, was burned to ashes. This I aver on my own knowledge. JAMES HUSSON.

We aver and solemnly swear that the above affidavit is throughout entirely true of our own knowledge.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy 6 months	$1.00
For a single copy 3 months	50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

For the Crisis.

THE GREAT HARVEST.

Look out upon the ripened earth,
The ready grain behold;
Go forth and labor in the field,—
More precious far than gold,
Will be the wages you'll receive,
Soon as the work is done;
Eternal life is the reward
Bestowed by Christ, the Son.

Quick! thrust the sharpened sickle in!
You need no longer wait;
The wicked tares from the good wheat
You safe can separate.
And now the reaping time is past,
Advance with one accord;
Gather the wheat into the barn,
Safe garnered for the Lord.

But into bundles bind the tares,
Them into darkness launch;
And He, whose right it is to rule,
Shall burn them root and branch:
And spread their ashes o'er the plains,
O'er hills and mountain slopes,
Where the redeemed shall tread upon
Them, and their ruined hopes.

Time.

"To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven." Eccl. 3: 1.

Time is essential to "every purpose," and cannot be dissociated from it.

Time to a note of $1000 gives it all its value. The item of time in such a note is worth $1000; for without date, without time, it would never reach maturity—never be due; and hence it would be worthless.

Time was given to Noah—to Israel in Egypt—to Judah in Babylon; and the "purpose" was bounded and determined by the time.

Time was of old signified through God's prophets "for the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow" at his appearing the second time! 1 Pet. 1: 6–13; Heb. 9: 28.

Time was embraced in the "which things the angels desire to look into." 1 Pet. 1: 12; Dan. 8: 13–19; 9: 21–27. The Angels and Prophets of God are not fools! Hence we are not fools for following their example!

Time was signified for the cutting off of Messiah, Dan. 9: 25; and one week (to fill up the 70,) for confirming the covenant.

Time was named in answer to the question, "how long . . . to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" It was "unto 2300 days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." This is God's light that he has given us to the length of "the vision and prophecy." Slight it who may.

Time here is called "the time appointed;" "at the time appointed the end (shall be.") This "appointed time," this "vision" of the Gentile desolation has no date, save "the going forth of the command went to restore and build Jerusalem." Dan. 9: 25.

The time and manner of this "going forth of the commandment" is found in Ezra 6: 14; the Jews "builded according to the commandment of the God of Israel; and according to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes, King of Persia." The command and the king is one yet the three names are given, embracing all of Artaxerxes,—not a part to the exclusion of other parts, but the whole of his agency in relation to this command.

The time for the "going forth" of this command by Artaxerxes in his last commission to Nehemiah, is dated B. C. 444 by Hales, Townsend, Kitto and Ferguson. The 7th of Artaxerxes being located in 457, in about all chronological dates, the 20th, thirteen years later, must be 444! Thence

"The time appointed"—69 weeks—483 days or years, reaches to A. D. 40; and the remnant, 1817, to this Spring.

The time of Messiah's being "cut off" is placed by certain facts in A. D. 40. Thus, Herod was king in Judea at his birth, and reigned a short time, and then died, at the time of an eclipse; probably Jan. 8, B. C. 1 of our era, Philip, his successor, reigned 37 years, and died in the 20th of Tiberius; but Tiberius, the Roman Emperor, reigned thence 2 years 5 months and 3 days, till the year of Christ's death. These 37 added to 2, make 39 full years, and the 2 fractions require that Jesus should have been 40 at his death. Chronologers have tangled the dates to make a harmony with some theory. But the last symbol of Rome is fulfilled in the Napoleon dynasty; the "peace and safety" cry comes up just where the 2300 years seem to end. "Be ye also ready."

Cannot Pay.

"I should like the Crisis, but I cannot pay for it. I am poor—have a large family—am in debt—do not feel able to send a single cent to the Crisis office." Indeed! well, if that is the case, we must contrive to send the Crisis to you free. We love to help the really poor ones. We have a small, very small, fund on hand to do so with. But are you not mistaken as to your real condition and ability? Let us see. Do you use tobacco? "A little." How much, say? "O, a very little indeed." Five cents worth a week? "Yes, I think it likely." Well, five cents worth a week is ten cents worth in two weeks, and twenty cents worth a month—twelve months in a year—12 times 20=240. Why, that is two dollars and forty cents a year! and the Crisis only costs two dollars! and there is 40 cents over for Horace to use up in giving away tracts! Dear me! You are not so poor as you thought for. Just leave off making a dirty man or woman of yourself by the ungodly, filthy use of tobacco, and you can pay for the Crisis. Do you use tea and coffee? "Of course I do." Of course you do! What for? "For my health." For your health! I would like to have you scare up a stouter, happier, healthier man than I am—I weigh almost 200—am hearty as a bear—sleep like a log—can roar like a lion—travel in all weather and under all circumstances—preach from one to three times a day, most of the time—calculate to bathe all over in stark cold water 365 times a year—do not have any shaking nerves—and my common drink is water. Tea and coffee to the —— I do not know of any other creature that will use it but the human creature! "But cold water does not agree with me." Oh! well, drink warm water then, with milk and sugar, but for mercy's sake do not poison it with the juice of a foreign plant. What does your tea and coffee cost you? "Oh, not much; I only drink it once a day." Think that costs a cent? "Well, I suppose it does." And you drink coffee once a day? "Yes." Does that cost a cent, too? "I presume as much as that." Two cents a day. "Well, two cents a day is fourteen cents a week, twenty-eight cents in two weeks, fifty-six cents a month, as sure as my name is Edwin! Twelve months in a year—12 times 56. Let us see. 56 X 12=672.

Six dollars and seventy-two cents! That would pay for the Crisis several times over. Why, brother, you might pay for yours, and then have four dollars and seventy-two cents to help some one poorer than yourself. Six dollars and seventy-two cents for useless and unhealthy drinks, and two dollars and forty cents for smoking, snuffing, and chewing poison! $6.72 added to $2.40=$9.12.

Nine dollars and twelve cents for superfluity of drink and habits! You are a child of the Holy God, and wilfully waste every year nine dollars and twelve cents! The Crisis struggling for life, and you willfully wasting nine dollars and twelve cents a year! The poor preachers, some of them, hardly able to find their families food and raiment, and you willfully wasting nine dollars and twelve cents a year! The Eternal God about to judge the world, and you, professing to look for the event, willfully wasting nine dollars and twelve cents a year! And are there not some other foolish and hurtful habits and articles that might be divorced and we be the better off, both temporally and morally? Hark.

"WHATSOEVER YE DO, WHETHER YE EAT OR DRINK, DO ALL TO THE GLORY OF GOD"!!!

For the Crisis.

"Let Me not be ashamed of my Hope."

Earth has many joys. Its lovely garniture, its gushing music, its golden sunshine, its thousand varied charms we all love. The blessed intercourse with friends who make life so pleasant and everything we love more dear, we highly prize. But earth's joys are mingled with alloy; its pleasures are transitory, its flowers fade, its blue skies are shaded by clouds and storms. The dear ones who seem like a part of ourselves are laid in the grave, and their places know them no more. And, worse than this, sin, that cruel blight o earth, has found a dwelling-place in every human heart. We feel its power in our own hearts; we see its sad effects on those around us. Oh! we hate its poisonous influence, and long for freedom from its polluting stains.

It is then that Inspiration's voice sounds sweetly on our ears, and with joy we learn that a ransom has been paid for the guilty. Hope bids us look to the Crucified and live,—points us to joys most pure, to a land all fair, where sorrow, sin, and death will never annoy. This land I hope to gain. I know it will cost a few sighs, a few tears, much heart-searching, much denying of self. A litle scorn it may be my lot to endure, but the contempt of the proud shall not cause me to "be ashamed of my hope." Ever will I remember that the service of Christ is honorable; that He is "King of Kings and Lord of Lords"—the "chief among ten thousand." And when I am told by the word of truth that this glorious Being is soon to appear to save the meek of the earth, to release those who trust in Him from all evil, shall I not gladly believe it? Shall I not rejoice that the good of all ages who have so long remained under the reign of the King of Terrors, will be gathered—a glorified company—to praise Him who purchased this great salvation for them?

Ah! I will be ashamed that in the blaze of gospel light, with so many precious promises before me, I am so prone to wander, that I go with such a "slow and faltering pace." I will be sorry that my love is so cold, and dull, and faint. I will strive to keep God's precepts diligently. "Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all thy commandments."

O, our hope is precious, affording consolation in the darkest hours, cheering us even when sorrows are thickly strewn around. And, in the language of another, "if God's children find joy and peace in believing, even now, what tongue shall tell their feelings when they behold the King in His beauty! If the report of the land that is far off has been sweet to them in the wilderness, what pen shall describe their happiness when they see it with their own eyes? If it has cheered them now and then to meet two or three like-minded in this evil world, how their hearts will burn within them, when they see a multitude that no man can number, the least defects of each purged away, and not one false brother in the list! If the narrow way has been a way of pleasantness to the scattered few who have traveled it with their poor frail bodies, how precious shall their rest seem in the day of the gathering together!

Unity of Spirit.

Endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." Eph. 4: 3.

The importance of adhering to the principle contained in this text, cannot be over estimated. If we would become sons of God, we must consent to be led by the Spirit of God; and that spirit will lead all who will follow it into a state of brotherly love and fellowship with each other, and into unity, or harmony with itself. But as long as there is no concord with Christ and Belial, so long every attempt to unite truth and error will prove unavailing. Men may convene a council, and agree upon terms upon which they will establish a confederacy; but if that confederacy is not established upon gospel principles, the unity of the Spirit does not there exist. As the Spirit is the leading agent in establishing union among the disciples of Christ, such union when established must stand upon a foundation composed of principles, or elements which are in every respect compatible with the Spirit. Hence, the unity of the Spirit consists in being brought into harmony, or agreement with the Spirit.

But the question arises, what is that uniting Spirit?

I remark, that spirit does not represent any natural principle or affection of the human heart; but it is a holy principle which emanates from God, and is the representative of the one living and true God, and was sent into the world for the express purpose of operating upon the mind and conscience of men. In John 14: 16, 17, that spirit is clearly defined: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." Having learned what that Spirit is we appeal to the Savior for information respecting the office of the Spirit. "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, (spirit,) whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me; for he shall take of mine and shall show it unto you." John 14: 26; 16: 13, 14.

From the foregoing testimony of Jesus, we learn,

1. That that uniting spirit is the Spirit of truth. Therefore as no lie is of the truth, we ought not to expect the Spirit of truth to use its influence in establishing a union upon a platform of error, or of truth and error combined.

2. We learn that the Spirit emanates from God. Therefore as God is a pure and holy being, that spirit which represents Him, and which is like himself, pure and holy, will not contaminate itself by communing with the spirit of darkness.

3. We learn that the Spirit of truth was to be in and abide with the church of Christ. And by searching the divine record, we find that on the day of Pentecost, after Christ's ascension, when the disciples were "all with one accord in one place," "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost," (spirit) "and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance;" and from that time, until a sect arose from among the Pharisees who said that it was needful for them to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses, perfect harmony prevailed throughout the church. They were all of one mind; they all spoke the same thing. They were in unity with the spirit of truth.

4. We learn that the office of that uniting spirit is, to guide the church into all truth, taking the things of Christ and showing them to his disciples, thereby glorifying him. The spirit of truth—that spirit which Christ possessed—and without which we are none of his, done not intermingle, or incorporate itself with the spirit or error.

Having thus briefly noticed the origin, character, and office of the Spirit, we proceed to examine the foundation upon which the unity of the Spirit is established. Says Jesus, Matt. 16: 18, "and I say unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock (meaning himself,) I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The ancient church was established upon the law of Moses; "but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Those truths of the Old Testament scriptures relative to the gospel dispensation, which were kept concealed until the advent of the Messiah, were by him brought to light for the express purpose of constructing a foundation upon which to establish the church of Christ; and, as the whole law, unmixed with heathen mythology, was necessary for the construction of the foundation upon which the Mosaic church was established, so the entire system of gospel truth, unmixed with fables and commandments of men, is requisite for the construction of a foundation upon which to establish the gospel church. As the church is represented as being built upon Christ, we are forced to conclude either the church is established upon pure principles of truth, or that Christ is divided between truth and error. But as he is "the way, the truth, and the life," I prefer the former conclusion. Says Paul, Eph. 2: 19, 20,—"now therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow heirs with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.

Paul here represents the foundation upon which the church of Christ is established, (that church in which alone the unity of the spirit exists,) by those mediums through which the truth of God was revealed. And he avers that in the "chief corner stone," (Jesus Christ) "the whole building," (the church,) is "fitly framed together," and "groweth into an holy temple in the Lord," and that in him, through the operation of "the Spirit" the members of this "holy temple" are "builded together for an habitation of God." Will the spirit of truth exert its influence in rearing a superstructure for an habitation for the God of truth, upon a foundation made fragile by intermixing with truth the most egregrious errors that human imagination can invent? I trow not. If Jesus Christ is the chief corner stone in the foundation upon which the church is established, and the spirit of truth, the leading agent in establishing the church upon this foundation, then it follows as a matter of necessity, that truth is the leading characteristic of the church and is the foundation of the "faith of our Lord Jesus Christ."

We should be careful and not attempt to lay for ourselves a foundation between truth and error, for a foundation thus laid will partake enough of error to cause it to sink, and the superstructure built thereupon will fall. No foundation but that of truth will abide the shaking of earth and heaven. "For other foundation can no man lay than is laid, which is Jesus Christ." This foundation was laid by the hand of infinite wisdom, and is just long enough, broad enough, and deep enough to sustain the building of God; but it will not sustain anything else, for when the work is revealed by fire, all the wood, hay and stubble will be consumed. Only the genuine material, fitly framed together, will abide. Therefore, "let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." In order to be securely established upon this foundation, several important steps must necessarily be taken.

First. The first thing required of us is, to hear. Says Paul Rom. 10: 14,—"how shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" But what are we required to hear?

1. We are required to hear the gospel; for that is what God's ministers are sent to preach. "And he said unto them, go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Mark 16: 15. But "how shall they preach except they be sent?" Those preachers that are not sent of God will not, yea, they cannot preach the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ in its purity.

That it is the design of God, that we should hear nothing contrary to the gospel of Jesus Christ, appears evident from the Apostle's words, Gal. 1: 8, 9,—"But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again; if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." Paul declares that he received the gospel which he preached of the Lord; and, in consequence of its having been perverted by the preaching of false doctrines, God denounced a curse, both against men and angels, who should dare to preach things contrary to the gospel which Christ commissioned his apostles to preach, that men might beware, lest they should be instruments in the hands of Satan, in leading their fellow beings to perdition, by causing them to hear a perverted gospel.

2. We are required to hear sound doctrine. See Tit. 1: 9. "Holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers." Again. 2 Tim. 4: 2, 3. Here the apostle gives Timothy a most solemn charge to preach the word;" to be "instant in season, and out of season;" and to "reprove, rebuke, and exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine;" "For," says he, "the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." Now if the gospel of Jesus Christ—sound doctrine—teaches that man in this state is mortal; that the saints will have their inheritance in the earth; that the wicked will be destroyed,—then those who are of the contrary part, preach and hear another gospel than the unperverted gospel of Jesus Christ; another doctrine than sound doctrine; and fables instead of truth.

That God is utterly averse to man's hearing false doctrine, is also evident from the language of the Apostle, 2 John, 9–11,—"Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. For he that biddeth him God speed, is partaker of his evil deeds."

Now if we are not to admit a promulgator of false doctrine into our houses, it is one of the clearest axioms in the world, that we are not to hear false doctrine. And, with reward to preaching, or believing false doctrine; with the word of God in our hand, and the spirit of God, which is the "spirit of truth," ever near us, so that we may at any time avail ourselves of its influence to guide us into truth, the attempt to screen ourselves under the subterfuge of sincerity will prove unavailing, for sincerity can never [illegible] [illegible] into truth. [illegible]

3–5,—"If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, he is proud, (margin, a fool,) knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness; from such withdraw thyself." As we are clearly shown by the Apostle that the works of the flesh abound through the preaching of false doctrine, it should not surprise us, that God is so opposed to our hearing false doctrine, that He has denounced a dread curse against all false teachers, angels not excepted! The apostle declares also, that those who consent not to "wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to godliness," do not know anything. I think such would do well to attend the school of Christ; for his is the only school in which truth and christian principles are taught. We see by the word of the living God, that sound doctrine is an important, indispensable element in the foundation upon which the unity of the Spirit is established. It is encumbent on us, therefore, that we take heed to ourselves, and to the doctrine, and continue in it; for in this we are to save ourselves and them that hear us. See 1 Tim. 4: 16.

Secondly. In order to be securely established upon this foundation, we must believe.

Says Jesus, Mark 16: 16,—"he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned." It is not an uncommon thing to hear professors complain, that belief in doctrine is made a test of christian character. But who has made the test? Why are men saved? Ans. Because they believe. And why are men not saved? Ans. Because they believe not. Then who has made belief a test of christian character? Ans. God.

But what are we required to believe? "Abraham believed God; and it was imputed unto him for righteousness." But could not righteousness have been imputed to Abraham if he had not believed God without a shadow of doubt? No! Faith which consists in doubts and fears, is just no faith at all. Abraham did not stagger at the promises of God, his faith was of the absolute kind; for which reason God imputed unto him righteousness; and He will not impute righteousness to us upon cheaper, or more liberal terms than those upon which He imputed righteousness to Abraham. Christ commanded his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; to which he added,—"he that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

"But," says one, "you are altogether too harsh; you are unkind."

But hark, a moment. I am only telling what God has said! and is that unkind? We have a God to tell us what we may, and what we may not believe; and he will hold us accountable for what we do believe. It is God speaking through his Son, who says that those who do not believe that gospel which Christ commanded his disciples to preach in all the world, "shall be damned." And I am very slow to believe, that doctrines which are directly opposed to the word of God, constitute even the smallest item of His gospel; consequently, I think it is a matter of great importance, which of two antagonistic doctrines we believe, when either is entitled to credit. Says Jesus, John 7: 38,—"he that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water."

But how has the scripture said that we should believe on him? We find a solution to this question in the language of Peter, Acts 3: 22, 23—"For Moses truly said unto the Fathers, a prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things, whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." See also Deut. 18: 15, 18, 19. The word hear, in these texts, is evidently put for believe; therefore, if we do not believe every word, even all the doctrine which that prophet (Jesus Christ) has spoken, we shall as assuredly be destroyed, as God has uttered this sentence.

Now if the scripture quoted above looks like making doctrine a test of christian character, (and I think it does,) it only displays the coloring which God has given it, and if man's pencil had not defaced it, its real color would not have been hidden from the view of the most superficial observer. "But," says Negation, "I do not think that it is necessary that we should believe alike respecting one and the same doctrine; especially the minor doctrines."

Will Bro. Negation just point out the minor doctrines of the Bible, and show by the word of God, that they are minor doctrines? And when those minor doctrines are pointed out, and proved to be such, show also, that it is a matter of trivial importance, whether we all believe alike respecting them or not.

On the same principle that it makes no difference whether we believe alike or not, it makes no difference if we do not believe anything. But God requires in us faith in what He has spoken; and all that believe Him have one faith; all believe alike. If it was a matter of but little consequence what we believe, God never would have so trifled with his own veracity, as to have given, at the expense of the blood of his only begotten and well beloved Son, a system of truth of which men might make merchandise. When the lawyer came to Christ, and impiously asked what he must do to inherit eternal life; Christ did not say to him, how believest thou? but "what is written in the law? how readest thou?" If that lawyer could not secure eternal life without believing what he read; no more can we except we believe what we read.

(To be concluded.)

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 25, 1857.

Moral Signs.

No. III.

"And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." Matt. 24: 12.

This passage is in harmony with what the Apostle was afterwards inspired to write. He says:—"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. . . Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and WORSE."

We will introduce further testimony showing that these scriptures are now fulfilling, thus proving that we are in the last days.

INCREASE OF CRIME.

Under the above heading, the New York Observer remarks:—

"Public attention is just now powerfully arrested by the great increase of crime in our midst. A species of moral insanity, which is but another name for outrageous and unblushing wickedness, is spreading over the community, and breaking out in astounding frauds, in daring highway robberies, and in deeds of violence from which the heart recoils with horror. It is undeniable that there has been a great increase of such crimes. Every one that reads our journals must have been impressed with the fact. But that increase is not confined to this city, (New York) or to any portion of our land, nor is it even confined to this country. The police records of almost every city in the length and breadth of our country will show that it has been nearly if not quite universal. From Boston to San Francisco we have heard the same report; that wicked men have been setting law and justice at defiance, and from various motives, but especially for purposes of gain, have recklessly committed crimes which but a few years since were comparatively rare. . . . Nor is it confined to this country. Precisely the same forms of crime are prevailing, and to equal extent, in Great Britain. . . . Life and property have become alarmingly insecure in that country. My solemn conviction is, that at no period within my recollection was the social morality in several departments at a lower ebb than it is at present. We . . . allude to these facts . . . to show how wide-spread is this rampant spirit of iniquity."

The N. Y. Herald says:—"Crimes of all descriptions are on the increase, especially those of the blackest dye, the increase being much greater than the proportionate increase of population."

Says the Christian Herald, in speaking of the great New England metropolis—'the most moral city in the world'—there is an "astonishing increase of crime in Boston." People have only to reside here a short time to learn the painful fact. Paul has declared, that in the last days men "shall be lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."

Says Prof. Finney:—"We have had the fact before our minds, that in general, the Protestant churches of our country . . . are becoming devotees of fashion—join hands with the ungodly in parties of pleasure, in dancing, in festivities, &c. . . The evidence thickens and rolls heavily upon us, to show that the churches generally are becoming sadly degenerate. They have gone very far from the Lord, and he has withdrawn himself from them."

In all candor, we would ask what do these things mean? The answer is obvious. We are truly in the perils of the last days.

Says the N. Y. Independent:—"Among all the earnest-minded young men who are at this moment leading in thought and action in America, we venture to say that four-fifths are skeptical even of the great historical facts of christianity;" and with its present ratio of increase it will not be long before a large proportion of the remaining fifth will join the other four.

Says Dr. Stevens, in speaking of the moral condition of the churches:—

"We confess to the grievous inroads which conformity to the world has made in our members, not merely a conforming of our lives to the fashions and frivolities of the world, but a steeping of our souls in the spirit of the world, its spirit of selfishness, its spirit of covetousness, its spirit of recklessness, its spirit of enmity towards the truth, its spirit of living for the present, irrespective of the great hereafter. The form of godliness, indeed, has not been cast off, but the life of godliness has departed; we have a name to live, but are dead, and the church becomes a moral graveyard; bodies are there, but they breathe not the breath of spiritual life; hands and feet are there, but they move not responsive to the spirit's call; hearts are there, but they throb no pulses of holy love."

Is it not true that iniquity abounds, and that the love of many waxes cold? How perfectly is 2 Tim. 3: 1–5 fulfilling. Compare Paul's prophecy and its fulfillment as just given from Dr. Stevens. Paul says;—"in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves;" i. e. selfish. Says Dr. Stevens, when speaking of the present state of the church, it is steeped in a "spirit of selfishness." Again Paul says, they shall be "covetous." Dr. Stevens says the church is "steeping" in a "spirit of covetousness." These harmonize like checks on baggage, with the ones we take as security. Paul declares, they will have "a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof." Dr. Stevens says;—"The form of godliness, indeed, has not been cast off, but the life (power) of godliness has departed."

We might as well deny that the four great kingdoms of Daniel's prophecy have arisen, as to say that the prophecy of Paul is not now fulfilling all about us. We are near our happy home. We shall soon be with Jesus, if faithful.

Christian, awake! No time now for reposing. The King of glory is at hand to receive his waiting bride to the "marriage supper of the Lamb." Keep thyself "unspotted from the world."

Last Week.

By some unforeseen circumstance, we did not have papers enough last week to supply all of our subscribers. We are sorry, but it can't be helped now.

OF A LETTER FROM MISS WILLIAMS, TEACHER IN JAFFA, PALESTINE.

* * * "You will know, I hope, long ere this, that General Chesney and Sir John McNeil have been up about six weeks since from a government (British) steamer, and have surveyed the road (railroad) by Nablouse, or Sickem, and Samaria to Jerusalem; that a line is also to be carried to Damascus, beside a railway from the coast higher up, which is already in progress, under the care of a son of Sir John McNeil, also to Damascus, intended for the Euphrates! That the harbor here (Jaffa, the port for Jerusalem,) is to be made good for all larger vessels to ride in. A pier is to go out beyond the shallow rocks which are now so perilous to all during the winter. The road is to be commenced in March. Imagine Jaffa a railroad depot, with all the immense changes that such a beginning portends!

You know also, perhaps, of the unwilling present made by the Sultan to Napoleon, of a Mosquē and ground in Jerusalem, which is to be converted into a Roman Catholic place of idolatry. The Greeks to whom it originally belonged, and the Moslems are much chagrined. They (Mosque and lot) are a little within St. Stephen's gate, on a line with the Austrian Consulate and Archiepiscopal property. (Arch-Bishop of Vienna, I suppose. J. B. C.)

Ridley Herschel (the noted convert from Judaism,) is here also, setting on foot his agricultural plan for the support of Jewish converts. (This is the agent of the society started by Sir Culling Eardly, in London.) Mr. Isaac, an Episcopal clergyman and a very pious man, is here in order to purchase land for their operations. He called on me while here, and delighted us all with his christian bearing, adorned besides with a beautiful exterior of face and form and highly cultivated manners. What have you to tell of the unfolding of the pages of these last days? . . . I have just finished reading the New Testament in Arabic with the Sheik. He is a man of talents, and professes to love Jesus as a prophet, and to believe he will come again to fight and destroy anti-Christ."

Immortality.

1. Who is immortal? Ans. "The King eternal, IMMORTAL, invisible, the ONLY WISE GOD." 1 Tim. 1: 17.

2. Are not all men possessed of immortality? Ans. "The blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords; who ONLY HATH IMMORTALITY." 1 Tim. 6: 16.

3. Are not all men created immortal? Ans. He "ONLY hath IMMORTALITY." 1 Tim. 6: 16.

4. Is there any way by which men may obtain immortality? Ans. "To us are given exceeding great and precious PROMISES, that BY THESE ye might be partakers of the DIVINE NATURE, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." 2 Pet. 1: 4.

5. Is this immortality revealed by Plato, or Socrates, or by "familiar" rapping 'spirits," or in nature,—or is it through Jesus Christ and his gospel? Ans. "By the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished DEATH, and hath brought LIFE and IMMORTALITY to light, through the GOSPEL." 2 Tim. 1: 10.

6. Who has power to bestow immortality upon man? Ans. "The GIFT OF GOD is ETERNAL LIFE THROUGH Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6: 23.

7. Will God give this gift to all persons whatever their works may be? Ans. God "will render to every man according to his DEEDS." Rom. 2: 6.

8. What will be the portion of those who are contentious and obey not the truth? Ans. "Indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth EVIL." Rom. 2: 8, 9.

9. To whom will God impart immortality? Ans. "To them who by patient continuance in WELL DOING SEEK for glory and honor and IMMORTALITY." Rom. 2: 7.

10. What shall be their reward? Ans. "ETERNAL LIFE." Rom. 2: 7.

11. Upon what conditions may we obtain this blessing? Ans. "FIGHT the good fight of FAITH, LAY HOLD on ETERNAL LIFE. 1 Tim. 6: 12.

12. When do men obtain immortality? Is it at DEATH, or atthe resurrection? Ans. "The DEAD shall be RAISED INCORRUPTIBLE." 1 Cor. 15: 52.

13. How shall those who are not dead become incorruptible? Ans. "We shall be CHANGED." 1 Cor. 15: 52.

14. When will this change take place? Ans. "At the last TRUMP." 1 Cor. 15: 52.

15. How rapidly will the change occur? Ans. "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the DEAD shall be raised INCORRUPTIBLE and we shall be CHANGED." 1 Cor. 15: 52.

16. Will this change be a change of the internal or the external and PHYSICAL man? Ans. "This CORRUPTIBLE must PUT ON INCORRUPTION." 1 Cor. 15: 53.

17. What then becomes immortal? Ans. This MORTAL must PUT ON IMMORTALITY. 1 Cor. 15: 53.

18. What scripture will be fulfilled when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this MORTAL shall have put on IMMORTALITY? Ans. "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, DEATH is SWALLOWED UP in VICTORY. 1 Cor. 15: 56. Isa. 25: 8.

19. Who will be raised from the dead? Ans. "ALL that are in the GRAVES shall hear his voice, and shall COME FORTH." John 5: 28, 29.

20. Will the unburied arise? Ans. "The SEA gave up the DEAD which were in it; and DEATH and hell (the GRAVE) delivered up the dead which were in them." Rev. 20. 13.

21. Will different classes of characters arise in the resurrection? Ans. "There shall be a resurrection of the DEAD BOTH of the JUST and UNJUST." Acts 24: 15.

22. For what purpose will the good be raised? Ans. "They that have done good unto the RESURRECTION OF LIFE." John 5: 29.

23. To what will others be raised? "They that have done EVIL, unto the RESURRECTION OF DAMNATION." John 5: 29.

24. Will a man's destiny at last be in accordance with his previous life? Ans. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also REAP." Gal. 6: 7.

25. What will be the portion of the ungodly? Ans. "He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap CORRUPTION." Gal. 6: 8.

26. What the reward of the saint? Ans. "He that soweth to the SPIRIT shall of the spirit reap LIFE EVERLASTING." Gal. 6: 8.

28. How then should we live? Ans. "Let us not be weary in welldoing; for in due season WE shall REAP if we faint not." Gal. 6: 9.

29. What will be the fate of those who reap CORRUPTION? Ans. "These, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, . . . shall UTTERLY PERISH in their OWN CORRUPTION." 2 Pet. 2: 12.

30. Is it possible for man to be UTTERLY destroyed? Ans. "Fear him which is able to destroy BOTH SOUL AND BODY in hell." Matt. 10: 28.

31. What is the wages of sin? Ans. "The wages of sin is DEATH." Rom. 6: 23.

32. Is this death merely a bodily death? Ans. "The SOUL that sinneth, IT shall DIE." Ezek. 18: 4.

33. If the wicked turn away from his wickedness and do right, what then? Ans. "He shall save his SOUL alive." Ezek. 18: 27.

34. "When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity and DIETH IN THEM," what shall be his fate? Ans. FOR his iniquity that he hath done SHALL he DIE." Ezek. 18: 26.

35. As he first dies in his iniquity and then dies for his iniquity, what must this last death be called? Ans. "THE SECOND DEATH." Rev. 21: 8.

36. What is the result alleged by the man who converteth a sinner from the error of his ways? Ans. "He shall save a SOUL from DEATH, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Jas. 5: 20.

37. What then has God placed before us to excite us to action? Ans. "I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you LIFE AND DEATH, blessing and cursing; therefore choose LIFE, that both thou and thy seed may LIVE." Deut. 30: 19.

38. How does God manifest his love to men? Ans. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have EVERLASTING LIFE." John 3: 16.

39. What is our Savior's complaint concerning mankind? Ans. 'Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal LIFE; and they are they which testify of me. And ye will not come to ME, that ye MIGHT have LIFE." John 5: 39, 40.

40. What is the command of God to all? Ans. "Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby you have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit; for why WILL YE DIE, O, house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the DEATH of him that DIETH, saith the Lord God; wherefore TURN yourselves, and LIVE YE." Ezek. 18: 31, 32.

The above will shortly be issued as a tract. Price 50 cents per hundred.

Whoever concludes to serve God, must make up his mind to fight with the Devil.

When we surrender all to God, there is none left for the Devil to obtain.

It is one thing to do good, and another thing to do it in the right time and place.

A MAN without some sort of religion is at best a poor reprobate, the foot-ball of destiny, with no tie linking him to infinity and the wondrous eternity that is begun within him; but a woman without it is even worse—a flame without heat, a rainbow without color, a flower without perfume.—D. G. Mitchel.

For the Crisis.

"Moral Scurvy."

BRO. GRANT:—I cannot determine fully the "diagnosis" of the disease in every place, in which Bro. M. has described the body; but while, undoubtedly, in some localities, from continued use of provisions, cured and laid up for permanent use, there may have appeared some symptoms of "Scorbutus," or from the low, cold, marshy situation occupied, yet I can hardly believe the brethren in Newark are suffering from this disease.

That the cause is suffering in many instances, in every direction, from low diet, and a limited supply at that, is manifest. We need preaching—gospel preaching—an able and thorough exhibition of gospel truth, to build up the church; and for the want of this supply, and for the vain and foolish notions of spiritual power, the chosen people of the divine standard have dwindled to a withered waste, where once the fruit and flowers of the living record abundantly appeared. Sad falling off! And at whose door lies the fault? A long series of adverse facts would appear as the cause. Among the rest, a failure to preach the word, which is the foundation of all faith in such a manner as to produce it.

But of Newark. I had the pleasure of preaching to the church there last Sunday. We had an interesting and solemn time. The discourses were doctrinal, and they were practical. There was evidently good done to the brethren because the Lord was with us; not necessarily in a flood of sympathy, but in a powerful influence for our improvement attending the word of the Lord. The brethren are indeed somewhat depressed as to numbers and means, but there are those in Newark—a goodly number—holding on. Following a view of the experience of the brethren here, and in Newark and other places, I feel, upon the whole, pleased that they stand so well.

The brethren here are mostly strong on "the Time," looking for the Lord to come in the present Spring.

I shall labor here and in Newark till next Monday, then return to Conn.

Yours truly, W. S. CAMPBELL.

New York, March 5th.

For the Crisis.

Life is a Stormy Sea.

And the time will surely come and is near at hand when the storm-clouds will gather and the thunders's rattle; when the sea will rock and the sails of life will be rent; when the heart will sink in despair and the soul cry out in wretchedness. It is for that season that we have need to be prepared. It is then we shall need the christian's hope. There is something in it so pure, so holy, so kindred with the kingdom of Christ, so nearly allied to God, that it rests on the brow of the christian like a rainbow on the front of a cloud, and gives promise of a glorious life. Hope! It is that angel within which whispers of triumph over evil, of the success of good, of the victory of truth, of the achievements of right. It hopeth all things. It is a strong ingredient of courage. It is the friend of virtue. It is the prophet of a good time coming, when God will reward every man according to his works. He is truth and lieth not. His truth shall run and be victorious. He will punish sin, make an end of transgression and bring in everlasting righteousness.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. S. MITCHELL writes from Genesee Grove, Ill.:—"I have had the privilege of reading the Crisis the most of the time for two years, and have often been made to rejoice in hearing from those that are waiting the return of Israel's King and rejoicing in the christian's hope. Their hope is my hope, their consolations are mine. With you, I have been these many years looking for and desiring the coming of the just One. But we find ourselves yet in the land of the enemy, mid trials and difficulties, and sighing over the abominations of earth. The inquiry has often arisen in my mind, why have not the waiting ones seen the King in his beauty, and the scattered household been gathered home ere this? It may be for the perfecting of the saints, till we all come into the unity of the faith, that the church be found without spot and blameless at His coming. Recently I have been led to inquire, have we been ready to meet the coming Bridegroom? Is there enough of the unity of the Spirit among us? Do we rely with unshaken confidence on God's promises? In a word, have we faith?

For twelve hundred and sixty years the church was in her wilderness state; she went down gradually, she is coming up gradually, but will eventually come up as 'fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners.'

O let us seek for truth as we would for hid treasures, and plant our feet firmly on its substantial basis, that we may stand when heaven and earth shall pass away."

——:o:——

Sr. C. Tuttle writes from Shalersville, O.:—"It is a time of peril and of sorrow. My prayer is, that we who profess to be looking for our blessed Lord and Master, may not only profess, but be assured that we belong to God, that we are Christ's friends. Let us strive to keep ourselves in the love of God, and in the patient waiting for his appearing.

How can I give up the glorious appearing of Jesus, when on that hangs all our hope of salvation? If he does not come, then those that have fallen asleep in him have perished, and we are yet in our sins. But we are not without hope, for we believe that Jesus died and rose again; so whether we sleep or wake, we shall be glorified with Him."

——:o:——

Bro. C. H. Child writes from Westboro', Mass.:—"The interest is increasing here. The judicious and faithful labors of Elder Cunningham are being crowned with blessings. God is at work among and around us. The blessed Hope is gaining access to many dark minds. Several have recently embraced Jesus and our blessed truth. To Heaven be all the glory.

Our place of worship is generally filled on the Sabbath, and we hope to soon outgrow it. Our Sunday school is increasing in interest. Oh, it would please you to see the bright and happy faces as they gather together to hear from their teachers the way to Jesus. Having the charge of the school, I feel the deepest interest for the welfare of the children. Oh! I humbly trust that every one while young may give their hearts to Jesus. Pray for us."

Domestic Summary.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

ARRIVAL OF THE GEORGE LAW.

New York, March 16.

The George Law arrived this morning from Aspinwall, with California dates of Feb. 20.

The news from California is unimportant.

Companies of fillibusters are being organized in the interior for the aid of Walker.

A large body of fillibusters have gone to Sonora to join Gaudara.

Advices from La Paz, Mexican coast, state that Gen. Blancarte had seized all the vessels in the harbor, putting them under embargo, and was to leave in a few days.

General Blancarte had 700 men, and was bound to the capital.

Oregon dates are to Feb. 12. An Indian outbreak has taken place near Fort Sincoe. Four white men and a large number of cattle were carried off.

TROUBLE IN NEBRASKA.

Omaha, Nebraska Territory, Feb. 24.

We are under the government of a Vigilance committee, not for the general purpose of reform in administration, but for the vindication of squatter sovereignty. Claims have been jumped contrary to the code, and several jumpers have already been tried and forced to withdraw their filing. Our streets are filled with citizens armed with rifles and muskets. Our best men are heart and soul in the movement. This is to protect the 320 acre claims. I was yesterday witness to the destruction of a jumper's cabin. The army is again under arms to-day. No examples have been made, but should any offer resistance, I should not be surprised at anything in the way of punishment. The surrounding towns have sent delegates to a mass meeting and offered assistance and support.

Washington, March 15.

The President received, late last evening, a telegraphic despatch, dated St. Louis, from Gov. Geary, informing him that he had resigned the Governorship of Kansas, to take effect the last of this month.

A Murrain Approaching.—Mr. Samuel Caswell, an extensive miller and corn merchant in Limerick, writes to the Times as follows:—

A most fatal epidemic has been for some time past ravaging the herds of central Europe, and has now reached Konigsberg, where one proprietor is said to have lost 300 head in a night. The time of its arrival in Hamburg—whence cattle are weekly imported to the English markets—must now, in all probability, be a question of days. In 1745 the same or a like epidemic was introduced into England by means of two calves from Holland (vide "Youatt on cattle," art. "Malignant Epidemic Murrain.") In the second year after its introduction, 40,000 cattle died in Nottingham and Leicestershire, and almost as many more in Cheshire. During the third year remuneration was given by the government, (who had ordered the destruction of diseased cattle,) for no fewer than 80,000 head, while twice as many more, according to the report of one of the commissioners, died of the malady. In the fourth year it was equally fatal, nor does it appear to have completely disappeared till eight years after.

On the continent every exertion is being made to arrest the progress of infection by this exterminating disease; military detachments are charged to destroy all that become infected. In Prussia, if only one of a herd should be attacked, the authorities order the whole to be slaughtered; and cordons sanitaries are established along the frontiers, to prevent the ingress of cattle from districts in which the disease exists. Happily, from their insular position, there can be little difficulty, under Providence, in preventing its introduction into these islands. It is only to lay an embargo on live cattle and raw hides, the produce of countries where this disease has already appeared.

Extraordinary Canine Instinct.—The most remarkable instance of instinct or sagacity in a dog that we remember to have heard of, occurred in Fairhaven a few days since, and it was this:

Two children between the ages of five and six and seven years were playing in the middle of the street in Fairhaven, when an unloaded wagon, without a driver, and drawn by a runaway horse, was seen approaching at a furious rate. A large dog, a cross between the Newfoundland and mastiff breeds who was lying near, saw the approaching peril, and going to the rescue of the unconscious innocents, took up by their clothes in his teeth, first one of the children and deposited the little thing out of danger on the sidewalk, and then returned and took the other and also placed it in safety on the walk. As the wagon was passing, the dog made a spring at the horse and tried to seize him by the nose, but failed to stop him. We have these curious facts from a gentleman whose veracity is unquestionable. Who shall say that the brute creation is devoid of rational intelligence after this?—New Bedford Mercury.

Letter from Kansas.

Reported Irruption of three thousand Missouri Squatters—the Murder of Thomas Shoemaker.—Lawrence, Kansas, Feb 15.—Editor of the Traveler:—We have authentic information of the organization by the Missouri Lodges of an armed invasion of about three thousand men to take possession of the Shawnee, Miami and other Indian Reserves that will be opened this spring for settlement. The Shawnees have made their selections, and the remainder, containing about two thousand claims of 160 acres each, comprising some of the finest land in Kansas, will be open about the 10th of March. The Missourians have been selecting claims for months past. They have been materially aided by the surveyors, who are nearly all pro-slavery and furnished information of the localities taken by the Indians. At Westport, in the office of Col. Boone, there is a register of over three thousand names, men who are engaged to come over and register their names under the new laws as residents of the Territory, pay the taxes and vote at the June election.

Thomas Shoemaker, of Leavenworth, lately Receiver for the Territory, and who was dismissed on account of being a Free State man, has been brutally murdered by some of the ruffians infesting that place.

A Patented Scientific Process For Preserving Dead Human Bodies,—By means of certain chemical agents combined with electricity, has recently been brought to light by a gentleman of the medical faculty. By his method bodies can be prepared and kept in any climate, or transported to any part of the world free from decomposition "for ages or centuries, irrespective of the age of the deceased, or from whatever cause death may have supervened. They can be placed on monumental tombs or in gardens without regard to temperature, and in any posture required, presenting the appearance of a gentle sleep." The operation does not require the body to be opened, and the cheapness and ease with which the ingredients can be procured, enables the operator to prepare them in any city or country place in the United States. The wonderful agency of electricity plays the most important part in this process, which is infinitely superior to embalming.

Persons desirous of preserving their relatives or friends can do so at a trifling cost, while it may prove to them a source of sadness or melancholy satisfaction.

Terrible Railroad Accident.—About sixty persons killed.—A special telegraphic despatch to the Traveler brings the following intelligence of the terrible railroad accident at Des Jardines Canal, above Hamilton, C. W.:—

Hamilton, Canada, March 13.—The passenger train from Toronto, which is due here at 5.46 P. M. had scarcely touched the Swing Bridge over the Des Jardines Canal, when the bridge gave away and the whole train was precipitated into the water, falling a distance of 46 feet. The engine, tender and baggage car were all completely covered in the water.

The forward passenger car, in descending, was turned upside down, leaving only a portion of it above the water. The forward end of the last passenger car rested upon either the engine or baggage car and falling back upon the wall supporting the bridge remained in nearly an upright position. The scene was a terrible one.

Important Improvement in Printing Presses.—We learn from the Scientific American that Mr. Moses H. Beach, Esq., of the New York Sun, has patented in Europe and this country an apparatus for printing both sides of a newspaper before it leaves the press. The paper is placed before the cylinder, and after an impression a double or twin set of fingers, which shut against each other, are so arranged as to grasp the back or tail end of the sheet before it leaves the printing cylinder, and after the first impression is taken. The sheet, thus held fast while the cylinder continues to revolve, is drawn in again for the second impression, and thus the feeding the sheet by hand the second time, or fifty per cent of the labor now required is saved and practically, the sheet is printed on both sides at once—two forms instead of one being placed upon the press.

End of the World at Hand!—Paris is very much excited by an astronomical controversy at which all do not laugh! The two most eminent astronomers, one of France, the other of Germany, are arguing whether the world is to come to an end on the thirteenth of June next! All the scientific world, it appears, have long been uneasy at the approach of the Comet to our earth; and though it is conceded by the disbelievers that the contact must take place in June next, they argue (or Mons. Babinet, the French Astronomer, for them,) that, as comets are but atmospheric affairs, it will not materially affect us. The German, on the contrary, says that it will not merely be the passing of "a gentleman who smokes," but that its centre is solid fire, and that the surface of the earth will be turned into a sea of fiery lava, by his formidable cigar! The millennium, of course, is to turn out a fiction, and Mr. Barnum will barely have time to get well of his bilious fever. We beg new subscribers to the Home Journal to keep sending in their "two dollar bills in advance," however—disinterestedly reminding them that the less paper they have about them, the later they will be, of course, to catch fire.—Home Journal.

Universal Spittoon.—It has been stated, on good authority, that one thousand tons of tobacco juice are annually squirted over the face of God's creation, and twenty tons of ivory are worn out in chewing the weed every seven years. If this practice continues to increase in the future as it has in the past few centuries, the world will become one vast spittoon.

LIST TO THE JOYFUL NEWS.

Tune.—Over the mountain wave.

(PUBLISHED BY REQUEST.)

List to the joyful news, sounding so clear,
O'er the hills, through the dales, Jesus is near;
Hark! how it wafts along through earth's domain,
Quick prepare, soon to share, Heaven's bright reign
Chorus.
Pilgrims and strangers here, we'll ever roam,
Till our Lord shall reward, and bring us home.

Swiftly the tidings roll, onward with speed,
To the believer's soul, joyful indeed;
Soon will the reaping time fully have come,
Saints with all, great and small, be gathered home.
Pilgrims and strangers, &c.

Lord, let thy kingdom come, we'll ever pray,
Soon take thy children home, O haste the day!
Lift up your heads, ye saints, banish all fear,
Signs proclaim Jesus' reign, judgment is near!
Pilgrims and strangers, &c.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ALPS.

The British steamship Alps, Captain Inglis, from Liverpool the 4th inst., arrived at this port early this morning, having entered the Bay last night.

France.—A letter from Paris says that the Neufchatel affair is not improving, and from what we can learn, all the parties concerned are in very bad humor with each other. The Emperor Napoleon cannot but feel mortified at being duped by the King of Prussia.

A despatch from Paris of the latest date says that a treaty of peace between England and Persia had been signed there.

Persia.—The treaty of peace with Persia was signed on Tuesday, March 3d.

Switzerland.—There is again a movement in Switzerland, and another rising of the King of Prussia's friends is feared in Neufchatel. It is said the King is dissatisfied with the exile imposed upon the former insurgents; and, also, because punishments have been inflicted on certain of his adherents in the canton, who refused to serve under the federal flag.

Spain and Mexico.—A war between Spain and Mexico would appear to be almost certain. The Spanish ministry has addressed a note to the representatives of Spain at the European Courts explaining the quarrel. Having mentioned the murders and robberies committed on the persons and goods of Spanish subjects residing in Mexico, by the soldiers of Gen. Alvarez, the present chief of the Mexican Republic, the note declares that the Spanish government does not desire to make the people and the government of Mexico responsible for these atrocious acts, if the Mexican government would only take energetic measures to repair them. In this spirit the Spanish legation in Mexico has been instructed to demand of the Mexican government the punishment of the offenders, and the indemnification of the Spanish subjects who have been the victims.

But, at the same time, fearing that this demand is not complied with, the Spanish Government has ordered the departure of vessels-of-war and troops from the Havannah in sufficient strength for the protection of Spanish subjects. Five vessels-of-war, with troops, likewise leave Spain to reinforce the squadron at the Havannah. The expedition will altogether consist of thirty vessels-of-war, and will have a numerous army on board. The Spanish Government deplores the necessity of resorting to such measures towards a nation united to Spain in blood, language, and religion; but it hopes everybody will understand the obligation it is under to avenge the national dignity.

China.—Affairs in China are reported unchanged. Private letters from Hong Kong state that a numerous Chinese fleet had attacked the English squadron, and subsequently retired in good order under the forts of Canton.

Admiral Seymour had disembarked troops and burnt the greater part of the suburbs of Canton. The fleet belonging to the Chinese rebels had formed a junction with that of the Imperialists at Whampoa.

Letters from Lacao, of Jan. 10th, state that the Emperor of China had just placed in a state of siege the five ports of the Empire which are open to Europeans.

The Europeans on board the steamer Thistle, in all eleven persons, had been treacherously murdered by the native passengers. The steamer was carried off and abandoned after being dismantled.

Italy.—A Vienna letter says,—"that deliberations have taken place in Ministerial Council at Milan, under presidency of the Emperor, having for their object the withdrawal of Austrian troops from the Papal Legations. They have led to instructions being sent to Count Colloredo, Austrian ambassador at Rome, to come to an understanding about it with Cardinal Antonelli. It is supposed that the Papal Government thinks it no longer needs foreign assistance. If the reply is to that effect, Austria will enter into a negotiation with France for simultaneous withdrawal of all the French troops from Rome and the Austrian from Bologne. The alienation which has recently taken place between Austria and France, may have contributed in hastening such a resolution on the part of the Austrian Government."

Austria.—The Vienna Gazette publishes an Imperial Decree abolishing all passport regulations within the Austrian Empire. In future it is only at the Frontier passports are to be shown. The effect produced by this decree is very favorable.

Items.

The weight of John Wesley was only 120 pounds.

It is now said that eating the young and tender shoots of the sugar cane is certain to cure consumptive tendencies.

The dress and jewels of the Empress Eugenie worn at the late Court Ball are estimated to have been worth almost a million of dollars.

On Sunday night, March 1, a severe shock of an earthquake was felt at Milledgeville, Geo. It was so severe that it awoke many from their sleep.

Forty-two Hungarians and Prussians, who fought with distinguished valor under the British flag during the entire Crimean war, have arrived in New Orleans en route to Walker's army in Nicaragua.

At three o'clock in Boston it is nearly eight o'clock in London. When, therefore, the Atlantic telegraph is completed, the afternoon papers here will contain the evening news from Parliament and Court. Who says this isn't a fast age?

George Sumner says in a recent lecture "The excessive use of saleratus is a cardinal cause of the American ill health. It is a deadly poison, the use of which should be shunned as the slaughterer of the infant and the destroyer of the strong man."

Two eminent astronomers, one of France and one of Germany are gravely arguing the prophecy of the Scotch divine, Dr. Cumming, whether the world is to come to an end or not on the 13th of June next. A "rebellious comet" is said to be preparing for a grand assault about that time.

It is said that a small piece of resin dipped in the water which is placed in a vessel on the stove, will add a peculiar property to the atmosphere of the room, which will give great relief to persons troubled with a cough. The heat of the water is sufficient to throw off the aroma of the resin.

The prophecy of Dr. Cummings, a Scotchman, that the affairs of this world will be wound up on the 13th of next June, is creating considerable excitement in Paris. The smash will be caused by a tremendous comet coming in contact with the earth. Other "learned Thebans" say that the comet is coming, but they do not believe in the "smash."

Obituary.

Died in Farmingdale, Me., March 13th, 1857, Sister Sarah Hodges, wife of Bro. Ezra Hodges, aged 60 years.

By this circumstance a husband and six children are suddenly and unexpectedly called to mourn the loss of a faithful wife and devoted mother. She had enjoyed usual health during her last day and evening; had just retired to rest, at nine o'clock, when she was suddenly attacked with spasmodic action of the heart, with which she had been previously troubled, and died in about ten minutes, without a struggle or groan, saying, Jesus, help me.

Sister H. has been a professor of religion for many years, and always actively engaged in teaching it to others, and confessing Christ and his blessedness. She heartily embraced the message of Christ's soon coming, and loved to think and talk of his return to reign.

Bro. H. is left to mourn, but not "as those who have no hope." He has reason to believe his companion "died in the Lord," and "sleeps in Jesus;" while he enjoys the consolation of the blessed hope, that Jesus is soon to return to raise his people from death to immortality, and give them eternal life. May this bereavement be sanctified to the good of the afflicted family. Funeral services by the writer. Discourse from 1 Cor. 15: 57.

I. C. Wellcome.

Hallowell, March 16.

Died in Lynn, Mass., Feb. 12, 1857, Emma Frances Piper, aged 3 years 10 months and 22 days, daughter of Samuel G. and Sarah B. Piper, and grand-daughter of Harvey M. and Betsey C. Bancroft.

B. C. Bancroft.

Fell asleep March 1st, 1857, in Holden, Me., the second daughter of Bro. and Sr. M. Rinney, aged twelve years and eight months, after a few weeks suffering with the synonical fever. Melissa was amiable and obedient to her parents. She will be much missed by the family and her schoolmates. We shall miss her sweet voice in our songs, for she took great delight in singing of the coming kingdom.

When the enemy first laid his grasp upon her, there was no physician that could stay his hand. Her death was painful and trying, yet friends do not mourn as those who have no hope. They look forward but a little from this when they hope to see her bloom in life again. May grace from God be given to their surviving children, leading them to fear the Lord, waiting for the advent of Him who will raise from the dead all that sleep in Jesus. May all of us be ready for the last trump, and enter the rest that remaineth for the children of God. A sermon was preached by E. D. McGinley from Acts 14: 18. "Because he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection." A large and attentive congregation was present. My prayer is that the word preached may do us all good.

By request.

Isaac Clewley.

LINES.

Written on the death of Angeline M. Rinney.

From out our number they have borne
Melissa, and we can but mourn;
Within her cold and narrow bed,
They've laid her with the silent dead,
We miss her, O we cannot tell,
We miss her, but we know 'tis well;
Though in the grave her form must lie,
She'll rise again no more to die.

We watch the children one by one,
As home from school so glad they come;
We look for thee and look again,
But O, we know 'tis all in vain.
Why should we mourn a lot like thine?
We know that thou art free from pain;
Then in thy grave we'll let the rest,
For He doeth all things for the best.

I still have a quantity of these tracts on hand for sale. I now offer to send fifty copies, pre paid, for one dollar, as I wish to obtain funds for the publication of another tract. Direct to Vermillion, Dakota Co., Minnesota.

W. Sheldon.

I would say to the Bro. in North Dana, I had received no letter when I left home, the 5th of March; perhaps it was directed to Chickopee, and stopped two miles short of me. I cannot tell when I can come. I do not comprehend where it is. The Bro. had better write me again to Chickopee Falls, and say where it is, and what the prospect is of doing good, and I will ask Father about it.

Hiram Munger.

Will Bro. Edwin Burnham visit his old friends in Springfield and Grantham, N. H., and preach the word of life to the hungry starving and perishing souls?

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

THE BEAUTEOUS NEW EARTH.

The Earth! the beauteous new Earth! the blessed land of rest,
Promised to those, who onward here, in Jesus' footsteps prest;
Rising I see in grandeur, and in majesty sublime,
Beyond this fleeting world of ours, beyond the bounds of time.
All glorious in its rising, with its splendor dazzling light,
Away it stretches far beyond the boundaries of sight.
Clothed in immortal verdure now, appears the glad new Earth,—
O! what a glorious day dawns on the new Creation's birth.

The "sons of God" with shouting, sweep their "golden lyres" anew,
And louder yet rejoicing, o'er this world spread out to view,
Than when, at Nature's morning, they "together sang for joy,"
O'er this world so pure and holy, so free from all alloy;
For in this new Creation sin can never, never come,
But beings all immortal made, forever here will roam;
In garments white and glorious, they evermore will be,
With "palms of victory," and clad in "immortality."

Death nevermore can triumph, then, o'er those who've entered here,
And never down their cheeks can course pale sorrow's bitter tear;
For pain and grief are all unknown in this bright world of joy,
And everything that ever did the pure and good annoy.
Here, in exulting songs they evermore will sing,
"Forever, and forevermore, salvation to our King,"
Who from our sins hath freely saved, and made us pure and good,
Fitted to stand before Him washed, and cleansed in Jesus' blood;

Who the earth for us hath fitted, by his all-powerful word,
And turned its deserts waste into the "garden of the Lord."
Here He in love hath caused to flow "life's pure and crystal stream,"
And clothed its gently sloping banks in verdure ever green.
Here birds of heavenly plumage bright, their golden wings oft lave,
In the refreshing coolness sweet, of life's pure, limpid wave;
And here the fruitful tree of life grows on its fadeless shore,
From which we oft may pluck and eat, to droop and die no more.

But why, my pen, attempt portray those blessed scenes of light,
So far removed, so far beyond the reach of mortal sight?
Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, nor tongue of man can tell,
The glories in reserve for those who love the Savior well.
O God of Heaven! my Father's God! to thee, I humbly pray,
Wash me in Jesus' cleansing blood, purge all my sins away;
That I may finally obtain that blessed land of rest,
And join that holy blood-washed throng, and be forever blest.

Cling to Your Shield.

We read in Grecian history of a Spartan mother who, when sending her only son forth to battle, said to him,—"Bring back your shield, or be brought back upon it;" meaning that she wished him to die or be victorious.

The son went into the fight with a brave heart, resolved that he would fall rather than suffer the mortification of defeat.—The deadly darts did fearful execution on all sides, yet he did not tremble. Hours on hours the contending hosts struggled, and fearfully did the great tide of human beings sway to and fro upon the plain.

The Spartan hosts were victorious, and when they retired from the field, the young warrior bore his shield, scarred by many a spear, and laid it at his mother's feet. He was crowned with a wreath of bays, perhaps, as a reward, and doubtless was much pleased when he participated in the festivities attending the victory, and felt that he was well repaid for the privation and danger he had braved. The glory which he endured was of but short duration, yet he had "not counted life dear" in his eagerness to win that wreath which would soon wither and be cast from him.

"Where now are the bays
Which the hero wore?
Wreaths on the tomb of days—
Gone evermore!"

But there is a battle whose wreaths of victory will be more lasting. It is the battle of life. The great Commander has given the warriors "for a helmet, the hope of salvation;" a "girdle of truth" with which to gird their loins, and a "shield of faith" to protect them from the darts of the enemy. He has told his soldiers, that if they would cling to the shield, and "fight the good fight of faith," he would lead them on in victorious triumph, and give them eternal life and a fadeless [illegible] tal crown when the battle ends, as a reward. But if they desert the shield and go over to the ranks of the enemy, the darkness of eternal death must be their portion.

The victory of this great Commander will be celebrated on a magnificent scale. Attended by a retinue of ten thousand times ten thousand followers, he will march as upon the wings of the lightnings down the skies, and the multitudes of his countless train will strike their golden harps and sing the song of victory in such strains as shall make the whole vault of heaven echo with the music of the blessed.

Christian warrior! does the battle wax strong and are you faint and weary? Think of the crown of immortality which awaits you when the day is won? Does your heart oftentimes almost fail? Think of the celestial harpings that shall make it glad in the hour of victory! Think of the fresh, green, eternal plains of the new earth to which you may be a joint heir, and which will be forever lost if you do not gain the day! Remember that your Commander will be victorious. Already the hurrying wheels of his triumphant chariot echo along the skies! Soon will he call to those warriors who, clinging manfully to the shield of faith, have followed him on to victory, "Adeste fideles,"—"HITHER, YE FAITHFUL!"

God Is---Man Is.

God is good—man is evil.
God is great—man is little.
God is strong—man is weak.
God is wise—man is foolish.
God is holy—man is sinful.
God is everlasting—man is circumscribed.
God is immortal—man is mortal.
God is high—man is low.
God is love—man is lacking love.
God is kind—man is often unkind.
God is a merciful father—man is a rebellious child.
God is long-suffering—man is quick to revenge.
God is ever ready to bless—man is often reluctant to bless, and often ready to curse.

For the Crisis.

From Bro. E. Burnham.

BRO. GRANT:—Yesterday I preached in Manchester, N. H.; and though the Hall, in which I preached, was in the fourth story of a building, it was filled to its utmost capacity, with some of the best of the citizens. The brethren who worship at that Hall have begun a new enterprise, which, I think, God will bless. They have determined to have a free and independent meeting, in which any person, who loves God, may worship Him according to the best of his or her abilities, without being trammeled or fettered. This is as it should be. Let God smite all sectarianism with eternal consumption, plague, and death! How I hate it! Here our brethren in the ministry can come and preach the whole truth without contradiction, without a Pope, and without a Cardinal. I think this is one of the congregations of God. When the preachers come, they can call at No. 9, Bean's Block, Pine street, on Brother Stephens, and he will receive them cordially, or direct them where to go and find warm hearts and a comfortable home. The Hall which these brethren have secured is a beautiful one in the Exchange Building, No. 79 Elm street. It is of no use for the enemy to report evil of the brethren who are at the head of this enterprise. Brother Hoyt, Multon, Stephens, Barker, and others, have been known among us too long and too well for that: they are among our most consistent and devoted brethren. Come, brethren in the ministry, and help them. Yesterday was a day of the Redeemer's power among us. God was in our midst of a truth. Heaven speed the right!

For the Crisis.

From Bro. M. Batchelor.

BRO. GRANT:—I felt I ought to say a word in reference to my visit through Massachusetts. I was absent about nineteen days. I attended thirty-three meetings, and with the exception of two or three, the Spirit of the Lord seemed to prevail. Five of the meetings out of the above named were enjoyed while I was in Boston. I felt while there at the Conference, that it was truly sitting together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. I had a blessed time in Mattapoisett. The Lord did in reality bless his word, and sinners, I believe, were truly converted to him; backsliders were reclaimed, and laboring christians did truly rejoice in God. It seemed like a little Pentecost. The pastor, and those that sympathise with the truth, have learned that those that sow in tears shall reap in joy, even in this life. And may the blessing of the great Head of the church rest upon them.

My spirit was refreshed in meeting several other churches. The brethren and sisters never appeared better to me than in my last visit. It was truly sweet to receive the hearty shake of the hand, and to hear the sweet, "God bless you." If it is thus so sweet to meet the saints here, what will it be when we meet the whole redeemed body of Christ, freed from all imperfection? I hope it soon will be, and soon it must be, for prophecy is about dissolved into history, and the last knell of time must strike. But it will sound release to all God's captive ones.

Brethren, be at peace among yourselves, and labor for the salvation of men; and as you value your own happiness, seek the happiness of others, and God will bless you. Let us pray for each other, for God does hear and answer the prayer of his people. I am as ever yours, longing for the kingdom and coming of Jesus,

MATTHEW BATCHELOR.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. W. SHELDON writes from Vermillion, M. T.:—"We are glad to see the Crisis, though its visits are very irregular. Sometimes we get three or four at a time, sometimes not arrivingt ill more than two months after publication. Frequently 'the last is first, and the first last.' I think the paper is fast improving, and hope it will soon be altogether such an one as we can ask intelligent neighbors to subscribe for.

I have been disappointed in not seeing Jesus ere this time, but am free to acknowledge the mistake was ours, as immutable facts most clearly prove.

I was glad to see your articles upon Christian Union. The gospel hope is still my hope."

—:o:—

BRO. J. B. PAINE writes from Suncook, N. H.:—"If every one that receives the Crisis weekly, feels as much comforted by reading it as I do, I know that they would not wait long, after they were informed of their indebtedness, before they would make an effort to pay. I am satisfied in my own mind that there are but few so poor they could not pay one dollar in six months.

Brethren and Sisters, let us be honest at heart; for we must soon give account of ourselves unto God. When I first heard of the Savior's second coming, in 1843, I began to search the scriptures to see if these things were so. I saw they taught that the saints did not get their reward at death, as I was always taught, but at Christ's second coming, and at the resurrection of the just. I saw also that to look for what was called a temporal millennium, was contrary to the teachings of the Bible. I saw also, plainly, that the Bible taught immortality and eternal life was to be obtained through patient continuance in well doing, and that the second death is the end of the sinner, and not eternal life in hell fire.

Brethren, I have been disappointed, but am not discouraged. May the Lord help us to keep the word of His patience, that we may be kept in the hour of temptation."

—:o:—

SR. L. HILL writes from Ashfield, Ms.:—"I feel some responsibility resting upon me to bear testimony to what I consider to be the truth of God, which has been rendered more dear as I have seen it despised and rejected. Jesus will come again and fulfill the promise that he made to his disciples,—'if I go away, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also.' Blessed hope! which affords consolation as we journey onward through this wilderness world. When I think of the wonderful works of God, I feel like praising him with all my heart. O may we be enabled to cease from our own work, that his will may be perfected in us, that we may not be ashamed before him at his coming."

—:o:—

BRO. J. B. FITCH writes from Wolfville, N. S.:—"I am satisfied that the Lord has got something for his children to do while they remain here. Let us remember the poor. 'Blessed is he that considerath the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble.' The Lord has told us, by the mouth of his servant David, to know that the Lord hath set apart him that is godly for himself.

Dear brethren, suffer the word of exhortation. We are out here a gazing stock for the world; they expect, they desire us to give up talking about the coming of the Lord, but we shall all show our colors if we love the appearing of our Lord; we shall love to talk about it better than anything else; we shall desire the salvation of our fellow men, and shall do all that we can for them; we shall be patient toward all men; we shall do good as we have opportunity, especially to the household of faith. Let us take heed to ourselves, lest our hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon us unawares. Let us humble ourselves, that we may be exalted in due time. Let us seek meekness, that we may be hid in the day of the Lord's anger. And may the Lord direct our hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ. Amen."

—:o:—

BRO. D. THAYER writes from Plainfield:—"I feel like holding on to the promise of the Master,—'if I go away, I will come again.' Although I have been disappointed in the fulfillment of the promise, yet I feel that it is sure, and in the best and at the right time He will come. I feel like trying to overcome, and thus be an heir with Jesus to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. I am looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of the Lord; and believe that when the fourth universal kingdom ends, the saints of the Most High will take the kingdom under the whole heaven, and possess it forever and ever."

—:o:—

BRO. N. F. NASON writes from North Hermon, Me.:—"Bro. G.:—I wish to say a word to the brethren and sisters where I have traveled and preached in different states. My health is very poor. I cannot travel but a little from home, preach but little. My faith is good. God has been in the Advent move. Christ will soon come to deliver his saints. Cast not away your confidence, it has a great recompense of reward. You have need of patience, that after you have done the will of God, to wait for the promise. I wish you all to pray for me that God will restore my health, that I may preach his word."

—:o:—

ELD. J. BLAIN writes from Buffalo, N. Y.:—Having returned to "sweet home" after a three months' tour East, I wish to give to brethren who feel an interest in the reform in which I am engaged, a brief account of my journey, and the state of things where I have been. I visited New York the 1st of December last to obtain books, and see and hear from brethren expecting to return in ten days, and get ready to start west again; but finding friends disposed to aid me so that I could continue traveling in new fields of labor, I resolved to go farther East.

I enjoyed much my visit with brother Storrs, finding that "two can walk together though not agreed" on ALL points, especially where the points are not among "the weightier matters of the law." I found the number of brethren had increased in New York since last there, three years ago, and that a good degree of feeling and zeal existed—preached twice for them, and they cheered me, not only by a hearty welcome, but also by material aid, which I needed.

In Newark, N. J., I also found some veteran soldiers, keeping up a beacon light, —and willing to encourage me—preached to them one Lord's day.

On my way East I stopped over night at Springfield, and was bid welcome by our faithful brethren Cooley and Ladd,—who "helped me on my way," as in Bible times.

I spent but part of a day in Providence, and a few good brethren had hearts and means to aid me. I spent a Sabbath in Fairhaven Mass., and found a united, warm-hearted and liberal band of brethren—though few in number, I trust their light will yet affect the village. Brethren in New Bedford I found had no pastor, but are generally supplied—seemed united, which is a blessing indeed in these last days; are a goodly number, and willing to make great sacrifices for the great truth I mostly advocate.

I spent a month in Boston, Roxbury, Charlestown, and adjacent places, and was more encouraged than in any place I ever visited before. One cause of joy, was in finding deacons and other members in Baptist and Congregational (or orthdox) churches, openly advocating destruction, and left peaceably to enjoy their belief by their churches. In one Baptist church they had lately debated the subject for six weeks in the Bible class, and a number embraced the truth. I visited about a dozen, and some bought books to lend and give, and some aided me to forward the cause. The leaven is working in right places in Boston and other parts East, and brethren will soon see more fruits of their labor, and that they have "not labored in vain" in past years.

In Roxbury, is a united, active band of brethren, who, after I had preached for them one Sabbath, hired the City Hall for three evenings, and I lectured to about 100 new hearers each night. I can never forget the kindness and liberality of brethren in Roxbury; the Lord reward them richly in his soon coming kingdom.

Two brethren in Charlestown paid out $25 for halls, advertizing, and to aid me; would to God I could see a like sacrificing spirit in all who see the truth; the torment system would soon be "among the things that were." I lectured three evenings to good assemblies of new hearers. Once the hall was crowded, and many books were called for. The bad weather in our cold January prevented many from attending the lectures.

In Worcester I hired a hall, (paid $5, four of which was collected,) and between 200 and 300 were out. Sold and gave more books than ever before at one lecture. I also lectured one evening in each of the halls where the two bands of brethren meet; had a very pleasant visit with Bro. Taylor, author of the Voice of the Church. He attended all my lectures, and seemed decided to wage a more vigorous war against the God-dishonoring doctrine of endless misery; though I was happy to learn he had preached life only through Christ plainly to his people, who bought nearly ten dollars worth of books of me. Brethren here seemed well disposed to help on the cause, but an uncommon scarcity of money in the city prevented their doing much at present.

The prospect of our reform in the East far exceeds what I anticipated, or what it appeared to be three years ago when there, and duty may call me that way again anon, if my life be prolonged.

CHRIST COMING TO JUDGMENT.

TUNE.—Ganges.

The Savior comes! He comes again,
In royal majesty to reign;
Lo! soon he will appear!
Lift up your heads, ye saints rejoice,
And listen to the angel voice,
That speaks his coming near.

Now from their dusty beds they rise—
"The dead in Christ"—with sweet surprise,
And sing the victor's song;
"O death where is thy venom sting;
O grave where is thy triumphing?"—
The joyful theme prolong.

Anon the wicked seek a place,
To hide from the Messiah's face,
They weep, and wail, and groan;
From rocks and mountains hear their cries,
They cannot bear the searching eyes
Of Him upon the throne.

Assembled round the judgment seat,
Both saint and sinner here now meet,
The myriads trembling stand;
The Judge proceeds now to decide,
The wicked ranged on the left side—
The just at His right hand.

"Ye blessed of my Father, come!
Receive from me a glorious crown,
All ye who trust in me;
But ye who have my power defied,
My gospel and my name denied,
My glory shall not see,—

But be consigned to death and strife,
Cut off from everlasting life,
Consumed in flames of hell;
While all "the ransomed of the Lord,"
Enter "the Paradise of God,"
And there forever dwell.

Words of Warning.

An extract from "Words of Warning," by J. Leufest, Lewiston, Me.

"It was a dark and dreary night, and our ship was driving with great velocity before the freshening wind. Groups of seamen and passengers were collected about deck, talking together of the probability of a happy termination of the voyage, when suddenly the look-out at the mast-head sang out, "Light ahead!" and before any one could answer him, "Breakers ahead! hard a-port!" Our ship answered her helm, and sheered rapidly off, just in time to escape a reef of rocks that lay exactly athwart our track. Had she struck, not a soul could have escaped. Just then, the thick weather clearing a little, discovered to us a ship lying at anchor, with a brilliant light aloft. It was this that we saw just in time to save us from certain destruction. Not knowing our exact whereabouts, we came to alongside of her. On boarding, we learned that the captain, aware of the dangerous position of this reef, had hoisted this light as a beacon to such as might sail that way. We returned our hearty thanks to him for his kindness, and promised that while we lay here we would follow his good example, and keep a bright light aloft. This promise we kept for a little while; but soon, not seeing any good resulting from it, we became careless, and finally neglected it altogether. One night, as we lay below asleep, we were startled by the firing of a gun, which was followed by a dreadful outcry. Rushing on deck, we saw that some ill-fated ship had struck this fatal rock, and was fast breaking up. Our feeble attempts to save some of the hapless crew and passengers were unavailing, and we were forced to see them, one after another, swept from the vessel by the sea that constantly broke over them, until at length the last one, with an appalling cry that pierced to our very hearts, was torn from the wreck, and perished amid the fury of the waves. With heavy hearts we got a light aloft, and anxiously waited for the morning. It came at last; but language is inadequate to describe our feelings, when we discovered, by pieces of the wreck, and bodies that were drifting in the eddies, that this ship was from our own place, and bound to the same port as ourselves. As the mutilated bodies came in sight, drifting in the whirls of the eddy, we recognized the familiar faces of our neighbors and familiar acquaintance; and some saw there their dearest friends. One poor fellow recognized his own mother; another, his sister; another still, his bosom companion, who had embarked with the fond hope of meeting him at the port to which we were bound; another, his own beloved son. No tongue can describe the sorrow that sat upon our countenances, or the cutting remorse that agonized our hearts. In the enjoyment of ease and comfort, we had neglected to hoist a light to warn our fellows of the danger we had but just escaped; and here, before our eyes, were the sad effects of our negligence."

A Mother's Prayers.

My earliest recollections painfully remind me of my father and the sufferings of a precious mother; but they have long since gone where no disclosures can affect them, and I relate the story of maternal fidelity as an encouragement to mothers in every sphere of life, and especially to comfort those who are exposed to such billows of sorrow as overwhelmed the soul of my dear mother.

My father was an intemperate man, and often very abusive in his family. My mother had but two children, and when she was made miserable by unkind treatment, she would lead my brother and me to a little spot under a side-hill, near our house, where we were screened from observation by the thick foliage of the trees which surrounded us, and there, kneeling upon a log, with a hand upon each little head, she would lift her tearful eyes to heaven, and commend us to the love and care of our heavenly Father.

Hardships and trials soon brought my mother to the grave, and I was sent to distant relatives, who were kind in providing me temporal comforts, but "no man cared for my soul." As I grew up, I became more and more depraved, and at the age of twenty-one I was vicious and degraded.

I lived with a farmer, who often sent me to market with the produce of his land, sometimes to distant parts of the state. Once, when going to sell a load of grain, I found myself within twenty miles of the home of my earlier days, and I felt irresistibly impelled to go and take one look of "the cave," as my mother called her little retreat, and see if the dear old log was still there. So, after I had disposed of the grain, I turned my horses from the direct road, stopped for the night, and reached the scene of my childhood at nine o'clock the next morning.

There I found the bethel, the trees, and the log nearly decayed, but in the very position where I distinctly remembered to have seen it so many years before. I seated myself upon it. The grass looked as if no foot had pressed it since the dear guide of my infant days was laid in her grave. I seemed to feel her warm hand upon my head, and to hear her trembling voice supplicating blessings for me; mercies I had despised, privileges I had abused. The anguish I endured I can never describe. On that spot, for the first time in my life, I felt myself a wretched sinner. I could not tear myself away till I had obtained some relief to my tortured conscience, and it was near sunset before I left the sacred spot. I did not leave it till I had resolved to devote the remainder of my life to God; to leave all and follow Him; and by his grace I trust I have been enabled, though imperfectly, to keep that resolution.

My precious mother's prayers were answered, and I, "a miracle of grace," am a monument of the faithfulness of a prayer-hearing God.—From a Clergyman.

O HEAR ME WHEN I CRY.

BY H. L. H.

Jesus, thou Lord of life and love,
Ruler o'er all in earth and sky,
Whose glory brightens all above;
O hear me when I cry.

Thou great High Priest, thou mighty one,
To thee in faith I now draw nigh;
Blest Savior, from thy gracious throne,
O hear me when I cry!

Burdened and lone, oppressed, forlorn,
With helpers far, and dangers nigh:
Shield me from dark afflictions's storm,
O hear me when I cry!

In times of trouble and of tears,
When sorrow's tempest rages high,
When my sad heart is filled with fears,
O hear me when I cry!

And if I walk death's shadowy vale,
And to its gloomiest depths draw nigh,—
When flesh shall shrink and heart shall fail,
O hear me when I cry!

For the Crisis.

Nothing to Live For, vs. Something to Live For.

How often is this remark made by persons when thwarted in their earthly plans,—"I have nothing to live for." We see the young man with marked energy engaging in some worldly enterprise with a heart buoyant with hope. For a season everything looks prosperous before him. No drawbacks are realized. A little in the future he imagines himself independent, living in affluence and rolling in luxury. But ere he reaches the desired goal, adverse winds commence their howling; the sky of anticipation, once so serene, becomes black with the tempest-cloud, and the hope so fondly cherished blights in his bosom: his business no longer flatters; he sinks back, hopeless, and looking in this and that direction for the shooting up of some day-star, he sees nothing but obscurity; and abandoning himself to all the evil passions of the human heart until life becomes a burden he says,—"I have nothing to live for."

We see another, the chief ambition of whose heart is to reach some honorary station in the literary world. He drags himself through a long and tiresome course of tuition; is untiring in his efforts to qualify himself for some important station in life; starts upon his career, and for a while darts up the hill of science with the velocity of the eagle; but alas! finding his race altogether an uncertain one, and the honor for which he sought only for the few, he has nothing to fall back on but poor human nature, to whose deceptive voice he listens for awhile, and then feeling himself thwarted in all his purposes, says within himself, "I have nothing to live for."

Look at another, seeking to climb the pinnacle of fame and to register his name among stars, in characters of blood, striving every way as he acts upon the stage of human affairs, to make himself conspicuous and establish his own selfishness. He moves on in his war chariot amid the mutilated remains of his fellow beings, and the tears and sobs of widows and orphans, until, as a tyrant, he is driven to some desolate island amid the solitudes of old ocean, where shorn of all he has admired, he says, "let me di , for I have nothing to live for."

Look at a thousand others of earth's mad children, disregarding the calls of wisdom as she puts forth her voice, standing in the top of the high places, choosing rather to give their honor unto others and their years unto the cruel, until rottenness enters their bones and they mourn at last when their flesh and their body are consumed, saying, "how have I hated instruction and my heart despised reproof." Having drunken water out of their own cistern to the full, they wind up a short career of sinful pleasure with this awful acknowledgement, "I have nothing to live for." Young man! Young woman! Hast thou nothing to live for? think again.

Labor no longer to heap together your treasures of shining dust, nor to satisfy he capricious mind with the intoxicating contents of pleasure's cup. Thou hast a higher, a more holy calling. Dost thou listen to the groans of the prisoners? Then loose the bands of wickedness; undo the heavy burdens; let the oppressed go free. Have the cries of the widow and fatherless saluted thine ears? Then bring the poor that are cast out to thine house, and hide not thyself from thine own flesh. Hast thou heard the deep wailings of sorrow from heathen lands, where more than six hundred millions, b-ne of thy bone, and flesh of thy flesh, in their blindness are falling down to sticks and stones? Then send them the lamp of life. Seest thou a world lying in wickedness? Then point the sinner to the Lamb of God, knowing there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety just persons that need no repentance. Has thou seen the deep depravity of the human heart? Then heed the exhortation of an inspired apostle, "that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them and rose again."

Truly there is something to live for.

For the Crisis

Short Articles.

Dear me! why do not all who write for the Crisis write short articles? How much better it would be! Why, what a task it is to read one of those long, dry, round-about, going-there-and-coming-back articles! I should almost as willingly have an attack—a slight attack—of the fever and ague. Do not the printers scold about it! I should think they would. I should think they would feel typed almost to death by the time they got through setting up the type for one of them! Say, printers, do you not love articles short, plain, and sweet? Do you not hate these long, dry, go-to-sleep, 'tis-as-'twas, spin-it-out articles? I reckon you do. Bro. Editor, are they not tedious to you? They ought to be, if they are not, if you are anything of a decent man, and have any compassion on the folks who would read your paper if there was the least prospect of ever getting to the end of some of the articles which it contains. O, writers, be ye merciful? O, I beseech of you, condense your thunder! A young minister once came to me, and said, brother Burnham, how do you so contrive to interest and hold your congregations? O, said I, I get something to say, and then I say it, and then I sit down! So I say about writing in a public paper; get something to write, and then write it—not write all day to get at it—not write all round about it—but write it—out with it—right and straight! Let it come all in a heap, fire, light, glory, beauty, water, rivers, mountains, oceans, forests, time, eternity, all mixed together! Says one, "Grant always publishes Burnham's articles." Yes, do you know the reason, brother? I can tell you. It is not because they are of much consequence, or because they are so very good, but because they are all short; and hence, he can afford to. Come, now, do not get up in a huff, and say you will not write at all; that is no way to act; but just get an idea in your head then trim it down to a sharp point, then fix it right on the bow-string of energy, and let drive at a venture! and hit some one right between the joints of the harness! In with your one pebble, David, right into the sling, and FIRE!

What I Want.

I want a sure title to a share in the inheritance of the Abrahamic farm. Can I have it, or must I remain in doubt all my sojourn in the enemy's land? Yes, the Word assures me I can secure a title that not even the enemy of all good can take from me. How can I secure it? By complying with the conditions. What! every little thing mentioned in the Word, even to "idle words"—small sins? Yes, there is no provision for one sin. One sin drove our first parents from Paradise; one sin will keep me from Paradise restored. By one flaw or mistake here in a deed or will given by man to man, we lose the possession. How much more care should we have in securing eternal life. My soul, think on these things! Nothing short of holiness of heart and life, obeying all the commandments, will secure the title.

I want to wait on the Lord continually, to live by the moment, to put far away all anxiety for the future. I want to feel that God is my refuge and strong deliverer. I want so to believe on him, so to trust him, that he may be my strength and shield evermore. I want to realize that nothing can harm me so long as I follow that which is good.

I want a forgiving temper. I want to forgive as I would hope to be forgiven. Do I perceive that any wish to injure my reputation, to rob me of that which is my due, to lessen my influence, to embarrass me in relation to my pecuniary affairs? Then I want to pity them, forgive them, to pray the prayer our blessed Savior prayed when suffering on the accursed tree;—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

I want to feel that when a trial comes, I can bear that very trial. I would not feel that if the Lord would remove that, and send me something else, I could bear it. But I would feel that I can bear the very trial he sends. He is a kind Father, and knows just what trials are for my best good. I would not doubt his wisdom, or his loving kindness, but would feel and believe that if trials are rightly improved, they will prove the richest of blessings.

I want a self-sacrificing spirit, a spirit that shall enable me, if need be, willingly and joyfully to cut off a right hand or pluck out a right eye. I want a spirit of deep sympathy for the impenitent, for those perishing in their sins, for the fallen, the degraded, the outcast. I want to feel so constrained by love for their souls, so influenced by the ever blessed Spirit, that I can open my mouth in wisdom, and effectually point them to the Savior—to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.

I want my feet set in a large place; my soul to be a well-watered garden, whose waters fail not. I want so to believe, so to love, so to obey, that I may be one with the Father. I want to learn from experience the truth of what our Savior says in John 14: 23; viz.,—"If a man love me he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him."

These are some of the wants of the christian. And whosoever professes Christ, and feels not the need of these things, knows not his own poverty; knows not that he is poor, and miserable, and blind, and naked; that he is nothing, and in need of all things. Such an one has but a name to live. We live only as Christ liveth in us. And without his live-giving influence we are dead while we live.

We want these things because God requires us to have them; because they are needful to our peace of mind and usefulness; needful to enable us to glorify God; needful in order to secure the title of the promised inheritance. He is not a hard master. But what he requires he is ready to give grace and strength to perform. "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." Let us prove the Lord and see if he is not faithful to his promises; see if he does not hear and answer our request. Yes, though we are guilty and unworthy, though we can do nothing ourselves, our request will be heard. The blessing will come, it will not tarry. As if wafted on the very breeze of heaven, we shall feel its blessed influences in our own souls, and thus be enabled, in the hand of God, to be instrumental in the salvation of souls and the promulgation of truth. Who, that presents their supplications sincerely, definitely and believingly, but has learned from experience the verification of the promises of God?

Temporal Prosperity.

In these days of costly church edifices, when churches are apologizing for a want of revival spirit by saying they have enjoyed great temporal prosperity, it is well that some voice be raised, to cry out against the means that are used to bring about this prosperity, even though it be like the voice of a Pelican in the wilderness. The church has often found herself the subject of want, either real or imaginary, and means have been devised to bring about the object desired; viz., to supply these wants, and instead of taking the gospel method to get them supplied, and seeking first the kingdom of God, that all things else may be added, they have used those Hell-born agents,—Levees; and to make them more attractive, and to insure the more money, (as money, the golden calf is the shrine at which they worship,) a "Post Office," with its sickly sentimentalism, and a "Grab Bag," with its puppets, are resorted to; and then they are not satisfied without crowning the whole with a LOTTERY in some form, which comes in, like a tri-headed monster, to make it a paying concern.

We are told in the Bible that we are not to "do evil that good may come." Now let me ask every Congregationalist, Baptist, Methodist, or any other denomination, if Levees are not detrimental to the growth of religion in the soul? and if, when they desire such means to bring about what they wish, they are not really coming down into the plains of Ono (the world), to reason with sanballa (sin), and agreeing to sacrifice their spiritual enjoyment for the meagre enjoyment of the place, if thereby a good end may be obtained? My brother, my sister, let your own experience answer. Did you ever "get blessed" in a Levee, when nonsense was the order of exercises, and foolishness and fashion were seen in all their deformity? I am aware that I may be met by the apologists for the course, (and there are, alas! too many of that class,) with the inquiry, "How shall we in our weakness erect church edifices unless some such means are resorted to?" Better never have them than to get them by such unhallowed means. I know we want a place where the people, and converts especially, may be fed by the preaching of the word; but let us take a fact, and see if the end may not be reached by other means.

I spent a Sabbath, a few weeks since, in a neat little church, and was afterward informed in regard to its history as follows: "We commenced," says the narrator, "meetings in an old school-house, but the place soon became too strait for us, and we thought, as the hearts of God's people were getting warmed with his love, and sinners were being converted, we might build a small house, and have stated preaching. We commenced the work of collecting, and, in a much less time than we had anticipated, we had a house built and paid for twice the size we had expected." This was done without a Levee, and, under other circumstances than the enjoyment of a powerful revival, would have been abandoned if, indeed, it had ever been thought of.

We need not ask whether Levees are soul-saving means. When we invite sinners there, and there fill them to the full with their own pleasure, do they not rather counteract the influence of the preaching of the gospel on the Sabbath, by saying, "you need not repent now, for we have got a 'Vanity Fair' here, and we wish to exchange our merchandize for your money." Oh! if the brethren would consecrate their tobacco, or rather the price of the stuff, and throw the weed away, consecrate the price, I say, to the Lord's cause, and the sisters follow their example with their jewelry and other useless ornaments, and all live more devoted lives, and agonize more for the blessing, we should see the powerful effect of the promise,—"seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

[The above is from a young minister. May the Lord preserve him from the evils of these last days.—ED.]

Future Glory.

The earth now seems to be shrouded in sadness, as an emblem of mourning which surrounds the dark tomb; yet all the confusion and turmoil, unfailingly speak a quick end to all its strife and gloom. Soon, rulers must fall and their pomp fade away, like dew in the morning before a bright sun, and empires crumble to ashes, no more to be crowned with glory. Then Christ's promised kingdom of joy shall bring to his people their long-sought rest, they be established in glory, and ever enjoy the bliss of his kingly and heavenly reign. Oppression and war shall then be no more; but honor and riches, alike will be given to all who shall enter the portals of peace, where sin and its evils forever have fled. The troubles of earth will then no more annoy, nor bondage, nor fear, shall diminish our happiness. Every scene shall administer what we desire, and the great love of Jesus shall inspire all our pleasures. Mid pastures of pleasantness girded with streams from fountains most sacred with glory; our Shepherd will often with his flock love to roam over those beautiful landscapes, himself being the delight of their long-cherished inheritance. There all that is beautiful, lovely, with all that is costly, angelic, and fair, yea, all that can cheer and enrapture the mind will then all their charms and their virtues impart. Not a pain, nor a sigh, nor a sorrowful tear, nor gloom, neither sadness, shall ever enter to grieve for a moment the ransomed throng, as they sing the conqueror's song, rejoicing over death. No mind can conceive all that God will prepare for those who will freely and willingly share his promises, the bliss which awaits all his dear children cannot be measured, for nought is so great.

There all that is tranquil shall quickly convey bright visions of beauty, and all that is glorious, ecstatic, sublime, shall entwine wreaths of unspeakable splendor. If anything is wished, then his love will provide, and he will supply all our wants for "all things are yours," and all these shall be given to those who have sought a home in the kingdom. A feast of rejoicing unrivalled shall welcome each guest, while Jesus with honors and gifts, will himself delight to crown all our pleasures. The music of seraphs will gladden each one who shall impart of their skill and their voices to those who shall join in their heavenly strains of praising our blessed Redeemer. The skies most pellucid shall reflect to the earth such beams of effulgent glory as never before, since angelic anthems rang through all heaven, when "sons of God shouted," and "morning stars sung."

The earth in its holy and purified state,
Will surpass all the glory that man can relate;
Each prospect shall brighten as saints shall behold
Its beauties unfading, its grandeur untold.
If joys thus ineffable are to await
All those who prepare for this glorious state,
Let all who may wish in the kingdom to share,
By faith and obedience strive to be there.

The Backbiter, or Slanderer.

"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that BACKBITETH NOT WITH HIS TONGUE, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor TAKETH UP A REPROACH against his neighbor.—Psa. XV., 1, 2, 3.

Standing out on the face of the above quotation, may be seen a great, important and lasting truth,—a truth so plain that "he who runs may read," and the "wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein;" and, were nothing more said upon the points, in the Word of God, it is sufficient to show the slanderer his folly and wickedness.

"Backbiteth not with his tongue." Backbiting is the lowest, meanest, and most debasing form of slander. The backbiter is an arrant coward. He dare not meet the victim of his venomous tongue face to face, but skulks about, here and there breathing out the poisonous stream in soft, insidious whispers, seeking to elude him, as does the robber to avoid the light of day, because his deeds are evil.

We can honor no man or woman who will be a slanderer. We would have as little to do with them as possible; yet we are often compelled to hear of slander from various sources,—from the bar-room, from the group at the street corners, from every den of vice, and not unfrequently from those whom we least expect, even professed followers of the meek and lowly Savior,—villifying our character; and yet we never meet with one of these vilest of the vile, children of the wicked one, they fearing to afford us an opportunity, by coming to the light, to repel their base charges.

There are two classes who are chargeable with the guilt and are responsible for every slander—the originator and circulator. Wicked must be the man who covets and steals his neighbor's goods, but infinitely more wicked and base is the man or woman who is envious of the good name of another, and maliciously seeks, by backbiting, or taking up a reproach, to rob him of this "pearl of great price," for Solomon, the wise man, in the 22d of Proverbs, declares that "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." In the language of the poet,

"He that steals my money, steals trash,
But he that steals my good name, steals all."

"Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor." It is a credible fact that individuals can be found, in good standing in society, who will endeavor to ruin the character of those who may be opposed to them in principles, and, though not the originators of slander, take the more insidious plan of spreading it. The inventors of slander may have been thoughtless, or without character, and therefore unworthy of consideration, but they who take it up and give it circulation after, do the greater injury, because their position gives authority to the charge. Were these backbiters disregarded as they should be, they would sink into contempt, but when professed christians or good men take up and whisper to each other, with injunctions to secrecy, an unauthenticated report, it is thence the greatest harm follows, and on them rests the weight of responsibility. Let no one think to evade this responsibility on the ground that he is not the author of a slander, for he that receiveth or "TAKETH UP A REPROACH" is ranked with the "backbiter," and never will abide in the "tabernacle" of the Lord, or dwell in his "holy hill."

But we are certainly amid the "perils" of the "last days." "Iniquity abounds and the love of many has waxed cold,"—love that worketh no ill to his neighbor,—and, according to the word of the Apostle, "evil men and seducers" "wax worse and worse," deceiving and being deceived;" and "he that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution," the severest of which will come from "false brethren," for the Scripture declares that "a man's enemies are they of his own house," which declaration is true. But let tribulation come, we will not "cast away our confidence which hath great recompense of reward," for we know that "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord,"—working out a "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory,"—"tribulation worketh patience, patience experience, experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit." Therefore when we shall have been "purified, made white and tried,"—"PURIFIED" in the "furnace of affliction," "in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren;" "MADE WHITE" in the "blood of the Lamb," coming up out of "great tribulation;" "TRIED" by "persecution," and "PERFECTED" through "suffering" as was the "Captain of our salvation," we shall receive a "crown of life" and an "entrance abundantly into the everlasting kingdom,"—God's "holy hill,"—and into the heavenly city, the "New Jerusalem," which hath foundations, whose "builder and maker is God," when it, the "tabernacle of God shall be with men."

And notwithstanding "darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people," yet we rejoice that "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." Seeing then we have such light, we will use plainness of speech, and walk as "children of the Light." "This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. He that saith he is in the light and HATETH his brother, is in darkness even until now." "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar," and he that "hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." Envy or hatred is the "root of bitterness," and it produces bitter fruits, such as backbiting, or taking up a reproach; and, where envy and hatred is, "there is every evil work." "But he that LOVETH his brother abideth in the light (is 'passed from death unto life' because he 'loves the brethren,') and there is none occasion of stumbling (marg. scandal) in him," for "love worketh no ill to his neighbor." Dost thou love to be scandalized? "Love thy neighbor as thyself," and "Refrain thy tongue from evil and thy lips that they speak no guile." Wouldst thou have others take up and spread a reproach or slander against thee? "Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you." Walk no longer in darkness. "He that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes."

"Awake to righteousness and sin not." "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption," but "He that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." And remember, that "for every idle word that men shall speak they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment, for by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned;" therefore "be ye holy in all manner of conversation." "Some men's sins go before to judgment, some men's follow after." Let the unrighteous confess and forsake their evil ways that they may find mercy, and be prepared to "abide in the tabernacle" of the Lord, and "dwell in his holy hill."

J. D. C. WHEELER.

From Bro. W. McCullock.

BRO. GRANT:—Having through the providence of God, and as I felt the call of duty, removed my residence from the dear brethren in North Adams, I feel it a duty I owe to them and to the cause of God to write a line for the paper.

Dear Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad, God has been a God at hand and not afar off; praise his Name! We have been subject to the dangers of travel on the last day chariots, for while repeated disasters occurred to the train that bore us to our western home, God's watchful eye and gracious care has been over us and has preserved us, while others have been hurried to the tomb; and we feel more than ever to trust in God, and our dependence on him. While the mass of people throng the ways of public travel, thoughtless and regardless of God and his truth, there will be now and then one that is committing the keeping of the soul to God, who is able to do all for such in time of need. Yes, the Lord is good, praise his Name! He has been good to us in preserving us, and by the help of God we mean to exemplify the religion of Jesus Christ, and as much as in us lies, to spread the truth of the soon coming Kingdom of Christ.

Here is a broad field for labor, and may God in his providence send some of his faithful watchmen this way to warn the people to be prepared for the judgment. The people, I think, are willing to hear.

We are six miles from meeting-houses, but there is now and then a school-house, I learn, which may be occupied for preaching, and the people generally turn out to hear. I think if the doctrine of the Advent was preached, it would be heard; and if heard, it would be strange if some did not see the beauty and the harmony of God's word, and the fulfillment of scripture, and embrace the truth.

If any of the preaching Brethren find their way West, they will find a hearty welcome and a pilgrim's home, (such as we have,) while duty may call them to stay.

WM. MCCULLOCK.

Lamoille, Bureau Co., Ill.

From Sr. Lydia M. Collins.

"The love of money is the root of all evil." In the records of modern as well as ancient history, we find the above scripture truth fully proven. It is the source of almost every crime; let it be of ever so black a dye, man is in many instances ready to plunge headlong, without a moment's reflection of what will be the consequences. What will not man do for money? What has not man done for money already? Is there anything so horrid, but what men will do? lying, cheating, and stealing, are almost an every day occurrence with many; whilst others will branch out into more extravagance, and by giving way to their unhallowed passions, in an evil hour commit crimes which a moment's reflection would make them shudder with horror. The love of wealth is almost universal. It is what the old and young, the rich and poor, are all seeking for. Did I say all? there are some few exceptions, thank God. Yet they are seeking for more durable riches than those which are held with a "miserly grasp." Did our heavenly Father place man here to be in possession of his millions, and live merely for himself? No. "The Lord loveth the cheerful giver." The covetous man will never know the luxury of giving to the poor, and lending to the Lord. "For there is that scattereth, and yet increaseth: and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." How, I ask, can a man professing godliness make a miser of himself? Surely he must at times feel the keen edge of remorse, as he opens the sacred book and reads, "love thy neighbor as thyself."

My dear Brn. and Srs., my prayer is, that the Lord will keep us from all such idolatry. May our treasure be laid up in heaven, from whence we are looking for the Savior. "O come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." The little flock is scattered. Gather thou the sheep into one fold. I never had a greater desire to see my Master than now. The Lord has been good to me. I will praise his holy name. My health had well nigh gone, yet He who has promised to hear his children's cry, heard and answered prayer, and I recovered. It is good for me to trust in the Lord; I employ no other physician. I will declare His glory, for glory is his due. For two and a half years past I have been a wonder to many; some thinking I had not been sick; others believing that I was still sick, but unwilling to own it. Strange as it may seem to the world, and even to some professed christians, I should not dare to say that I was not healed by the power of God in answer to prayer. But they say I have been sick since. True, I have. Even then, the Lord was my helper, and not man. I am yet mortal. If I transgress, I expect to suffer for it. We are to "seek for immortality." We shall, if faithful, receive it when Jesus comes. Then we shall be free from sickness, pain and death.

To those who were present at the time I was healed, I would say that my health was never better than now. Some, who were present then, have been deeply afflicted of late. Bro. and Sr. Whitney, your little Mary has left you. She was too good for earth in its present state. But when the curse is removed and it is again restored back to its Eden beauty, then you will see that same little form made more beautiful than ever. From your sister loving the appearing of Jesus,—

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 1, 1857.

Moral Signs.

No. IV.

"The wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand." Dan. 12: 10.

How plainly this scripture is fulfilling before our eyes. Almost every day we have additional proof that we have fully entered the period of time when the above, and kindred passages are to have their accomplishment. The moral condition of the world at the present time is preaching a perpetual sermon—the Lord is soon coming; and we expect it will echo louder and louder till overwhelmed by the trump that wakes the dead.

In Joel 3: 13, we read,—"Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get you down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great." Jesus tells us, "the harvest is the end of the world." Then at the end wickedness will be great. Is this in harmony with the popular idea of the world's conversion? Not at all. If we are to have a thousand years when Christ will reign spiritually, before he comes to reign literally, why has not some Bible writer mentioned it somewhere between Genesis and Revelation. We search in vain for proof that the world will be any better, before the personal visible coming of the Lord than it is at the present time; but on the contrary, we find much plain testimony in the Bible, that the inhabitants of this planet will continue to grow worse unto the end of this dispensation; and facts sustain this position. We will give a few.

PRIVATE ARMING.—We saw two gentlemen the other night—when going home from a party about two o'clock,—prepare for their walk home,—one looking at his revolver, and the other at his short heavy club, about a foot and a half long. Bad state of things, when men feel so little safety in city protection, as to deem such formidable preparation necessary for a midnight walk.—N. Y. Express.

The following is from another N. Y. paper:

"THE AGE WE LIVE IN.—Glorious times these, for dishonesty! One man steals a thousand shares of stock, and converts them into cash, runs away, and though he was a thief at home, becomes a hero in the land in which he is a fugitive! Another man starts a fictitious bank, pushes a hundred thousand dollars of its worthless notes into circulation, closes its doors, and laughs behind his pile of pilfered gold at the indignation of the community. Another gets into public office, boldly plunders the public treasury, defies the law, mocks at justice, and when called upon for explanations, is too unwell to obey, or treats cavalierly the authorities. Another boasts of the "pickings and stealings" of his public position, accepts bribes for his political influence, is indicted, escapes punishment because his offence is universal, and then demands a still higher mark of the popular confidence for his unblushing corruption. Another makes night hideous with his indecent broils, consorts with bawds and blacklegs, forfeits his recognizances to appear and answer before a court of justice for his iniquitous misdeeds, and is nominated to a responsible post by his delighted fellow citizens!

* * * *

Do not ask us why we treat these melancholy facts with such an air of ill-becoming levity. "Motley's your only wear," now-a-days. It is of no practical use to be serious. New York loves to be robbed and despoiled, and laughed at, and made a convenience of by the human scum that every little ward ebullition throws up to the political surface, and why should we grieve, to be sneered at for our grieving? Why should we denounce, to be made fun of by the sufferers? Put up a respectable man for office—can he be elected? Not a bit of it. Put up a rogue, and every rogue will vote for him—ergo, he is certain of a majority. The people choose it; then let the people enjoy it. They riot and revel like worms, in the moral putrescence of defunct political probity. If they like the flavor of it, Heaven forbid that we should waste breath in calling them away from it! "To't, pell-mell," as King Lear says; let political lechery thrive! Push the disgusting and the revolting to extremes. The sooner we reach a crisis, the sooner will arrive that "sober second thought" that may lead us to a more rational view of what constitutes enlightened freedom and respectable self-government.

The following is from the Boston Herald of March 18, 1857:

THE PREVALENCE OF MURDERS.—Is there a thirst for blood? Has murder become an epidemic? Do we trifle with human life? The records of the day are laden with the deeds of murder. No community is exempt; no class free from its awful visitations. In Macbeth's time they supped on horrors; in our time, we have horrors at every meal. Every mail brings a tale of blood; every day's telegraph heralds the story of each day's wrongs. Whence comes this awful spirit to imbrue our hands in our brother's blood, which is manifest throughout the land?

These questions are pregnant, and must be met. They involve our dearest interests. It cannot be winked out of sight that now is the full time to ask them and have them answered. The land is reeking with murder. Crimes of the deepest hue abound. Violence fills the land. Within a month the records of murder have been increased to that extent, it would require the time of more than one tribunal, continuously, to keep the docket clear. Do these repeated and increasing homicides indicate that the world is growing worse than formerly, or what do they indicate?

The answer is obvious. They indicate most clearly that we are in "the time of the end," when the wicked are doing wickedly; in days like those of Noah and Lot. Prepare to meet the Lord!

A BROTHER sends the following question, soliciting an answer.

"Ought we to fellowship a preacher who neglects to train up his children to be moral?"

Short Sermon.

BY W. SHELDON.

"And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." 2 Thess. 3: 5.

Thus prayed an apostle of Jesus Christ, whose intense anxiety for the welfare of the church moved him to tears by day and night. This short petition is fraught with thrilling instruction. It pours sweet consolation into the aching bosoms of tempted saints.

1. "The love of God." The saint may be deprived of every earthly enjoyment; but neither wicked men or demons can rob him of that heavenly boon,—"the love of God." The boisterous winds of human adversity may howl with intense fierceness, and yet this divine, internal element will glow with sweet consolation to the tempest-tost child of faith. Let the foaming floods of tribulation overflow him, and submerge him to its lowest depths, yet this holy fire is unquenched. While its possessor stands unflinchingly for God, he cannot be separated from this divine effusion of the Holy Ghost; ("the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost,") hence the importance of the admonition to the saint himself; "Quench not the Spirit."

2. "The patient waiting for Christ." Although we now possess a sacred relationship, "it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him." How much hangs upon Christ's coming! If he never comes, we can never be made like him; hence, in waiting for Christ, we are not waiting for an unimportant event; but for the crowning event. Upon this event the attention of every inspired seer has been fixed, as the time of future reward. To this event Christ repeatedly and plainly pointed the minds of His followers. For this event He taught them to pray. The apostles, in looking from labor to repose, have desired this event. The hope of millions of saints has been suspended upon this event. Then why should we not look for it? Why should we not long for it, and pray for it? It is the only event that can usher us into the society of death-divided friends. It is the only event that can bring us into the society of angels, and place us on an equality with them. Nay, more; it is the only event that can place us in the eternal presence of Him who gave his life a ransom for us. With this event comes our "crown of glory," our "palm of victory," our "harp," and our tearless, sorrowless state. With this event comes everlasting life, everlasting joy, and everlasting repose. Amen.

For the Crisis.

The Christian's Future Home.

What an electric thrill of joy runs through the soul while contemplating upon the beauties of that blissful abode promised to those that obey the commands of Him who ruleth supreme above all other Gods. What christian heart has not been bereft of its despondency, and watered with the dews of heavenly grace while looking forward to the time when this sin-clad earth should throw off its garb of wickedness, and become as it once was before sin entered and contaminated it, a garden of celestial beauty, a bower of praise, where God delighted to dwell and minister unto the wants of man? But man sinned and came short of his duty toward God, and was thrust out of the beautiful garden which was designed by God, upon conditions that man sinned not, to be the home of all, thenceforth and forever. Although man has so abused and sinned against the commands of God as to be made unworthy of the abode given him, God in his kindness has promised his children that there should be a re-appearance of that abode, more beautiful even than the first. We delight to meditate upon the joys of that Eternal Home, and why should we not, seeing that all other joys that pertain to this world are so evanescent? Here in this vale of tears there is nothing permanent or lasting upon which to fix our hopes. Everything is transient and fleeting. We hardly meet with friends before we bid them farewell. But how widely different are the joys and pleasures that exist in that never-ending, never-fading home. There are joys and beauties ever blooming and never fading; beauties there are, wrought by the hand of God, that will so charm and captivate the soul, as to leave no room for one thought of those insignificant joys that perhaps once the enraptured soul delighted to participate in. There no sorrow from parting with friends will be felt, no anguish of heart, no pain, no strife, or any conflicting element will ever intrude upon the joy and happiness possessed by beings who have had conferred upon them the image of the Savior, their Lord and Master. Ah! no; these sorrows will never be known and felt in that world of light, where entereth nothing but righteousness, and where all are pure. Joyous and glorious future that, where no sin nor poisonous breath can waft its direful influence along the fair banks; where death, that cold messenger of the tomb, will no longer reign triumphant, but be exterminated. Oh, the thought of such a home! exhilirating thought! calculated to cheer the heart of the desponding christian and encourage him to hope on unto the end. How cheering, when wearied with things of earth, to soar away in imagination to those fair regions, and fancy ourself as sitting at the right hand of God, singing praises to Him and the Lamb, plucking fruits from life's fair tree, roaming upon those fair banks whose verdure is ever green, and never fading. These are blessed imaginings, too little indulged in. We cannot begin to conceive of the beauty, grandeur, and sublimity of that Eternal Home, for we now see through a glass darkly, but we hope that we shall one day see as we are seen, and gaze upon the face of Him who died that all might live. Yes, we hope to gaze upon the face of Him who will soon come to restore the earth to its primitive beauty and glory. We hope to walk the streets of gold and be clothed upon with righteousness. We hope to walk with God, clothed in linen clean and white, and be looked upon as worthy of the kingdom prepared for us. Who would not be an inmate of such a heavenly home? Who would not forego the joys and pleasures of this world, whose pleasures are but as empty bubbles, for joys that are real and lasting? Oh! what a loss it will be, when Christ cometh to gather His chosen ones, to be found unworthy of the abode prepared for us. Every other loss will be small compared with that, and every other gain trifling compared to the gaining of a home unfading. Oh! may the thought of such a home be ever before our eyes, that all the pleasing things here shall sink into insignificance before the thought of a fadeless land.

ELIZABETH C. WARNER.

Salisbury, Ct.

From Bro. E. G. Scott.

BRO. GRANT:—I would try and write a few lines about the state of things in this place, for the consolation of others in like circumstances. There are things here, as in every other place, to try and tempt the waiting ones. But a few are holding on to the promises, expecting and believing deliverance near. We have meetings on the Sabbath, which are profitable and interesting. There are some that met with us in days past, who now forget the assembling of themselves together, and thus cast their whole influence against those who are striving to serve God, and laboring for the upbuilding of his cause. But why this contention among those who profess to be the disciples of Christ? It seems if there was ever a time when professed Christians needed the whole armor of God on, it is at the present, whilst so many conflicting views are raging and distracting, and on all sides the fiery darts of Satan are being hurled with mad fury. But we feel there is One who knoweth the secret thoughts of our hearts, and will judge all with a righteous judgment, when all nations shall stand in solemn judgment. And with consoling words from the inspired book, we struggle on, buffeting the taunts of the enemy.

On the whole, we feel encouraged, for this state of things shows where we are in prophetic history—on the verge of eternity, with all its startling, solemn, and grand realities. We may imagine ourselves safe, and thus be lulled on by the syren song, "there's a good time coming;" but shortly this class will be mistaken, and be aroused from their awful lethargy when the clarion trump of God shall awake the sleepers from their dusty beds; when they shall come forth from the dark caverns of old ocean; when the Son of God, with ten thousands of angels, shall be seen on the great white throne. Oh! what fear will seize such, and with what awful feelings will such hear their doom,—"depart ye cursed."

This great and terrible day of the Lord is inevitable, and none can escape. And well is it, a warning voice is sounding through the land,—"be ready!"

E. G. SCOTT.

Vernon, Lt., March 2, '57.

From Bro. P. B. Morgan.

BRO. GRANT:—In sending you the enclosed * * I will add—God is yet blessing the preaching of His truth in the great West. I yesterday returned from Wilton, Iowa, where I have been laboring for the past three weeks; and although I met with considerable opposition from sundry mistaken religionists, the Lord be praised, truth has taken deep root in the minds of some of the most worthy citizens of the place. Not being permitted to continue our meetings in the place occupied by the churches, God put it in the mind of Mr. Day, the Railroad Superintendent, to give us the use of a spacious room in the passenger house, where we could preach and worship according to the dictates of our own conscience. The result has been, we now number another church in the great West, "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Last evening, met with the flock in this place, and find the cause progressing. The chapel, built by the untiring efforts of our esteemed Bro. Chandler, has been neatly finished, and for a number of weeks before I left for Iowa, we enjoyed with a series of meetings, the gracious, saving, and reviving influence of the Lord's Spirit in attendance upon the preaching of His truth; and upon my return I find the interest continuing most excellent, Bro. Chandler preaching occasionally.

I this afternoon leave for a short series of meetings at Union Grove, knowing that the promise of our Lord is, that He will be with us to the end of the world. If so, what need have we to fear? Knowing "we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known . . . the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," let us cast ourselves on Him, and be girded with the strength of God, feeling "the battle is the Lord's." Knowing also, that "he that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

The brethren in the new city of Princeton, directly across the river from this place, contemplate erecting their chapel early the coming season. The Lord be praised, for the onward march of His truth.

I wish also to remark, that upon my return to this place, I found a letter from our esteemed brother, Eld. I. E. Jones, of Morris, Grundy Co., Ill., giving some account of the deep afflictions through which he has been called to pass the past season. His accomplished and worthy christian companion departed this life sometime last fall, of one of the western fevers; and his only daughter, Mary Anna, died of acute Hydrocephalus, Jan. 11th. In his severe bereavement he writes;—"wave has followed wave, till I am but a wreck." I hope our brethren will bear his case before the throne of God. I am happy to add, he informs me he thinks of again giving himself to the labor of the gospel.

My P. O. address continues—Cordova, Rock Island Co., Ill.

Faithfully yours,
P. B. MORGAN.

Cordova. Ill., March 11, '57.

P. S. Bro. Pratt is with us, but thinks himself not able to preach much yet; but I think he has a prospect of being in the field again shortly. P. B. M.

For the Crisis.

The Scarlet Colored Beast, and Two Horned Beast.

No. II.

Before proceeding further with this argument it will be appropriate to call the reader's attention to the fact, that on a careful perusal of chap. 13: 11–18, there will be found to to exist, at one and the same time, no less than three, separate, and distinct beasts, as follows:

1. The two-horned beast, which the writer claims to be the allied powers of Europe.

2. The two-horned beast which was killed by a sword and carried into captivity (by Napoleon,) and which lives again, or is restored by the two-horned beast.

3. The image beast. Unless these truths are kept in mind, and the distinction kept up, but little progress can be made towards arriving at the truth. And any and every theory that fails to develop these three facts, must of necessity be defective.

Chap. 13: 11. "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth." By reference to the 1st verse of this chap., it will be seen that the Revelator "stood upon the sand of the sea," when this vision was going; that is, he was in spirit carried to the borders or commencement of the 1260 year period, allotted the ten-horned beast "called the sea." He first saw the Papal beast come up out of the abyss; he sees and describes its character, its duration, and its end, beyond which, or on the opposite shore, he sees the two-horned beast coming up out of the earth. By reference to chap. 17: 3, it will be seen that when the vision of the scarlet beast was given, his position, or stand of observation was changed; "so he carried me away in the Spirit into the wilderness." By reference to chap. 12, it will be seen that the wilderness state of the church was to continue 1260 years. From that stand in the wilderness, he looked forward through or beyond that wilderness state when he saw the scarlet beast, and the great harlot, their end, &c. Hence, the argument favors the idea, that the scarlet beast and the two-horned beast are identical, and their only appropriate place of development in the great stream of time, and the diversified changes in the forms of Roman government is that intervening between the ending of the 1260 years of papal domination and the judgment.

"And he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon." In the explanation given in chap. 17, and also in the prophecy in Daniel, horns are explained as representatives "of kingdoms;" and as there is no valid reason for a departure from this rule, I shall assume, that in the present case they symbolize two kingdoms. As Russia and England overthrew Napoleon and the French empire, and took the lead in the formation of the great European Alliance and subsequent events, we may regard them as answering the divine record. The lamb-like resemblance may be found in the article of compact, called "The Holy Alliance," when not only England and Russia, but all the sovereigns of Europe, declared "their firm determination to take no other rule for their conduct than the precepts of the Christian Religion." Their words and acts for the last few years show their hypocrisy as well as their dragonic character.

As verse 12, was particularly dwelt upon in the last article, I shall pass it by with a brief notice on one or two points only. "The first beast," as we have seen, was Papal Rome; and the deadly "wound was healed" in 1814, when that power was restored by the Allies. The worship which that beast then and subsequently received, has been fulfilled.

1, by the very act of [illegible] 2, by the return of the various papal states of Europe to the bosom of the church, after they had been dismembered by the violence of the French revolution: 3, by the [illegible] of the earth acknowledging her, [illegible] as the mother church but as an [illegible]dent, political [illegible] papal states of Italy; and 4, in the adoration she received from her two hundred millions of devoted subjects scattered over the earth, who all acknowledge her as having a kingdom above, or superior to the kings of earth—as God's vicegerent upon earth, &c.

Verses 13 and 14. The great wonders which the two-horned beast has power to do in the sight of the papal beast after its deadly wound is healed, by which the dwellers upon earth are deceived, &c., may better be understood after a cursory view of the extent of the dominion of the two-horned beast; viz. over all people and multitudes and nations and tongues." Hence, all the varied acts of those multitudes and nations noted in prophecy as occurring during the continuance of the two-horned beast, which are not agreeably to God's most holy will may appropriately be ascribed to the beast. Hence these wonders may be found any and everywhere, where this beastly power is felt, (except in the papal states of Italy.)

Now is it not an admitted, universal fact, that the present is a wonderful age, one of progression in every department of human intellect, of the increase of knowledge, &c.? A few of the great leading wonders of the age are witnessed in the easy and rapid transit of mind and matter, by our steamboats, railroads, telegraphs, &c. The calling of "fire down from heaven in the sight of men" is literally fulfilled in the wonder of wonders, viz., the magnetic telegraph. All behold it, and all are often heard to say, "I wonder what next!" God says that they shall so do, in chap. 17: 8;—"And they that dwell on the earth SHALL WONDER, (whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world,) when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is;" which in verse 11, is called "the eighth." In all the improvements of the age, until very recently, the Popes have looked on, like a surly mastiff, denoucing them as the works of the devil, and prohibited their introduction into their dominion. The deception consists in this, that the church and the world have through these and similar influences, been led to believe that an improved or a millennial age would soon dawn upon the world, under the benignant reign of the lamb-like beast which speaks as a dragon, without the personal advent of Christ. Multitudes have thus been beguiled into an inordinate admiration of the powers that be and to look to them for relief from present and increasing evils, instead of looking for Christ who alone will break every oppressive rod. In thus doing, are not the dwellers upon earth guilty of the dreadful sin of worshiping the beast?

Certain it is that the mass of even professing christians in their blind zeal, both in Europe and America, manifest an undue devotion to political affairs, and by many, the honors and emoluments of office are sought at the sacrifice of everything else. To the worldly minded man, the kingdoms of this world, in their present degenerate form, possess all the terrible excellency that they anciently did to the eye of the proud king of Babylon when he saw them shadowed forth in the great metallic image. But to the true christian, whose heart is fixed and is looking for the coming and kingdom of God's dear Son from heaven, they appear, especially when viewed through the perfect mirror of Divine truth, in all the deformity that they did to the beloved apostle in the isle of Patmos.

In the light of this subject we can readily examine ourselves, and need not be at a loss to know how the matter stands between ourselves and our covenant-keeping God. Where do our hopes and sympathies centre? Are they with the kingdoms of this world? or are they going out after that which is to come? Do not rest, beloved, till the matter is fully settled, and the victory obtained over the beastly governments of earth.

(To be concluded.)

For the Crisis.

From Bro. W. Sheldon.

BRO. GRANT: It truly appears to me that the majority of our brethren are more than half asleep. Do they deeply feel that ours is emphatically "the blessed hope" of the Bible? Are they doing ONE TENTH as much to put it in the reach of fellow mortals as GOD DEMANDS at their hands? True, they are poor, but not too poor to do something. There are funds enough in the church to do much more than is now being done.

There is a hungering after the word of truth in the West. Hope I shall soon be more constantly in the field. The world [illegible] keep me out of it; nothing but actual necessity, to obtain the means of support. I feel encouraged.

Vermillion, M. T. W. SHELDON.

P. S. Among other things, I am refreshed to learn, by letter, of the converting and reclaiming of forty souls, where I have sowed the seed in tears. W. S.

DELINQUENTS.

Some few weeks since, we stated that we should be under the necessity of discontinuing the Crisis to those who had not paid any thing since No. 26, unless we heard from them. If they wish for the paper, and are not able to pay any thing, we shall gladly supply them as long as we can. All who have not paid since No. 26, and can pay, should remember that they now owe us two dollars, besides advance the pay on the present volume, which is one dollar more. This is the last number we shall be able to send, unless we hear from them. Let us not forget the Bible says,—"owe no man any thing."

Obituary.

Died in Poland, Me., Dec. 11, '56, Dr. John S. Stedman, aged thirty-eight years.

The subject of this notice some four years ago became interested in the glad news of our Savior's return to earth, and was soon after baptized by Eld. L. L. Howard. He was a firm believer in the doctrine that we do not possess immortality here, but must seek it through Jesus Christ by patiently continuing to do well.

The disease which closed the life of our Brother was consumption. He bore his sickness with christian resignation, and we doubt not was ready to fall asleep. As a physician he was generally successful. He had a sympathetic heart, and therefore took a deep interest in the welfare of those under his care. He was a friend to the poor, often attending to their calls when there was no prospect of remuneration. But he is gone!

In the cold damp earth they laid him
A little while to sleep;
But angels hover o'er him
Their sacred watch to keep;
Thank God! that every pilgrim's dust
Is watched by messengers of trust.

He has left a wife and three little girls to mourn. May God protect them! He will; he is the orphan's Father and the widow's God. May these words of Jesus comfort them: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

A discourse was preached at the funeral by L. L. Howard. Text, Ps. 8: 4.

JAS. A. LIBBY.

Died in West. Poland. Me., Jan. 11, '57, Bro. Israel Herrick, aged seventy-six years.

Bro. H. very many years ago embraced the christian religion, and we think ever after lived a consistent life. He loved his Bible, and was often heard to speak of the sacred promises therein contained. His heart was often elated with the thoughts of Jesus' coming, and the glorious results of that return.

In his last sickness he was composed, and announced in his dying struggles that the hope he had long cherished was his support. He has left a large circle of friends. May they prepare to meet him in a world that knows no separation. Sermon preached at the funeral by Elder L. L. Howard, from Hosea 6: 1, 2.

JAS. A. LIBBY.

Died in Raymond, Me., Jan. 8, '57, Bro. Royal Dingley, aged twenty-eight years.

Bro. D. became interested in religion some three years since, and was baptized by Eld. J. Partridge. He did not contend so zealously for the faith as some, being naturally retiring, but we trust he had the religion of the Bible. His sickness was consumption. For a long time he entertained hopes of recovering, but those hopes were blasted when his disorder assumed a more terrible form. In his last hours he was calm, and expressed himself willing to die.

He has left friends to mourn, but we would say, let them sorrow not as others who have no hope, for if they believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

Discourse at the funeral by the writer.

JAMES A. LIBBY.

Died, at Eddington Bend, Me., on the 5th of March, Thomas Wilbur, youngest son of Bro. George Wood (formerly of Orrington,) aged five years and ten months.

The sudden bereavement of Bro. and Sister Wood was rendered more severe on account of the ill state of Bro. Wood's health at the time.

Thomas Wilbur was an interesting child, of general good health, and of remarkably bright intellect, and according to appearance bid fair for a life of prosperity. But alas! the flower was nipped in the bud. Only three days after he was taken sick he was in the unrelenting grasp of the cold monster Death. On the Sunday following, Bro. N. Read attended the funeral, and preached from 1 Thess. 4: 13, in which was clearly pointed out the hopes that might be entertained concerning him who had just fallen asleep. I would just say to the afflicted parents, sorrow not for your loved one, he is only laid down for a little while in quiet rest,—till Jesus shall call forth his redeemed. Then will arise that lovely form, clad with immortal beauty.

Now, Wilbur—he has gone to rest
Beneath the silent clod,
Till Jesus comes to call the blest
To see their smiling God.

Then, Wilbur will arise and sing,
When earth is wrapped in flame,
To meet his Savior and his King,
And praise his heavenly name.

O, joyful hope! for those who do
Their life in Jesus hide,
That when he comes to call the true,
They may with him abide.

R. H. CLARK.

DIED, in Fitchville, O., Nov. 23, 1856, Hosea C. Robbins, aged fifty-eight years. The deceased was on his way home from Minnesota, having been absent from his family seven months. The bereaved wife and children mourn not as those who have no hope.

Poetry.

THE MOTE AND BEAM.

(SELECTED BY L. G. FISK. PUBLISHED BY REQUEST.)

"Judge not that ye be not judged,"
Was the counsel Christ did give;
And the measure that youv'e given
In return you shall receive.
Since meridian light commenced
Pure love is revealed to some;
If there still should be offences
Wo to them by whom they come.

Once I said unto my brother,
In thine eye there is a mote,
If thou art a friend or brother,
Hold, and let me pull it out.
But I could not get it fairly,
For my sight was very dim;
When I came to see more clearly,
In my own there was a beam.

Others I have oft reproved
For a little single mote;
Now I wish the beam removed—
O, that I might pull it out.
If I love my brother dearly,
And his mote I would erase,
Then my light must shine most clearly,
For the eye's a tender place.

Jesus says, be meek and lowly,
For 'tis high to be a Judge;
If I would be pure and holy,
I must love without a grudge,
It requires a constant labor
All his precepts to obey;
If I only love my neighbor,
Then I'm in the holy way.

Charity, sweet love is healing,
It will give a clearer light;
When I saw my brother's failing,
I was not exactly right.
Now I'll take no farther trouble,
Since Christ's love is all my theme;
Little motes are but a bubble,
When I think upon the beam.

Foreign News.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE AFRICA.

NEW YORK, March 24.

Steamship Africa, from Liverpool, 9 A. M., 7th inst., arrived at her dock at half-past 10 o'clock.

The signing of the treaty of peace with Persia is officially announced, and a copy has been despatched to Teheran for ratification. Its chief feature consists in granting right of residence to British Consuls in the cities of Persia.

A despatch, received by means of the Russian telegraph, says that a treaty of commerce has been ratified at Teheran, by the Shah, between Persia and the United States, granting the same terms, viz: that American Consuls may reside in the chief Persian cities.

Austria seeks to negotiate with Persia a similar treaty.

The intelligence from China comes in scraps from private letters, and contain nothing different from the newspaper reports already published.

The French papers contain the Emperor of China's edict against the English.

They also say that on the 5th of December the Chinese seized the English opium depot.

TURKEY.—A letter from Belgrade, in the "Augsburg Gazette," says:—

"The position of the Christians in the Turkish province is a very dangerous one, and the effects of the Hasti Humayoun beyond the immediate neighborhood of Constantinople are entirely illusory. In the district of Droweniske, in Bosnia, the avarice and cruelty of the Turkish administrator, Reschid Bey, have led the population to determine on emigration, should their grievances not be redressed. In the district of Maglais, the Turkish judge lately killed the chief of the Christian community with his own hand; in the district of Dradatsch, the judge Tahir Effendi also killed a Christian. No one ventures to call these offenders to account."

RUSSIA.—A private letter from St. Petersburgh announces that it was known in that city, by special courier, that the Governor of Russian Siberia had despatched a column of troops towards Riakhta, on the frontiers of China. It is added, that this measure has been adopted in agreement with the Court of Pekin.

CHINA.—The Paris Moniteur of March 4th publishes a letter dated Hong Kong, Jan. 15th, from which we make the following extract:

"The rebel fleet has joined the Imperial, to make common war upon the English. Six hundred war junks are assembled in the river. The Chinese seem resolved to block up every channel by sinking junks in the numerous branches of the Canton river.

TURKEY AND EGYPT.—The Sultan has presented to France the Church of the Nativity; also the Palace of the Knights of St. John, at Jerusalem.

Domestic Summary.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

NEW YORK, March 28.

Steamship Illinois arrived at 8 o'clock, bringing California dates to the 5th inst.

Gen. Caras would march with 1500 men upon Rivas, and 1000 would march against San Juan del Sur. The intention is to surround Walker with 6000 troops.

Nothing later from Walker's position. His case is considered desperate.

Some of the deserters from Walker state that his troops had unanimously refused to leave Rivas to fight, but were willing to defend their position.

California news unimportant.

FROM KANSAS.—A correspondent of the New York Post, writing from Topeka under date of March 15th, says that the last of the Free State prisoners has made his escape. In regard to matters generally, he writes as follows:

"Everything indicates that we are to have another war, and it is to come soon. It will, probably, be brought on by an attempt to collect taxes for the support of the bogus government under the so-called laws. Another rupture once made, no man can point out the end. Yet we are even now living in a state of latent war. There has been no peace except at a sacrifice of our right. Better war for liberty than such a peace."

The desire of appearing to be persons of ability often prevents our being so.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Bro. W. S. Campbell appoints to preach at Fairhaven, Mass., Sunday, April 5th.

Bro. H. L. Hastings appoints to preach in Springfield, Mass., Lord's day Apr. 5.

Providence permitting, I will preach in New Bedford Apr. 5. M. GRANT.

Bro. J. Couch appoints to preach in Portland, Me., Apr. 12.

Providence permitting I will meet with the church in Lee, N., Sunday Apr. 5th.
JOHN G. HOOK.

Bro. O G Smith appoints to preach at Lake Village April 5.
Manchester, No. 79 Elm St. April 12.
Meredith Neck, April 19.

Providence permitting, I will preach on the first Sabbath in April at Pleasant Valley, Ct.; the second Sabbath at Newfield; the third Sabbath at Cheshire, and the fourth Sabbath at Bridgeport. IRA MORGAN.

Bro. S. W. Bishop appoints to preach at Lowell, Mass., April 5.

If any of the above appointments interfere with previous arrangements, brethren will inform me immediately by letter directed to Exeter, N. H.

Providence permitting, I will meet with the brethren in Ashfield, (at Bro. Pulsifers) April 1.
Charlemont, April 2.
North Adams, Sunday, April 5.
Cheshire, April 6.
Savoy Tannery, April 7
West Hawley, April 8.
H. PRATT

MISSIONARY TOUR WESTWARD.—God permitting, I will be at Boston, Mass., Sunday, April 5. Palmer, Mass., with Bro. Higgins, evenings, April 7 and 8.

Springfield, Mass., evening, April 10. Albany, N. Y., Sunday, April 12. West Martinsburgh, N. Y., evenings, April 16, 17, 18, and, over the Sabbath, 19.

Rochester, N. Y., Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings, April 29, 30, and May 1, with Bro. Marsh's charge.

Rochester, with Bro. Cook's charge, Sunday, May 3.

EDWIN BURNHAM.

Providence permitting, I will fill the following appointments proposed by Bro. Howard:

Worcester, where brother Meyers may appoint; perhaps at the colored church, Friday evening, April 10.
Lowell, where Bro. Churchill says, Sunday 12.
Lawrence, Monday eve. 13.
Exeter, N. H., 14.
Portsmouth, N. H., 15.
Kennebunk Port, Me., Thursday, 16.
Portland, Friday, 17.
Poland, Saturday and Sunday 18 and 19.
Portland, Monday 20.
Biddeford, Tuesday 21.
Kennebunk Port, Wednesday 22.
Portsmouth, Thursday 23.
Concord, Friday 24.
Louden Ridge, 25 and 26 if conveyance is had from Concord.
Concord, Monday, 27.
Manchester, Tuesday, 28.
Nashua, Wednesday 29, if Bro. Nye appoints.

If these appointments conflict with others previous, I wish to be notified in season to save expense of travel. HIRAM MUNGER.

To Correspondents.

Poetry.

THE OLD EARTH.

"The earth gives signs of age, disease, and fickleness. It yields its increase grudgingly, and demands an exhorbitant fee beforehand, in toil and sweat from the husbandman. It has ill turns, or paroxysms, when it rouses the ocean into a tempest, and makes sport of navies, strewing the shore with the wrecks and carcasses of men. It rocks a continent, or sinks an island; shaking massive cities into countless fragments, and burying its wretched inhabitants in indiscriminate ruin; anon it writhes and groans in mortal agony, and finds relief only by disgorging its fiery bowels, burying cities and villages in burning graves. The earth is old and feeble, and must needs groan on, until it renews its prime."—Miseries and Liabilities of the present Life.

Old Mother Earth is wan and pale,
Her fac is wrinkled sore;
Her locks are blanched, her heart is cold,
Her garments stiff with gore;
With furrowed brow and dim sad eyes,
With trembling steps and slow,
She marks the course that first she trod,
Six thousand years ago!

The earth is old, the earth is cold,
She shivers and complains;
How many Winters fierce and chill,
Have racked her limbs with pains!
Drear tempests, lightning, flood and flame
Have scarred his visage so,
That scarce we deem she shone so fair,
Six thousand years ago!

Yet comely was the youthful Earth,
And lightly tripped along
To music from a starry choir,
Whose sweet celestial song
Through Nature's temple echoed wild,
And soft as streamlets flow,
While sister spheres replied with her,
Six thousand years ago!

And many happy children there
Upon her breast reclined,
The young earth smiled with aspect fair,
The heavens were bright and kind;
The azure cope above her head
In love seemed bending low;
O happy was the youthful Earth,
Six thousand years ago!

Alas! those children of the earth
With hate began to burn,
And Murder stained her beauteous robe,
And bade the young Earth monrn.
And ages, heavy ages, still
Have bowed with gathering wo
The form of her whose life was joy,
Six thousand years ago!

Old Earth! drear Earth! thy tender heart
Bewails thy chosen ones;
Thou look'st upon the myriad graves
That hide their gathered bones;
For them, by day and night thy tears
Unceasingly must flow;
Death chilled the fountain-head of life
Six thousand years ago!

Old Earth! old Earth! above thy head,
The heavens are dark and chill,
The sun looks coldly on thee now,
The stars shine pale and still;
No more the heavenly symphonies
Through listening ether flow,
Which swelled upon creation's ear,
Six thousand years ago!

Weep not in bitter grief, O Earth!
Weep not in hopelessness!
From out the heavens "a still small voice"
Whispers returning peace.
Thy tears are precious in the sight
Of One who marks their flow,
Who purposes of mercy formed,
Six thousand years ago!

Thy days of grief are numbered all,
Their sum will soon be told:
The joy of youth, the smile of God,
Shall bless thee as of old;
Shall shed a purer, holier light
Upon thy peaceful brow,
Than beamed upon thy morning hour
Six thousand years ago!

Thy chosen ones shall live again,
A countless, tearless throng,
To wake creation's voice anew,
And swell the choral song.
Go, Earth! go wipe thy falling tears,
Forget thy heavy wo;
Hope died not with thy first-born sons,
Six thousand years ago!

For the Crisis.

Unity of Spirit.

(Concluded.)

If God has said that the saints shall have their inheritance in those imaginary, felicitous regions of nonentity "beyond the bounds of time and space," it is our business to believe it. But if He has promised them the earth for their everlasting inheritance, we shall do well to turn away our ears from fables, and be turned to the truth. God has clearly taught that the saints shall inherit the earth. The other doctrine is a doctrine "of devils;" and does it make no difference which we believe? Our first parents believed the Devil, and died.

Unbelief is the mother of sin, that which most easily besets the human race. If Eve had not first believed the Devil, she would not have disobeyed God. In consequence of the sin of unbelief, the children of Israel who came out of Egypt, with the exception of two persons, were shut out of the land of Canaan, and condemned to perish in the wilderness. The sin of doubt and unbelief is the sin with which God is most provoked, and that which leads men to pursue an erroneous course of action. For men will act just as they believe; consequently we shall not act right, unless we believe right. In a state of unbelief in the present developments of God's economy, we cannot do His will. Paul inquired of the "foolish Galatians" who had "bewitched" them that they "should not obey the truth." They first fell into unbelief concerning the truth, which led them to disobey it. We are required to learn the truth "as it is in Jesus," and act in harmony with the truth. See Eph. 4: 21, &c. In order to obey the truth and act in harmony with it, we must believe truth instead of believing fables.

Again. In 2 Thess. 2: 11, Paul speaks of a class of people, and for a certain cause, which I shall notice hereafter, he says,—"God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

'Well, says one, "if your theory is true, a great many good men and women who have died, not having the light which we now have, must be lost."

But, friend, I think you are rather too fast. "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." We are not required to "walk in the light" any faster than God is pleased to let us have it. Abel will not be lost in consequence of not believing that the old world would be swept with the besom of destruction in the days of Noah, for he was not informed of the event. But he will be saved in consequence of his having believed all the truth which he had the opportunity of hearing. Noah will not be lost in consequence of not believing that God would constitute Abraham the father of the faithful, for he received no such intelligence. But he will be saved in consequence of his having walked in the light that God gave him. Neither will Abraham nor his posterity be condemned for not believing on the Messiah in his person, before he made his appearance; but all that would not believe on him when he did appear, will be lost in consequence of their unbelief.

As the light that illuminates the path of the just shines "more and more," the economy of God advances. And, as each feature in that economy is developed, those who are on the stage of action at the time of its development are required to act in harmony with it. But those who have died in time past, walking in the light as it shone in their day, sleep in Jesus, and will put on immortality at the sounding of the last trump. We do not stand condemned to-day in consequence of not believing truth not yet disclosed; but when further light shines, those who are to-day walking in all present light, cannot reject the next development of light, and be guiltless before God. "The path of the just" will continue to shine "more and more," until the last illuminating ray shall have shed its benign influence upon the church of Christ. Then, and not until then, will the church be prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. God has constituted the church the light of the world. Therefore He does not send His people abroad with a smoking torch, rendered motley by black doctrines of darkness and blood-stained tenets of the "MOTHER OF HARLOTS;" but He has furnished them with the pure, golden rays of the gospel of His Son. And by means of that light, the foundation upon which the unity of the Spirit is established may be discovered.

Thirdly. In being built upon this foundation, it is not enough that we hear and believe gospel truth, but we must exercise ourselves in the principle of love. Says Jesus, Matt. 22: 37–40,—"thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it; thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." In these two commandments the whole council of God is combined; yet we find in them but two objects specified which we are commanded to love. But by searching the sacred record, we understand that we are required to love the brethren. And in order to do this, it is necessary to understand who our brethren are. This understanding can only be obtained by comparing the conduct of people with the fruits of the Spirit, as we find them delineated in the word of God. If a brother trespass against us, and will not be reclaimed by the rule which Christ has given, we are no longer to esteem him as a brother. But while we detect his bad deeds, we are to exercise such love towards him as will enable us to do him good as circumstances may require, and secure ourselves against entertaining bitter feelings towards him, lest we mar our own peace and happiness, and thereby disqualify ourselves to do the will of our Father which is in heaven.

Again. We are to love our enemies. If we love those only who love us, we have no reward; for publicans do as much as this. Love manifested towards our enemies is one mark of perfection in ourselves.

We are to love the truth. In 2 Thess. 2 chap., Paul speaks of a certain "wicked" one, "whom the Lord shall consume, . . . whose coming is after the working of Satan, . . . with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the TRUTH. . . And for this cause," (because they do not love the truth,) "God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be DAMNED who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." The reason, then, why men are drawn into the vortex of error and finally drowned in perdition is, because they do not believe the truth. And the reason why they do not believe the truth is, because they do not love it. They have pleasure in unrighteousness—they choose to believe a lie. Therefore God sends them "strong delusion," that they may believe a lie; and when the delusion comes, they eagerly embrace it—they cling to it with deadly grasp, and, at the last, are damned. The Most High is pleased with those that put confidence enough in Him to believe what He has spoken; but gives up to "uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts" those who change the "truth of God into a lie."

Fourthly. Obedience is the fourth and final step to be taken in being brought into the "unity of the Spirit," and being established upon the "foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Says Jesus, Matt. 7: 24, 25,—"Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man which built his house upon a rock. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock." Now mark the difference between those who hear and do the sayings of Christ, and those who hear, but do not obey. Ver. 26, 27,—"and every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and it fell; and great was the fall of it." Here we have a representation of the great mass of professors who hear the word of God but refuse to comply with his requirements, vainly supposing that they are at liberty to construe His word to suit their own carnal propensities—that if they have a form of godliness they may deny the power thereof—that they love pleasure more than they love God, and stand acquitted in the day of judgment. Vain, delusive hope! "Be not deceived; God is not mocked." If we would attest our love to God, we must keep his commandments. Says Jesus,—"if ye love me, keep my commandments."

Again; 1 John 2: 5,—"but whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him." Then if we do not keep God's word, we are not in Him. Let us examine some of the commandments which God has enjoined upon us. Says Paul, Col. 3: 14,—"and above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness."

"O yes," says one, "'the end of the commandment is charity;' and whatever other gifts we may possess, if we have not charity, they will profit us nothing. Therefore it is of the highest importance that we have fervent charity among ourselves; 'for charity shall cover a multitude of sins.'" Yes, charity will cover or "hide" a multitude of sins. But in what way are sins hidden by charity? "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Jas. 5: 19, 20. We see that the apostle considers the man that errs from the truth as being a sinner, in consequence of his having departed from the simplicity of the truth. Yet he does not tell us that we should smother his errors under a cloak of charity, in order to hide his sins; but, if any can convert him from error to truth, let him know, that doeth it, that he has been instrumental in the hand of God in saving a soul from death, and of hiding a multitude of sins, by inducing the erring brother to cease to commit sin. It would be well if the church had more of the charity which hides sin in this way, and less of that kind that will see a brother wending his way to death among the mazy fens of error and folly; and, through fear of offending him, encourage him in his downward course, rather than warn him of his danger.

"But," says another, "'charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; neither does it vaunt itself, nor allow itself to be puffed up. It does not behave itself unseemly; neither does it seek its own, nor suffer itself to be easily provoked, nor imagine evil. It beareth all things, and endureth all things.'" Yes, this is all true, but it does not comprise all the characteristics of true charity. Charity "believeth all things," (that are true, of course,) "hopeth all things," (all things which God has promised;) "rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth." Then if charity rejoices in the truth, it will walk in the truth, speak the truth, and pity the brother whom truth offends. We are not only commanded to exercise charity one towards another, but we are commanded to obey the truth,—gospel, &c. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." 1 Pet. 1: 22. Then it is only in obeying the truth that we purify ourselves, and which alone can produce unfeigned love for the brethren: and nothing but obeying the truth through the Spirit will produce fervent charity, which grows out of "a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned."

Again. Gal. 3: 1,—"O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth?" &c. Chap 5: 7,—"ye did run well; who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?" We learn from the words of the apostle, 2 Thess. 1 chap., that the Lord Jesus Christ will take vengeance on them that know not God and obey not His gospel.

Again, 1 Pet. 4: 17,—"and if it (judgment) first begin at us, (the church,) what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" If we reject truth, after having received the knowledge of it, we sin willfully; and "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." Says John in his third letter, ver. 3, 4,—"for I rejoiced greatly when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkest in the truth. I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth." Also 2 John 4,—"I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father." Again, Rom. 6: 17,—"but God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." In 2 Cor. 6: 14–18, we are commanded not to be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness. And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? or what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, (error,) and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

Now we are under just as much obligation to obey this, and other commandments of the same character with which the gospel abounds, as we are to exercise charity one towards another. In short, God will never absolve us from obeying any of the commandments which He has given us. Says James 2: 10,—"for whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." Rev. 22: 14,—"blessed are they that do his commandments, (not the greater part, but all of them,) that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." But those that love and make a lie, are left without the city. See verse 15. Says Paul, Rom. 8: 14,—"for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." And they that are after the Spirit, mind the things of the Spirit. See verse 5.

The Spirit of truth has nothing to do with the things of error; they belong exclusively to the enemy of all righteousness; but it takes the things of truth, which belong to God, and shows them to the people of God, and leads them in the way of truth.

Let us then follow the leadings of the Spirit, that we may be able, through the Spirit, to know, love, believe, and obey the truth, and thus be prepared to keep the "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace;" that when the King of glory shall appear, seated on the throne of his glory, and, with the trump of God, call up the sainted sleepers from their dusty bed, and bid them shout in victory over the tomb, and challenge death to strike them with his sting, we may, with them, ascend to meet the Savior, far above where fiery billows roll, and find a rest within the portals of everlasting bliss.

For the Crisis.

From Bro. N. F. Nason.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to say a word to the brethren in regard to Bro. Spalding's letter, in the Crisis, March 10, in regard to Aroostook County, as he wishes to spread the truth in that section. I traveled in that county some fifteen years ago. I think if those who have the means and the love of the truth at heart, could see how destitute the people are, they would attend to Bro. S.'s call without delay. They are too poor to buy books, but are willing to read and hear. The poor should have the Gospel preached to them, if they cannot pay for it. I should have been with Bro. S. this winter, but my health will not permit me to do but a little. The Lord will soon come and save the faithful.

Yours for the Kingdom of God,
N. F. NASON.

Rules of Prudence.

1. One must not spend all that he hath; do all he can; tell all he knows; believe all he hears.
2. Think before whom you speak; why and what you speak; observe, audi, cerne, face.
3. Know how to be good natured to all men.
4. Hear the advice of the town clerk of Ephesus,—"Do nothing rashly."
5. When your spirit is heated is the time for the bridle.
6. In a violent impulse, be zealous, be afraid, lest you fall into temptation.
7. Never sacrifice hours in contention.
8. Take no notice of the calumniator.
9. Keep company not only with your equals, but with your superiors.
10. Be furnished with a stock of useful questions.
11. When you tell secrets, mind your stops even with best friends.
12. If solicited to engage in civil concerns, reply (if you are a minister) "I am doing a great work, I cannot come."
13. Gain by everything, even by reproaches.
14. Tell a story with unstumbled brevity. Let not pleasantry become levity.
15. Let not your moderation be what is called the murder of the souls committed to your charge.
16. Have two heaps; one unintelligibles, the other incurables; when you find a subject incomprehensible, throw it into the first; when you find a man unpersuadable, throw him into the other."

INTERESTING STATISTICS. — We see it stated from the census tables, that the Methodist church is the richest in this country (in church property,) and the Presbyterian is nearly equal with it, each holding about fifteen millions of dollars' worth. Next are the Episcopalians and Baptists, with less than twelve millions each; Congregationalists, eight millions; Dutch Reformed, four millions. But the Methodists are pre-eminent not only in the money value of their churches, but in the practical matter of accommodation for hearers of the Gospel; having seats for over four million persons, or one seat for every three dollars and three-quarters' worth of property.

The Baptists come closely, if at all behind them, accommodating over three millions, or about the same proportion; and the denominations commonly understood to direct their expectations rather more to the select few who are "called" among the "wise," the "mighty," and the "noble," expend their money on a comparatively small number of more "eligible" seats for worshipers, bringing a vastly higher rent.

The Episcopalians, whose church property is about equal with that of the Baptists, make it go one-fifth as far in "preaching the Gospel to all sorts and conditions of men"—seating only six hundred thousand hearers, or one for every twenty dollars.

The Congregationalists do better, [illegible] ing eight hundred thousand, or one [illegible] ery ten dollars; and the Presbyterians next best, seating over two millions, or one for every seven dollars and a half.—Examiner.

THE "INTERMEDIATE STATE."—We have been asked once or twice of late, if the Protestant Episcopal Church believes in the doctrine of an intermediate state, between death and the general judgment. We take this method of answering, most unequivocally, "Yes." It is a matter of great surprise that there should be the least shadow of a doubt on a matter which is so openly and plainly declared by all the standard writers of the church, such as Burnet, Tomline, Hobart, Whately, Burton Sherwood, Waite, and others, as well as the Thirty-nine Articles. The dead in Christ do not go to heaven, but to Hades, where they remain until after the resurrection.—Western Episcopalian.

EXPANDING THE LUNGS.—Step out into the purest air you can find; stand perfectly erect, with the head well up and the shoulders back, and then, fixing the lips as though you were going to whistle, draw the air, not through the nostrils, but through the lips into the lungs. When the chest is about half full, gradually raise the arms, keeping them extended, with the palms of the hands down as you suck in the air, so as to bring them over the head just as the lungs are quite full. Then drop the thumbs inward, and after gently forcing the arms backward and the chest open, reverse the process by which you drew your breath, till the lungs are entirely empty. This process should be repeated three or four times immediately after bathing, and also several times through the day. It is impossible to describe to one who never tried it, the glorious sense of vigor which follows this exercise. It is the best expectorant in the world. We know a gentleman, the measure of whose chest has been increased by this means some three or four inches during as many months.

EXPENSES OF PREACHING.—The following estimate has been made of the probable amount which it costs the individual members of the different churches in the United States to sustain their respective churches. The estimate is founded upon the last United States census:

A Baptist or Methodist, three dollars and forty cents; a Presbyterian, seven dollars; a Congregationalist, ten dollars; a Roman Catholic, fourteen dollars; an Episcopalian, eighteen dollars; a Reformed Dutch, twenty-two dollars; a Unitarian, twenty-three dollars.

BACKBITING.—The longer I live, the more I feel the importance of adhering to the following rule, which I have laid down for myself in relation to such matters:

1. To hear as little as possible of what is to the prejudice of others.
2. To believe nothing of the kind till I am actually forced to it.
3. Never to drink in the spirit of one who circulates an ill report.
4. Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindness which is expressed towards others.
5. Always to believe that if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given of the matter.—Rev. Chas. Simeon.

PREDICTED FALL OF NAPOLEON III.—In the autograph of a Wesleyan minister, just issued in Canada, we notice the following calculation, which is very curious. It was communicated by a Frenchman to an English friend. Fall of Robespierre in the year 1794. Repeat 1794 in single figures, and add the whole, and you have the fall of Napoleon 1. 1815. Repeat as before, and you have the fall of Charles X, 1830. Repeat the process, and you have the fall of the Duke of Orleans, 1842. Repeat, and you have in this year Louis Napoleon will fall, 1857. Thus:

1794	1815	1830	1842
1	1	1	1
7	8	8	8
9	1	3	4
4	5	0	2
1815	1830	1842	1857

CORNS.—The best cure for these troublesome things that we have ever tried is to soak the feet in hot water for a quarter of an hour, so that the corn becomes soft, and then trim it off as close as possible and not cause pain. Then take the tincture of Arbor Vitæ, placed upon a little cotton, and apply to the corn, and after a few applications, the corn will not only disappear entirely, but will not be likely to return again.—Scientific American.

MIRTH AND CHEERFULNESS.—Mirth is like a flash of lightning, that breaks through a gleam of clouds, and glitters for a moment; cheerfulness keeps a kind of daylight in the mind, and fills it with a steady and perpetual serenity.

MEN.

AN ASPIRATION AND A SONNET.

God, give us MEN. A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;—
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor—men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And scorn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty, and in private thinking—
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps.

Peace in Christ

From the tumult of earthly strife, from the tempests of earthly sorrow, from the storms of earthly adversity, and from the intoxication of earthly joy, the believer flies away and seeks for peace in Christ. Here is refuge from the storm,—his covert from the tempest—his strong tower and the rock of his strength. Here the heart reposes in confidence and in peace. The billows break in vain upon this rock. In vain the tempests howl about this rock. Here we are safe. The strife of tongues,—the sharp arrows of the mighty with coals of juniper burning and tormenting, fall harmlessly about us. We are safe. We are in Christ.

Man of earth, are you there? Are you on the rock? Are you in the hiding-place? Have you fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before you in the Savior? O, sir, there cometh a storm when, not merely thy shipping and thy dwellings will be tried, but when thy hope and trust must stand the test. Are you ready for it? Can you meet adversity and bereavement, and affliction? Can you smile at poverty and pain? Very well;—can you face death? can you listen to the rattling of his glittering spear and not be afraid? Has death no terrors for thee? the coffin and the winding sheet, the sepulchre and the worm, corruption and rottenness,—hast thou no fear of their loathesome coming? The worm that shall feed so sweetly on you when death shall have dominion over you, and all the dread pollutions of the grave, are there no terrors in these? Very well. After death the judgment! You must meet that—the thundering trumpet, the archangel's voice—the opening graves—the resurrection of [illegible], both of the just and the unj[illegible]eat white throne, the burning [illegible]wful sentence!—can you endu[illegible]? And then the second death—the lake of fire and brimstone—the place of weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth—[illegible] of [illegible]thly hopes—the end [illegible] harder than the nether millstone? Is your brow like burnished brass? can your hands be strong—can your heart endure in the day when God shall deal with you in justice and in might?

If not, you need to find peace in Christ. You need a refuge from the storm, or covert from the tempest. You may have it. Will you seek it? Will you seek it now, before it is too late? Will you not be reasonable and seek now the salvation of the Lord? Will you not take your stand upon the rock of strength? The waves of coming wrath are gathering in awful power; will you not then seek to escape before escape becomes impossible? You have reason—will you not use it? You have common sense—will you not exercise it? Is it reasonable to remain unsaved when salvation is offered? Is it reasonable to perish when you may escape? Is it reasonable to sink in the lake of fire when you may mount up on wings as eagles, and dwell in all the light of heaven? Is it reasonable to trifle now, and wail and mourn at last? Is it reasonable to choose death instead of life, sorrow instead of joy, wrath instead of blessing, despair instead of peace, and perdition instead of salvation? Will you not then be reasonable? Will you not seek to know the Lord and share his love? Will you not find peace in Christ? Behold, then, the Lamb of God! Look to thy bruised and smitten Savior! confess his name. Believe with all your heart on him. Accept him as your refuge and your trust; cling to him with a grasp which can never be unclasped? There you are safe. There you have peace! There you need fear no evil. In Christ we are SAFE; out of him we are in constant peril.

O man of earth, will you have this refuge for your rest? Will you now accept the proffered blessing? Will you now cast all your cares upon the Savior's breast?—will you fly for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before you? Behold now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation. Now you may find a refuge where no wave of coming wrath can e'er assail. Now you may find in Christ, peace, deep, unsearchable and eternal. Will you find it? Behold thy rest! hasten to it, and, standing in its hallowed precints, invite a lost and perishing race to share it with you. O prove the deep experience of that peace which is "like a river," which allies the heart to the eternal and the unchangeable, the Almighty one! Then lead the world to share the blessings you enjoy. Plead with the perishing—win them away from sinful pleasures—call them to sublimer joys than earth can ever give. Then, when the last storm of sorrow shall roll its broken clouds away,—when the last surge of tribulation shall heave your tossing bark—when the last flood of woe shall forever subside, then you shall sing by the river of Life, and dwell in the city of the Lord, and know through all eternity the endless blessedness of peace in Christ. Reader, may you and I forever know this everlasting peace!

Our Consolation.

What is our consolation? It is not the consolation of this world, or the children of this world. It is not the consolation of the man of wealth, the sons of fame, the worshipers of fashion, the devotees of sensual pleasure, the cunning speculator, or the groveling miser. No, glory to God, ours is a higher, better, and infinitely more glorious aim. We have set our heart on sublimer things. "Let the potsherds strive with the potsherds of the earth;" let groveling muck-worms riot and roll in the stinking dunghills of this world of vanity and misery; let the children of pleasure lave in the filthy pools of sensuality; let the dupes of fashion cringe and bow down to the cursed shrines of their worse than heathen abomination; let the charmed servants of sin and Satan sell themselves, soul, body, and spirit to the work of darkness and corruption—we seek our consolation from our God, alone. [illegible]ill seek good from the Fountain of good. We will love the Lovely. We will trust in the Strong. We will seek the Holy. We will know the Blessed. We will cleave to the Pure. We will worship the Mighty. We will submit to the merciful. We will praise the gracious. We will wait for the coming One! Praised, adored, and ever blessed be the name of our Lord God of hosts, that we have been made to know what and where is the unfailing Spring of all desirable consolation! We are that happy people whose rock of confidence is the Mighty One of Israel! Our strong tower is the Ancient of days! Our hungry souls shall be cared for, and filled with good things. Our thirsty souls shall drink of the river of plenty. Our way shall be directed by the angel of Jehovah's presence. Our darkness shall be enlightened by the cheering beams of the Sun of Righteousness. Our battles shall be fought by the interposing angels of light. Our infirmities shall be helped by the Holy Spirit of the living God. Our sins shall be forgiven through the atoning blood of the crucified Immanuel. Our tears shall be wiped away by the kind hand of our loving Father. Our prayers shall be bottled in the golden vials of the heavenly watchers. Our groans shall be changed to shouts of joy. Our mourning shall turn to songs of rapture. Our sadness shall pass away before eternal smiles of pleasure. Our fears shall give place to lightness and gladness of heart forevermore. Our corruption shall put on incorruption. Our mortal shall put on immortality. Our toils shall end in endless, undisturbed rest. The places of our enemies shall be filled with everlasting friends. Our "eyes shall see the King in His beauty." Our trials shall result in glorious victory. Our cursed, groaning earth shall be changed, and shine forth again as when robed in primeval Eden beauty. Our creation shall end the long travail of six thousand years, and be glad in the liberty of the sons of God.

O let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad for the consolation of that people whose God is the Lord! Sing sweeter music, ye harpers of light, as ye contemplate the time of the final triumph of the redeemed of Immanuel! Our God is not a man that he should lie, or the Son of man that He should not accomplish His purpose of good. The heavens shall roll in fire and pass away with awful noise, and the deep foundations of the vasty earth be upreared in terrific ruin, but the word divine shall still remain! Faithful art thou, Lord God Almighty, and all thy counsels are true and sure! Now wilder play ye whirlwinds of confusion, we are covered by the sheltering care of the Eternal One. We will pass through the floods, and they shall not overflow us. We will walk in the midst of the flames of fire, and they shall not consume us. We will calmly ride on the wheels of tumult, and fear not the velocity of the speed. The earthquake may tremble at our feet—the fiery lightnings may play around our heads—the bellowing thunders may howl on our heavens, but sweet peace and blest assurance shall reign within our soul. He who rideth on the heaven of Heavens, in His awful majesty is our help, and underneath us are his everlasting arms!

Christian.

By what authority do we, as the followers of Christ, take upon ourselve any other name than that of CHRISTIAN?

1st. Christian is the only name that will express our whole faith. Other names express only a part, as for instance: "Baptist" indicates merely our faith in Baptism; and "Adventist" indicates only our faith in the Advent. But the name "Christian" covers the whole ground—faith in Christ as the "sent of God," the "crucified," the "buried," the "risen," the "ascended," the "interceding," the "coming," and "reigning Prince of peace.

2d. Christian is a name given by divine appointment, else it would not have been sanctioned by its repeated use in the scriptures. If only a nick-name was designed to be given at Antioch, the term Jesus-ites would have been more appropriate, since Christ was not the human name of the Savior.

3d. Christian in faith, character, and NAME is my motto. Who can object? If we have the faith of Christ, and the character of Christ should we spurn the name of Christian? Let us not only be right in faith, but in name also. Shall we call things by their right names or not?

"Praying in the Holy Ghost."

What is meant by "praying in the Holy Ghost?" Jude 20. Is there a standard by which to answer this question? Yes; and hence we are commanded to "try (or test) the spirits." The spirit by which we pray and act, is to be known by the system or scheme we sustain; by the impulse that urges us on, and by the object at which we aim. If the scheme, the impulse or object be Romish, then our spirit is certainly from Rome—rather from the Evil One that rules in Rome. If the purpose and plan be sectarian, political or pecuniary, such is the character of the spirit that prevails in and over those engaged in it, as the case may be.

But there is a Divine purpose disclosed. It is as much above all human schemes as Heaven is high above the earth. The Holy Ghost has spoken out this scheme or purpose. The Gospel is its expression—its verbal drapery. Now all those who heartily (or in spirit) enter into this gracious gospel system for renewing and saving men, and for restoring, governing and blessing the world; all whose aim and object is to promote this Divine plan; all who pray for the accomplishment of the promises and prophecies which were given by inspiration, do "pray in the Holy Ghost." It is in this holy cause; in this Heavenly light; and in harmony with and according to the mind of the Spirit.

The Holy Ghost working in us, aids us to pray according to the mind of God. This is addressed to us in "the words of the truth of the gospel."

Thus Simeon prayed in the Holy Ghost when he prayed for the promised Savior at the time and in the way that the Holy Spirit had expressed in prophecy.

Thus the Apostles prayed "in the Holy Ghost," prior to the Pentecost. They prayed for the Spirit according to prophecy and promise.

Thus we may "pray in the Holy Ghost," just so far as we stand in God's counsel and desire its foretold fulfillment. Our prayers should be, "Thy kingdom come! Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus! O that thou wouldst rend the Heavens and come down!" This, and all like language, when expressive of our DESIRE for its accomplishment, and our delight in having God so glorified; and our conviction that such is now "the mind of the Spirit," is embraced in our text. This is "praying in the Holy Ghost."

No prayer is of the Holy Ghost that has another source, another scheme, another aim, than that which involves the Savior's coming, the resurrection, the judgment, and kindred assertions of "the Holy Ghost;" for "He cannot deny Himself!" Nay, "He hath magnified his word above all (that bear) his name;" hence no man, no church, is above the Word. Nay more, our mind, heart experience, and whole being should bow to the will, the word of the Holy One. When the good Spirit works in us at all, He works according to His expressed promise and purpose. "He helpeth our infirmities, openeth our eyes to behold wonderful things out of his law. He causeth our hearts to burn within us, as he communes with us by the way, and opens to us the scriptures."

Death.

Death has made, and is still making sad havoq among the little ones in these last days. Is is a mystery why the innocent are cut off from among the living at this time, when we are expecting the Messiah who has said, "of such is the kingdom of Heaven." We feel confident that young children will be ready, if living, to meet the Lord, but had they still lived would their parents have been weaned from the earth as they now are? When a shepherd takes a lamb to shelter it, the sheep will follow it. The little ones sleep in Jesus; they are safe. The believing parents press their way onward, looking to the great Shepherd of souls who has promised to return and bring the loved ones from the land of the enemy. Let us trust in God who "doeth all things well." Blessed be His name. He wounds but to heal. Let us thank Him for giving us children who will swell the choir of the redeemed. They are not lost, they are hid in Christ. Cheer up, brethren and sisters, we shall very soon meet them in Beulah's happy land if we endure to the end. I have children and grand-children whom I expect to meet on the resurrection morning, if I am faithful. Our care for them has ceased; they are safe, and now let us turn our attention to those who remain and strive to win them to Christ; to deal gently yet firmly with them; show by our daily walk that there is a reality in religion, and that we do believe Jesus is coming soon. We cannot change their hearts, God alone can do that; let us do our duty. The Lord give us a spirit of prayer for the young who are committed to our care.

The babes rest securely no sorrow they know;
They are free from all danger and trouble below;
The angels are guarding their slumbering dust,
Till the grave shall give up its hallowed trust.

Thou'lt come blessed Savior, and raise them again;
Not long in the graves shall our loved ones remain.
In this state of probation let us watch unto prayer,
That we may be ready to meet in the air,—

And join with our loved ones, whose absence we mourn,
In praising our Savior around his bright throne;
The signs of whose coming do plainly appear,—
Then let us be doing, for Jesus is near.

The babes are all safe—the ills of this life
Can no more molest them, they are free from the strife
That we must encounter, ere we reach that blest shore,
Where united we'll live, to be parted no more.

Where is Paradise?

This question has been often asked, and often has the inquirer asked in vain, even of learned men, and those noted as Bible students. But why is this a perplexing question, baffling the mental powers of great men, and perplexing the careful scrutiny of able theologians? I suppose it to arise from a false view of other points of christian doctrine, consequently all efforts of the most learned theologians to reconcile their erroneous views with the plain and obvious meaning of texts about Paradise, prove fruitless, and each one is left to conjecture as he pleases. Thus we have many doctrines about Paradise.

All agree that the word signifies pleasure grounds, a park, or garden, a grove, &c. But then, how can this idea be reconciled with the doctrine of its being in the air, beyond the stars, in a "sky kingdom, &c.? This defies all skill of harmonizing opposites. It has been said to be heaven, or in heaven. Again, it has been located in the grave; and again, it has been imagined to be "in a place of departed spirits," or a "spirit world," latitude and longitude not known, as that world is not laid down in the Bible—the christian's geography. I confess that all these notions caused me much trouble when my mind was first awakened to search for the truth on this point. But is there not clearly revealed truth in the Bible on this subject?

We find the word Paradise in three places in the New Testament, all of which present the idea of bliss, a place of happiness. On the occasion of the crucifixion of Christ, (Luke 23: 42, 43,) the penitent thief prayed to be remembered by the Lord when he should "come into his kingdom. Christ answers,—"Verily, I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." The idea has obtained from this, that Christ and the thief went to heaven that day. But some have examined more closely and seen that Christ told Mary three days after, that he had NOT yet ascended to God, consequently they take them to a spirit world, somewhere else.

Again. We find Paul (2 Cor. 12: 1–5,) speaking of "visions and revelations of the Lord." He says,—"I knew a man . . . . (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven, ... into Paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful (or possible, margin,) for a man to utter." Here, again, the idea is received that Paradise is in heaven; and the learned Dr. Watts teaches us to sing,

"From the third heaven, where God resides,
That holy, happy place."

Modern philosophy, too, is called in here to show that the atmospheric region next the earth is the first heaven, the starry region, is the second heaven, and beyond the stars where God resides, is the third heaven. This produced the strange strain in poetry,—

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,
Look forward to that heavenly place."

Let us see if God is not a better interpreter than the astronomer or the poet. Paul says, "Paradise" is in the third heaven. Does the Bible speak of a third heaven elsewhere? Yes, it does. Let us turn to 2 Pet. 3d chapter. Here Peter says,—"by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water, whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished; (mark, first,) but the heavens and the earth, which are now, (second,) by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire. . . . The heavens shall pass away with a great noise. . . . Nevertheless we according to his promise look for new (third) heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." But it will be said Paul was caught up. I will here remark that it is said by critical readers of the Greek text, who differ from me widely in doctrine, that there is no idea in the original, of going up, or being lifted, or raised up, but of being "caught away," "caught off," or transported to another place."

Let us now look at the third and last text, Rev. 2: 7. John was on the isle of Patmos, and, like Paul, had visions and revelations. What did he see and hear? Among other things, this was revealed to him to write to the church of Ephesus. "To him that overcometh, will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God." Paul says this man was in this place. But where is the tree of life located? Let us look to this. It was once in the garden of the Lord, in Eden, Gen. 2: 9. Adam lost his right to it, and was turned out of Paradise. But in Rev. 21st and 22d chapters, we are taught that the earth is made new, the curse removed, the holy city adorns it, "the tree of life" is there, and the redeemed of the Lord inherit it. Christ reigns over it, and it is "Paradise." By consulting Dan. 2: 44; 7: 27; Isa. 35, also 65; Matt. 5: 5; Luke 12: 31, 32; Rev. 11: 15; Matt. 13: 41; 25: 31–34; Rev. 5: 10, and other texts, it is clearly shown that Christ's [illegible]dom is in the new earth, and the Pa[illegible] the thief on the day of [illegible], "the third heaven to which Paul was caught in vision; the new heaven and new earth of Pet. 3; and the Paradise of God, Rev. 2: 7, and new heavens and new earth of Rev. 21, are all of the same locality, as to time and place. The thief prayed for a part in Christ's kingdom; Christ promised it, and called it Paradise. Paul had a vision of it, and called it "Paradise," and located it in the third heaven. But it was not then the time to utter what he heard there. Peter shows us that the abode [illegible]

THE OLD EARTH.

"The earth gives signs of age, disease, and fickleness. It yields its increase grudgingly, and demands an exhorbitant fee beforehand, in toil and sweat from the husbandman. It has ill turns, or paroxysms, when it rouses the ocean into a tempest, and makes sport of navies, strewing the shore with the wrecks and carcasses of men. It rocks a continent, or sinks an island; shaking massive cities into countless fragments, and burying its wretched inhabitants in indiscriminate ruin; anon it writhes and groans in mortal agony, and finds relief only by disgorging its fiery bowels, burying cities and villages in burning graves. The earth is old and feeble, and must needs groan on, until it renews its prime."—Miseries and Liabilities of the present Life.

Old Mother Earth is wan and pale,
Her fac is wrinkled sore;
Her locks are blanched, her heart is cold,
Her garments stiff with gore;
With furrowed brow and dim sad eyes,
With trembling steps and slow,
She marks the course that first she trod,
Six thousand years ago!

The earth is old, the earth is cold,
She shivers and complains;
How many Winters fierce and chill,
Have racked her limbs with pains!
Drear tempests, lightning, flood and flame
Have scarred his visage so,
That scarce we deem she shone so fair,
Six thousand years ago!

Yet comely was the youthful Earth,
And lightly tripped along
To music from a starry choir,
Whose sweet celestial song
Through Nature's temple echoed wild,
And soft as streamlets flow,
While sister spheres replied with her,
Six thousand years ago!

And many happy children there
Upon her breast reclined,
The young earth smiled with aspect fair,
The heavens were bright and kind;
The azure cope above her head
In love seemed bending low;
O happy was the youthful Earth,
Six thousand years ago!

Alas! those children of the earth
With hate began to burn,
And Murder stained her beauteous robe,
And bade the young Earth monrn.
And ages, heavy ages, still
Have bowed with gathering wo
The form of her whose life was joy,
Six thousand years ago!

Old Earth! drear Earth! thy tender heart
Bewails thy chosen ones;
Thou look'st upon the myriad graves
That hide their gathered bones;
For them, by day and night thy tears
Unceasingly must flow;
Death chilled the fountain-head of life
Six thousand years ago!

Old Earth! old Earth! above thy head,
The heavens are dark and chill,
The sun looks coldly on thee now,
The stars shine pale and still;
No more the heavenly symphonies
Through listening ether flow,
Which swelled upon creation's ear,
Six thousand years ago!

Weep not in bitter grief, O Earth!
Weep not in hopelessness!
From out the heavens "a still small voice"
Whispers returning peace.
Thy tears are precious in the sight
Of ONE who marks their flow,
Who purposes of mercy formed,
Six thousand years ago!

Thy days of grief are numbered all,
Their sum will soon be told:
The joy of youth, the smile of God,
Shall bless thee as of old;
Shall shed a purer, holier light
Upon thy peaceful brow,
Than beamed upon thy morning hour
Six thousand years ago!

Thy chosen ones shall live again,
A countless, tearless throng,
To wake creation's voice anew,
And swell the choral song.
Go, Earth! go wipe thy falling tears,
Forget thy heavy wo;
Hope died not with thy first-born sons,
Six thousand years ago!

Unity of Spirit.

(Concluded.)

If God has said that the saints shall have their inheritance in those imaginary, felicitous regions of nonentity "beyond the bounds of time and space," it is our business to believe it. But if He has promised them the earth for their everlasting inheritance, we shall do well to turn away our ears from fables, and be turned to the truth. God has clearly taught that the saints shall inherit the earth. The other doctrine is a doctrine "of devils;" and does it make no difference which we believe? Our first parents believed the Devil, and died.

Unbelief is the mother of sin, that which most easily besets the human race. If Eve had not first believed the Devil, she would not have disobeyed God. In consequence of the sin of unbelief, the children of Israel who came out of Egypt, with the exception of two persons, were shut out of the land of Canaan, and condemned to perish in the wilderness. The sin of doubt and unbelief is the sin with which God is most provoked, and that which leads men to pursue an erroneous course of action. For men will act just as they believe; consequently we shall not act right, unless we believe right. In a state of unbelief in the present developments of God's economy, we cannot do His will. Paul inquired of the "foolish Galatians" who had "bewitched" them that they "should not obey the truth." They first fell into unbelief concerning the truth, which led them to disobey it. We are required to learn the truth "as it is in Jesus," and act in harmony with the truth. See Eph. 4: 21, &c. In order to obey the truth and act in harmony with it, we must believe truth instead of believing fables.

Again. In 2 Thess. 2: 11, Paul speaks of a class of people, and for a certain cause, which I shall notice hereafter, he says,—"God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

'Well, says one, "if your theory is true, a great many good men and women who have died, not having the light which we now have, must be lost."

But, friend, I think you are rather too fast. "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." We are not required to "walk in the light" any faster than God is pleased to let us have it. Abel will not be lost in consequence of not believing that the old world would be swept with the besom of destruction in the days of Noah, for he was not informed of the event. But he will be saved in consequence of his having believed all the truth which he had the opportunity of hearing. Noah will not be lost in consequence of not believing that God would constitute Abraham the father of the faithful, for he received no such intelligence. But he will be saved in consequence of his having walked in the light that God gave him. Neither will Abraham nor his posterity be condemned for not believing on the Messiah in his person, before he made his appearance; but all that would not believe on him when he did appear, will be lost in consequence of their unbelief.

As the light that illuminates the path of the just shines "more and more," the economy of God advances. And, as each feature in that economy is developed, those who are on the stage of action at the time of its development are required to act in harmony with it. But those who have died in time past, walking in the light as it shone in their day, sleep in Jesus, and will put on immortality at the sounding of the last trump. We do not stand condemned to-day in consequence of not believing truth not yet disclosed; but when further light shines, those who are to-day walking in all present light, cannot reject the next development of light, and be guiltless before God. "The path of the just" will continue to shine "more and more," until the last illuminating ray shall have shed its benign influence upon the church of Christ. Then, and not until then, will the church be prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. God has constituted the church the light of the world. Therefore He does not send His people abroad with a smoking torch, rendered motley by black doctrines of darkness and blood-stained tenets of the "MOTHER OF HARLOTS;" but He has furnished them with the pure, golden rays of the gospel of His Son. And by means of that light, the foundation upon which the unity of the Spirit is established may be discovered.

Thirdly. In being built upon this foundation, it is not enough that we hear and believe gospel truth, but we must exercise ourselves in the principle of love. Says Jesus, Matt. 22: 37–40,—"thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it; thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." In these two commandments the whole council of God is combined; yet we find in them but two objects specified which we are commanded to love. But by searching the sacred record, we understand that we are required to love the brethren. And in order to do this, it is necessary to understand who our brethren are. This understanding can only be obtained by comparing the conduct of people with the fruits of the Spirit, as we find them delineated in the word of God.

If a brother trespass against us, and will not be reclaimed by the rule which Christ has given, we are no longer to esteem him as a brother. But while we detect his bad deeds, we are to exercise such love towards him as will enable us to do him good as circumstances may require, and secure ourselves against entertaining bitter feelings towards him, lest we mar our own peace and happiness, and thereby disqualify ourselves to do the will of our Father which is in heaven.

Again. We are to love our enemies. If we love those only who love us, we have no reward; for publicans do as much as this. Love manifested towards our enemies is one mark of perfection in ourselves.

We are to love the truth. In 2 Thess. 2 chap., Paul speaks of a certain "wicked" one, "whom the Lord shall consume, . . . whose coming is after the working of Satan, . . . with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the TRUTH. . . And for this cause," (because they do not love the truth,) "God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be DAMNED who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." The reason, then, why men are drawn into the vortex of error and finally drowned in perdition is, because they do not believe the truth. And the reason why they do not believe the truth is, because they do not love it. They have pleasure in unrighteousness—they choose to believe a lie. Therefore God sends them "strong delusion," that they may believe a lie; and when the delusion comes, they eagerly embrace it—they cling to it with deadly grasp, and, at the last, are damned. The Most High is pleased with those that put confidence enough in Him to believe what He has spoken; but gives up to "uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts" those who change the "truth of God into a lie."

Fourthly. Obedience is the fourth and final step to be taken in being brought into the "unity of the Spirit," and being established upon the "foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Says Jesus, Matt. 7: 24, 25,—"Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man which built his house upon a rock. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock." Now mark the difference between those who hear and do the sayings of Christ, and those who hear, but do not obey. Ver. 26, 27,—"and every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and it fell; and great was the fall of it." Here we have a representation of the great mass of professors who hear the word of God but refuse to comply with his requirements, vainly supposing that they are at liberty to construe His word to suit their own carnal propensities—that if they have a form of godliness they may deny the power thereof—that they love pleasure more than they love God, and stand acquitted in the day of judgment. Vain, delusive hope! "Be not deceived; God is not mocked." If we would attest our love to God, we must keep his commandments. Says Jesus,—"if ye love me, keep my commandments."

Again; 1 John 2: 5,—"but whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him." Then if we do not keep God's word, we are not in Him. Let us examine some of the commandments which God has enjoined upon us. Says Paul, Col. 3: 14,—"and above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness."

"O yes," says one, "'the end of the commandment is charity;' and whatever other gifts we may possess, if we have not charity, they will profit us nothing. Therefore it is of the highest importance that we have fervent charity among ourselves; 'for charity shall cover a multitude of sins.'" Yes, charity will cover or "hide" a multitude of sins. But in what way are sins hidden by charity? "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Jas. 5: 19, 20. We see that the apostle considers the man that errs from the truth as being a sinner, in consequence of his having departed from the simplicity of the truth. Yet he does not tell us that we should smother his errors under a cloak of charity, in order to hide his sins; but, if any can convert him from error to truth, let him know, that doeth it, that he has been instrumental in the hand of God in saving a soul from death, and of hiding a multitude of sins, by inducing the erring brother to cease to commit sin. It would be well if the church had more of the charity which hides sin in this way, and less of that kind that will see a brother wending his way to death among the mazy fens of error and folly; and, through fear of offending him, encourage him in his downward course, rather than warn him of his danger.

"But," says another, "'charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; neither does it vaunt itself, nor allow itself to be puffed up. It does not behave itself unseemly; neither does it seek its own, nor suffer itself to be easily provoked, nor imagine evil. It beareth all things, and endureth all things.'" Yes, this is all true, but it does not comprise all the characteristics of true charity. Charity "believeth all things," (that are true, of course,) "hopeth all things," (all things which God has promised;) "rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth." Then if charity rejoices in the truth, it will walk in the truth, speak the truth, and pity the brother whom truth offends. We are not only commanded to exercise charity one towards another, but we are commanded to obey the truth,—gospel, &c. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." 1 Pet. 1: 22. Then it is only in obeying the truth that we purify ourselves, and which alone can produce unfeigned love for the brethren: and nothing but obeying the truth through the Spirit will produce fervent charity, which grows out of "a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned."

Again. Gal. 3: 1,—"O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth?" &c. Chap 5: 7,—"ye did run well; who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?" We learn from the words of the apostle, 2 Thess. 1 chap., that the Lord Jesus Christ will take vengeance on them that know not God and obey not His gospel.

Again, 1 Pet. 4: 17,—"and if it (judgment) first begin at us, (the church,) what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" If we reject truth, after having received the knowledge of it, we sin willfully; and "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." Says John in his third letter, ver. 3, 4,—"for I rejoiced greatly when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkest in the truth. I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth." Also 2 John 4,—"I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father." Again, Rom. 6: 17,—"but God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." In 2 Cor. 6: 14–18, we are commanded not to be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness. And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? or what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, (error,) and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

Now we are under just as much obligation to obey this, and other commandments of the same character with which the gospel abounds, as we are to exercise charity one towards another. In short, God will never absolve us from obeying any of the commandments which He has given us. Says James 2: 10,—"for whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." Rev. 22: 14,—"blessed are they that do his commandments, (not the greater part, but all of them,) that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." But those that love and make a lie, are left without the city. See verse 15. Says Paul, Rom. 8: 14,—"for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." And they that are after the Spirit, mind the things of the Spirit. See verse 5.

The Spirit of truth has nothing to do with the things of error; they belong exclusively to the enemy of all righteousness; but it takes the things of truth, which belong to God, and shows them to the people of God, and leads them in the way of truth.

Let us then follow the leadings of the Spirit, that we may be able, through the Spirit, to know, love, believe, and obey the truth, and thus be prepared to keep the "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace;" that when the King of glory shall appear, seated on the throne of his glory, and, with the trump of God, call up the sainted sleepers from their dusty bed, and bid them shout in victory over the tomb, and challenge death to strike them with his sting, we may, with them, ascend to meet the Savior, far above where fiery billows roll, and find a rest within the portals of everlasting bliss.

For the Crisis.

From Bro. N. F. Nason.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to say a word to the brethren in regard to Bro. Spalding's letter, in the Crisis, March 10, in regard to Aroostook County, as he wishes to spread the truth in that section. I traveled in that county some fifteen years ago. I think if those who have the means and the love of the truth at heart, could see how destitute the people are, they would attend to Bro. S.'s call without delay. They are too poor to buy books, but are willing to read and hear. The poor should have the Gospel preached to them, if they cannot pay for it. I should have been with Bro. S. this winter, but my health will not permit me to do but a little. The Lord will soon come and save the faithful.

Yours for the Kingdom of God,
N. F. NASON.

Rules of Prudence.

1. One must not spend all that he hath; do all he can; tell all he knows; believe all he hears.
2. Think before whom you speak; why and what you speak; observe, audi, cerne, face.
3. Know how to be good natured to all men.
4. Hear the advice of the town clerk of Ephesus,—"Do nothing rashly."
5. When your spirit is heated is the time for the bridle.
6. In a violent impulse, be zealous, be afraid, lest you fall into temptation.
7. Never sacrifice hours in contention.
8. Take no notice of the calumniator.
9. Keep company not only with your equals, but with your superiors.
10. Be furnished with a stock of useful questions.
11. When you tell secrets, mind your stops even with best friends.
12. If solicited to engage in civil concerns, reply (if you are a minister) "I am doing a great work, I cannot come."
13. Gain by everything, even by reproaches.
14. Tell a story with unstumbled brevity. Let not pleasantry become levity.
15. Let not your moderation be what is called the murder of the souls committed to your charge.
16. Have two heaps; one unintelligibles, the other incurables; when you find a subject incomprehensible, throw it into the first; when you find a man unpersuadable, throw him into the other."

INTERESTING STATISTICS.—We see it stated from the census tables, that the Methodist church is the richest in this country (in church property,) and the Presbyterian is nearly equal with it, each holding about fifteen millions of dollars' worth. Next are the Episcopalians and Baptists, with less than twelve millions each; Congregationalists, eight millions; Dutch Reformed, four millions. But the Methodists are pre-eminent not only in the money value of their churches, but in the practical matter of accommodation for hearers of the Gospel; having seats for over four million persons, or one seat for every three dollars and three-quarters' worth of property.

The Baptists come closely, if at all behind them, accommodating over three millions, or about the same proportion; and the denominations commonly understood to direct their expectations rather more to the select few who are "called" among the "wise," the "mighty," and the "noble," expend their money on a comparatively small number of more "eligible" seats for worshipers, bringing a vastly higher rent.

The Episcopalians, whose church property is about equal with that of the Baptists, make it go one-fifth as far in "preaching the Gospel to all sorts and conditions of men"—seating only six hundred thousand hearers, or one for every twenty dollars.

The Congregationalists do better, [illegible]ing eight hundred thousand, or one [illegible]ery ten dollars; and the Presbyterians next best, seating over two millions, or one for every seven dollars and a half.—Examiner.

THE "INTERMEDIATE STATE."—We have been asked once or twice of late, if the Protestant Episcopal Church believes in the doctrine of an intermediate state, between death and the general judgment. We take this method of answering, most unequivocally, "Yes." It is a matter of great surprise that there should be the least shadow of a doubt on a matter which is so openly and plainly declared by all the standard writers of the church, such as Burnet, Tomline, Hobart, Whately, Burton Sherwood, Waite, and others, as well as the Thirty-nine Articles. The dead in Christ do not go to heaven, but to Hades, where they remain until after the resurrection.—Western Episcopalian.

EXPANDING THE LUNGS.—Step out into the purest air you can find; stand perfectly erect, with the head well up and the shoulders back, and then, fixing the lips as though you were going to whistle, draw the air, not through the nostrils, but through the lips into the lungs. When the chest is about half full, gradually raise the arms, keeping them extended, with the palms of the hands down as you suck in the air, so as to bring them over the head just as the lungs are quite full. Then drop the thumbs inward, and after gently forcing the arms backward and the chest open, reverse the process by which you drew your breath, till the lungs are entirely empty. This process should be repeated three or four times immediately after bathing, and also several times through the day. It is impossible to describe to one who never tried it, the glorious sense of vigor which follows this exercise. It is the best expectorant in the world. We know a gentleman, the measure of whose chest has been increased by this means some three or four inches during as many months.

EXPENSES OF PREACHING.—The following estimate has been made of the probable amount which it costs the individual members of the different churches in the United States to sustain their respective churches. The estimate is founded upon the last United States census:

A Baptist or Methodist, three dollars and forty cents; a Presbyterian, seven dollars; a Congregationalist, ten dollars; a Roman Catholic, fourteen dollars; an Episcopalian, eighteen dollars; a Reformed Dutch, twenty-two dollars; a Unitarian, twenty-three dollars.

BACKBITING.—The longer I live, the more I feel the importance of adhering to the following rule, which I have laid down for myself in relation to such matters:

1. To hear as little as possible of what is to the prejudice of others.
2. To believe nothing of the kind till I am actually forced to it.
3. Never to drink in the spirit of one who circulates an ill report.
4. Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindness which is expressed towards others.
5. Always to believe that if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given of the matter.—Rev. Chas. Simeon.

PREDICTED FALL OF NAPOLEON III.—In the autograph of a Wesleyan minister, just issued in Canada, we notice the following calculation, which is very curious. It was communicated by a Frenchman to an English friend. Fall of Robespierre in the year 1794. Repeat 1794 in single figures, and add the whole, and you have the fall of Napoleon 1. 1815. Repeat as before, and you have the fall of Charles X, 1830. Repeat the process, and you have the fall of the Duke of Orleans, 1842. Repeat, and you have in this year Louis Napoleon will fall, 1857. Thus:

1794	1815	1830	1842
1	1	1	1
7	8	8	8
9	1	3	4
4	5	0	2
1815	1830	1842	1857

CORNS.—The best cure for these troublesome things that we have ever tried is to soak the feet in hot water for a quarter of an hour, so that the corn becomes soft, and then trim it off as close as possible and not cause pain. Then take the tincture of Arbor Vitæ, placed upon a little cotton, and apply to the corn, and after a few applications, the corn will not only disappear entirely, but will not be likely to return again.—Scientific American.

MIRTH AND CHEERFULNESS.—Mirth is like a flash of lightning, that breaks through a gleam of clouds, and glitters for a moment; cheerfulness keeps a kind of daylight in the mind, and fills it with a steady and perpetual serenity.

Poetry.

MEN.

AN ASPIRATION AND A SONNET.

God, give us MEN. A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;—
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor—men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And scorn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty, and in private thinking—
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps.

Peace in Christ

From the tumult of earthly strife, from the tempests of earthly sorrow, from the storms of earthly adversity, and from the intoxication of earthly joy, the believer flies away and seeks for peace in Christ. Here is refuge from the storm,—his covert from the tempest—his strong tower and the rock of his strength. Here the heart reposes in confidence and in peace. The billows break in vain upon this rock. In vain the tempests howl about this rock. Here we are safe. The strife of tongues,—the sharp arrows of the mighty with coals of juniper burning and tormenting, fall harmlessly about us. We are safe. We are in Christ.

Man of earth, are you there? Are you on the rock? Are you in the hiding-place? Have you fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before you in the Savior? O, sir, there cometh a storm when, not merely thy shipping and thy dwellings will be tried, but when thy hope and trust must stand the test. Are you ready for it? Can you meet adversity and bereavement, and affliction? Can you smile at poverty and pain? Very well;—can you face death? can you listen to the rattling of his glittering spear and not be afraid? Has death no terrors for thee? the coffin and the winding sheet, the sepulchre and the worm, corruption and rottenness,—hast thou no fear of their loathesome coming? The worm that shall feed so sweetly on you when death shall have dominion over you, and all the dread pollutions of the grave, are there no terrors in these? Very well. After death the judgment! You must meet that—the thundering trumpet, the archangel's voice—the opening graves—the resurrection of [illegible], both of the just and the unju[illegible]eat white throne, the burning [illegible]wful sentence!—can you endu[illegible] this? And then the second death—the lake of fire and brimstone—the place of weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth—the grave of [illegible]thly hopes—the end [illegible] [illegible] meet all [illegible] harder than the nether millstone? Is your brow like burnished brass? can your hands be strong—can your heart endure in the day when God shall deal with you in justice and in might?

If not, you need to find peace in Christ. You need a refuge from the storm, or covert from the tempest. You may have it. Will you seek it? Will you seek it now, before it is too late? Will you not be reasonable and seek now the salvation of the Lord? Will you not take your stand upon the rock of strength? The waves of coming wrath are gathering in awful power; will you not then seek to escape before escape becomes impossible? You have reason—will you not use it? You have common sense—will you not exercise it? Is it reasonable to remain unsaved when salvation is offered? Is it reasonable to perish when you may escape? Is it reasonable to sink in the lake of fire when you may mount up on wings as eagles, and dwell in all the light of heaven? Is it reasonable to trifle now, and wail and mourn at last? Is it reasonable to choose death instead of life, sorrow instead of joy, wrath instead of blessing, despair instead of peace, and perdition instead of salvation? Will you not then be reasonable? Will you not seek to know the Lord and share his love? Will you not find peace in Christ? Behold, then, the Lamb of God! Look to thy bruised and smitten Savior! confess his name. Believe with all your heart on him. Accept him as your refuge and your trust; cling to him with a grasp which can never be unclasped? There you are safe. There you have peace! There you need fear no evil. In Christ we are SAFE; out of him we are in constant peril.

O man of earth, will you have this refuge for your rest? Will you now accept the proffered blessing? Will you now cast all your cares upon the Savior's breast?—will you fly for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before you? Behold now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation. Now you may find a refuge where no wave of coming wrath can e'er assail. Now you may find in Christ, peace, deep, unsearchable and eternal. Will you find it? Behold thy rest! hasten to it, and, standing in its hallowed precints, invite a lost and perishing race to share it with you. O prove the deep experience of that peace which is "like a river," which allies the heart to the eternal and the unchangeable, the Almighty one! Then lead the world to share the blessings you enjoy. Plead with the perishing—win them away from sinful pleasures—call them to sublimer joys than earth can ever give. Then, when the last storm of sorrow shall roll its broken clouds away,—when the last surge of tribulation shall heave your tossing bark—when the last flood of woe shall forever subside, then you shall sing by the river of Life, and dwell in the city of the Lord, and know through all eternity the endless blessedness of peace in Christ. Reader, may you and I forever know this everlasting peace!

Our Consolation.

What is our consolation? It is not the consolation of this world, or the children of this world. It is not the consolation of the man of wealth, the sons of fame, the worshipers of fashion, the devotees of sensual pleasure, the cunning speculator, or the groveling miser. No, glory to God, ours is a higher, better, and infinitely more glorious aim. We have set our heart on sublimer things. "Let the potsherds strive with the potsherds of the earth;" let groveling muck-worms riot and roll in the stinking dunghills of this world of vanity and misery; let the children of pleasure lave in the filthy pools of sensuality; let the dupes of fashion cringe and bow down to the cursed shrines of their worse than heathen abomination; let the charmed servants of sin and Satan sell themselves, soul, body, and spirit to the work of darkness and corruption—we seek our consolation from our God, alone. [illegible] will seek good from the Fountain of good. We will love the Lovely. We will trust in the Strong. We will seek the Holy. We will know the Blessed. We will cleave to the Pure. We will worship the Mighty. We will submit to the merciful. We will praise the gracious. We will wait for the coming One! Praised, adored, and ever blessed be the name of our Lord God of hosts, that we have been made to know what and where is the unfailing Spring of all desirable consolation! We are that happy people whose rock of confidence is the Mighty One of Israel! Our strong tower is the Ancient of days! Our hungry souls shall be cared for, and filled with good things. Our thirsty souls shall drink of the river of plenty. Our way shall be directed by the angel of Jehovah's presence. Our darkness shall be enlightened by the cheering beams of the Sun of Righteousness. Our battles shall be fought by the interposing angels of light. Our infirmities shall be helped by the Holy Spirit of the living God. Our sins shall be forgiven through the atoning blood of the crucified Immanuel. Our tears shall be wiped away by the kind hand of our loving Father. Our prayers shall be bottled in the golden vials of the heavenly watchers. Our groans shall be changed to shouts of joy. Our mourning shall turn to songs of rapture. Our sadness shall pass away before eternal smiles of pleasure. Our fears shall give place to lightness and gladness of heart forevermore. Our corruption shall put on incorruption. Our mortal shall put on immortality. Our toils shall end in endless, undisturbed rest. The places of our enemies shall be filled with everlasting friends. Our "eyes shall see the King in His beauty." Our trials shall result in glorious victory. Our cursed, groaning earth shall be changed, and shine forth again as when robed in primeval Eden beauty. Our creation shall end the long travail of six thousand years, and be glad in the liberty of the sons of God.

O let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad for the consolation of that people whose God is the Lord! Sing sweeter music, ye harpers of light, as ye contemplate the time of the final triumph of the redeemed of Immanuel! Our God is not a man that he should lie, or the Son of man that He should not accomplish His purpose of good. The heavens shall roll in fire and pass away with awful noise, and the deep foundations of the vasty earth be upreared in terrific ruin, but the word divine shall still remain! Faithful art thou, Lord God Almighty, and all thy counsels are true and sure! Now wilder play ye whirlwinds of confusion, we are covered by the sheltering care of the Eternal One. We will pass through the floods, and they shall not overflow us. We will walk in the midst of the flames of fire, and they shall not consume us. We will calmly ride on the wheels of tumult, and fear not the velocity of the speed. The earthquake may tremble at our feet—the fiery lightnings may play around our heads—the bellowing thunders may howl on our heavens, but sweet peace and blest assurance shall reign within our soul. He who rideth on the heaven of Heavens, in His awful majesty is our help, and underneath us are his everlasting arms!

Christian.

By what authority do we, as the followers of Christ, take upon ourselve any other name than that of CHRISTIAN?

1st. Christian is the only name that will express our whole faith. Other names express only a part, as for instance: "Baptist" indicates merely our faith in Baptism; and "Adventist" indicates only our faith in the Advent. But the name "Christian" covers the whole ground—faith in Christ as the "sent of God," the "crucified," the "buried," the "risen," the "ascended," the "interceding," the "coming," and "reigning Prince of peace.

2d. Christian is a name given by divine appointment, else it would not have been sanctioned by its repeated use in the scriptures. If only a nick-name was designed to be given at Antioch, the term Jesus-ites would have been more appropriate, since Christ was not the human name of the Savior.

3d. Christian in faith, character, and NAME is my motto. Who can object? If we have the faith of Christ, and the character of Christ should we spurn the name of Christian? Let us not only be right in faith, but in name also. Shall we call things by their right names or not?

"Praying in the Holy Ghost."

What is meant by "praying in the Holy Ghost?" Jude 20. Is there a standard by which to answer this question? Yes; and hence we are commanded to "try (or test) the spirits." The spirit by which we pray and act, is to be known by the system or scheme we sustain; by the impulse that urges us on, and by the object at which we aim. If the scheme, the impulse or object be Romish, then our spirit is certainly from Rome—rather from the Evil One that rules in Rome. If the purpose and plan be sectarian, political or pecuniary, such is the character of the spirit that prevails in and over those engaged in it, as the case may be.

But there is a Divine purpose disclosed. It is as much above all human schemes as Heaven is high above the earth. The Holy Ghost has spoken out this scheme or purpose. The Gospel is its expression—its verbal drapery. Now all those who heartily (or in spirit) enter into this gracious gospel system for renewing and saving men, and for restoring, governing and blessing the world; all whose aim and object is to promote this Divine plan; all who pray for the accomplishment of the promises and prophecies which were given by inspiration, do "pray in the Holy Ghost." It is in this holy cause; in this Heavenly light; and in harmony with and according to the mind of the Spirit.

The Holy Ghost working in us, aids us to pray according to the mind of God. This is addressed to us in "the words of the truth of the gospel."

Thus Simeon prayed in the Holy Ghost when he prayed for the promised Savior at the time and in the way that the Holy Spirit had expressed in prophecy.

Thus the Apostles prayed "in the Holy Ghost," prior to the Pentecost. They prayed for the Spirit according to prophecy and promise.

Thus we may "pray in the Holy Ghost," just so far as we stand in God's counsel and desire its foretold fulfillment. Our prayers should be, "Thy kingdom come! Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus! O that thou wouldst rend the Heavens and come down!" This, and all like language, when expressive of our DESIRE for its accomplishment, and our delight in having God so glorified; and our conviction that such is now "the mind of the Spirit," is embraced in our text. This is "praying in the Holy Ghost."

No prayer is of the Holy Ghost that has another source, another scheme, another aim, than that which involves the Savior's coming, the resurrection, the judgment, and kindred assertions of "the Holy Ghost;" for "He cannot deny Himself!" Nay, "He hath magnified his word above all (that bear) his name;" hence no man, no church, is above the Word. Nay more, our mind, heart experience, and whole being should bow to the will, the word of the Holy One. When the good Spirit works in us at all, He works according to His expressed promise and purpose. "He helpeth our infirmities, openeth our eyes to behold wonderful things out of his law. He causeth our hearts to burn within us, as he communes with us by the way, and opens to us the scriptures."

Death.

Death has made, and is still making sad havoq among the little ones in these last days. Is is a mystery why the innocent are cut off from among the living at this time, when we are expecting the Messiah who has said, "of such is the kingdom of Heaven." We feel confident that young children will be ready, if living, to meet the Lord, but had they still lived would their parents have been weaned from the earth as they now are? When a shepherd takes a lamb to shelter it, the sheep will follow it. The little ones sleep in Jesus; they are safe. The believing parents press their way onward, looking to the great Shepherd of souls who has promised to return and bring the loved ones from the land of the enemy. Let us trust in God who "doeth all things well." Blessed be His name. He wounds but to heal. Let us thank Him for giving us children who will swell the choir of the redeemed. They are not lost, they are hid in Christ. Cheer up, brethren and sisters, we shall very soon meet them in Beulah's happy land if we endure to the end. I have children and grand-children whom I expect to meet on the resurrection morning, if I am faithful. Our care for them has ceased; they are safe, and now let us turn our attention to those who remain and strive to win them to Christ; to deal gently yet firmly with them; show by our daily walk that there is a reality in religion, and that we do believe Jesus is coming soon. We cannot change their hearts, God alone can do that; let us do our duty. The Lord give us a spirit of prayer for the young who are committed to our care.

The babes rest securely no sorrow they know;
They are free from all danger and trouble below;
The angels are guarding their slumbering dust,
Till the grave shall give up its hallowed trust.

Thou'lt come blessed Savior, and raise them again;
Not long in the graves shall our loved ones remain.
In this state of probation let us watch unto prayer,
That we may be ready to meet in the air,—

And join with our loved ones, whose absence we mourn,
In praising our Savior around his bright throne;
The signs of whose coming do plainly appear,—
Then let us be doing, for Jesus is near.

The babes are all safe—the ills of this life
Can no more molest them, they are free from the strife
That we must encounter, ere we reach that blest shore,
Where united we'll live, to be parted no more.

Where is Paradise?

This question has been often asked, and often has the inquirer asked in vain, even of learned men, and those noted as Bible students. But why is this a perplexing question, baffling the mental powers of great men, and perplexing the careful scrutiny of able theologians? I suppose it to arise from a false view of other points of christian doctrine, consequently all efforts of the most learned theologians to reconcile their erroneous views with the plain and obvious meaning of texts about Paradise, prove fruitless, and each one is left to conjecture as he pleases. Thus we have many doctrines about Paradise.

All agree that the word signifies pleasure grounds, a park, or garden, a grove, &c. But then, how can this idea be reconciled with the doctrine of its being in the air, beyond the stars, in a "sky kingdom, &c.? This defies all skill of harmonizing opposites. It has been said to be heaven, or in heaven. Again, it has been located in the grave; and again, it has been imagined to be "in a place of departed spirits," or a "spirit world," latitude and longitude not known, as that world is not laid down in the Bible—the christian's geography. I confess that all these notions caused me much trouble when my mind was first awakened to search for the truth on this point. But is there not clearly revealed truth in the Bible on this subject?

We find the word Paradise in three places in the New Testament, all of which present the idea of bliss, a place of happiness. On the occasion of the crucifixion of Christ, (Luke 23: 42, 43,) the penitent thief prayed to be remembered by the Lord when he should "come into his kingdom. Christ answers,—"Verily, I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." The idea has obtained from this, that Christ and the thief went to heaven that day. But some have examined more closely and seen that Christ told Mary three days after, that he had NOT yet ascended to God, consequently they take them to a spirit world, somewhere else.

Again. We find Paul (2 Cor. 12: 1–5,) speaking of "visions and revelations of the Lord." He says,—"I knew a man . . . . (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven, ... into Paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful (or possible, margin,) for a man to utter." Here, again, the idea is received that Paradise is in heaven; and the learned Dr. Watts teaches us to sing,

"From the third heaven, where God resides,
That holy, happy place."

Modern philosophy, too, is called in here to show that the atmospheric region next the earth is the first heaven, the starry region, is the second heaven, and beyond the stars where God resides, is the third heaven. This produced the strange strain in poetry,—

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,
Look forward to that heavenly place."

Let us see if God is not a better interpreter than the astrononer or the poet. Paul says, "Paradise" is in the third heaven. Does the Bible speak of a third heaven elsewhere? Yes, it does. Let us turn to 2 Pet. 3d chapter. Here Peter says,—"by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water, whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished; (mark, first,) but the heavens and the earth, which are now, (second,) by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire. . . . The heavens shall pass away with a great noise. . . . Nevertheless we according to his promise look for new (third) heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." But it will be said Paul was caught up. I will here remark that it is said by critical readers of the Greek text, who differ from me widely in doctrine, that there is no idea in the original, of going up, or being lifted, or raised up, but of being "caught away," "caught off," or transported to another place."

Let us now look at the third and last text, Rev. 2: 7. John was on the isle of Patmos, and, like Paul, had visions and revelations. What did he see and hear? Among other things, this was revealed to him to write to the church of Ephesus. "To him that overcometh, will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God." Paul says this man was in this place. But where is the tree of life located? Let us look to this. It was once in the garden of the Lord, in Eden, Gen. 2: 9. Adam lost his right to it, and was turned out of Paradise. But in Rev. 21st and 22d chapters, we are taught that the earth is made new, the curse removed, the holy city adorns it, "the tree of life" is there, and the redeemed of the Lord inherit it. Christ reigns over it, and it is "Paradise." By consulting Dan. 2: 44; 7: 27; Isa. 35, also 65; Matt. 5: 5; Luke 12: 31, 32; Rev. 11: 15; Matt. 13: 41; 25: 31–34; Rev. 5: 10, and other texts, it is clearly shown that Christ's kingdom is in the new earth, and the Paradise, promised the thief on the day of his death, "the third heaven to which Paul was caught in vision; the new heaven and new earth of Pet. 3; and the Paradise of God, Rev. 2: 7, and new heavens and new earth of Rev. 21, are all of the same locality, as to time and place. The thief prayed for a part in Christ's kingdom; Christ promised it, and called it Paradise. Paul had a vision of it, and called it "Paradise," and located it in the third heaven. But it was not then the time to utter what he heard there. Peter shows us that the abode [illegible] which we look is a "new heaven and new earth," and is the "third" one. John lived later, and the time came to reveal more about it, and it was shown him to write to the churches. In his visions and revelations, paradise is located in the new creation, and the tree of life restored, with free access for all God's children. Let us strive to be there. Shall we neglect the duties enjoined upon us by a merciful God, who provides such a place for us by the sacrifice of his Son. Remember the promise is,—"To him that overcometh."

I. C. WELCOME.

Hallowell, Me. Feb. 1857.

From Bro. E. Whitney.

BRO. GRANT:—The work of the Lord is still going on in this place. I baptized six willing souls last Lord's day, and more will go and do likewise soon. God's word is as quick, sharp, and powerful as ever, if men do not dull the edge with their smoothing plane. The gospel is the power of God through faith. O, that the servants of Jesus Christ would preach the unadulterated word, and preach it in season, and out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and doctrine; for the time has come that men will not endure sound doctrine. The compelling message has gone forth, and we must preach, labor, pray, exhort, and plead with our fellow men to prepare for the judgment. The multitude may sit and listen to the last note of warning, but there are but few who believe to the saving of the soul.

Do any of us realize, dear brother, as we ought, the great event that is just before us? the great day of God's wrath, the resurrection of the dead, Jesus seen in mid heaven, angels descending to gather the saints, the faithful ones rejoicing, the wicked weeping, mourning, and calling for mercy, the trumpet sounding, the dead arising, saints ascending, &c.? Oh! who is ready for such a scene? It will soon be here. May the Lord help us to be faithful, that we may receive a crown of life in that trying day.

Your brother, E. WHITNEY.

Stoneham, March, 1857.

From Bro. S. H. Waldron.

BRO. GRANT:—With your consent, I would like to pen a few words more through the columns of your paper, to the believers in the speedy coming of Jesus, that two men in white apparel declared unto the disciples, as they stood gazing toward heaven, should so come in like manner as they had seen him go into heaven. Previous to His ascension, He says,—"I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go away I will come again." Brn. and Srs., is not this a blessed promise? and will it prove a failure, or will it be a reality in due time? Yes, heaven and earth can pass away much easier than one jot or one word of the Lord. Let not your hearts be troubled, but rest assured that He will come again at the time appointed. One thing is certain, in my mind, the church as well as the world must slumber and sleep while he tarries; and he must surely tarry until he comes. But let us be careful, that we do not sleep as do others, let us be disappointed as oft as we may as to the time of our Lord's coming. Them that wait patiently, love, long, and look for Him, will have their pathway illuminated with divine light, unto the everlasting kingdom of glory. The Lord strengthen and encourage the hearts of His people, that they may not stop now to parley with the devil for all the kingdoms of this world, but worship God, and in the end receive a kingdom (not portable) which cannot be moved. It is by practice that we ever become master of any art or science. We never should have learned to walk, or talk, without stumbling and stammering, when we blundered we did not give it up, and say it was of no use to try it again; and until now, time, patience and experience have taught us what imperfect knowledge we have of anything. And now shall we expect to become perfect at once, in the most important study in which we ever engaged? O, that we might not get above what is written, and turn unto fables, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils; but may we do the will of God that we may know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or not. And shall we be rewarded for all our careful research for truth, as for hid treasures? yea, verily, if we continue to grow in grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ unto the end. We live in the days when Dan. said,—"knowledge shall be increased." There is a God in heaven that revealeth (or maketh known) secrets; and the Psalmist says, "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." "A wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment." Lastly, and best of all, Amos declares, that "the Lord will do nothing but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." Taking everything into consideration, I can truly say that I am glad of heart for all the mistakes we have made, not merely because we have made them, but that they must needs be to fulfil the jots and tittles of the word. The Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God from heaven, suffered and died from wicked hands; this would appear wrong if we did not take into account the great plan of salvation, which God had in view for poor fallen man; therefore he suffered it to be as it was, and we should rejoice in the whole gospel concerning him from the manger till he comes again the second time, without sin unto salvation," to reward all those that love his appearing, with immortality; and those that hate him, with everlasting destruction. With the good old Bible chart in our hands, we can find out nearer our whereabouts than many are aware of. We have sure signs to mark the near advent of our Lord, and end of this age or world. 1st sign, in the darkening of the sun, to mark the end of the tribulation, just prior to the end of those days, May 19, 1780. 2d, in the moon, when she refused to shine at the full. 3d, in the falling of untimely stars, Nov. 13, 1833. And in addition to these, the shaking of the powers of heaven, (as I understand it,) will complete the sign of the Son of man, when men's hearts will fail them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; and when all the tribes of the earth mourn, or all kindreds of the earth wail because of Him. Watchmen! what of the night? We have passed the first or evening watch, when the church went forth to meet their Lord; and the second, or midnight watch when she made the cry —"behold the Bridegroom cometh." This from your unworthy Bro., looking for this same Jesus to come again, according to his promise. S. H. WALDRON.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 8, 1857.

Spiritualism.

No. I.

Spiritualism is now engrossing a large share of the attention of the civilized world. For ages, heathen nations have been familiar with it, but it has been reserved for the present generation to behold its full development. Lawyers, Doctors, Poets, Statesmen, and learned Divines, stand amazed and confounded before the car of the spiritual Juggernaut. Every thing must clear the track before its onward march, or be crushed beneath its weight. Its victims are said to number a half a dozen millions in our own land, besides the multitudes in other countries. We learn that Alexander II., Emperor of Russia, claims to hold converse with the spirit of his father Nicholas, who gives his son counsel in guiding the affairs of the empire. Napoleon Bonaparte is said to consult the spirit of his uncle, Napoleon I., and at the present time is being astonished at the wonderful phenomena manifested through a distinguished American medium, who is performing before the Emperor at the Tuileries. The language of the Revelator, when referring to the "unclean spirits" that were to manifest themselves in the last days, seems to be fulfilling at the present time. He says, "they are the spirits of devils, (demons) working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." All classes are leaving the word of God and consulting these "unclean spirits" who are doing all in their power to overthrow the Bible, and remove the foundations of christianity. Church and State dignitaries are combining with talent and wealth to give these spirits a powerful sway over those who yield to their Satanic influence. Their progress is without a parallel in the history of the world. Should spiritualism continue to spread for six years to come in the same ratio that it has for six years past, there would be but a handful who were not its votaries—here and there one like Noah and Lot.

We are led to inquire what is the prime object of these spiritual manifestations? Let them answer.

"To teach mankind that what they have been harboring as a shadow, but never known, is in truth a reality: that the interior man, the sentient being 'That stirs within, and animates his clay,' is immortal and never dies. This consideration, were there no other, is a sufficient one."

A spirit, which professed to be that of Emanuel Swedenborg, was asked,—"is it one of the principal objects of these communications to convince men of the immortality of the soul?" Answered—"yes." Says another,—"The visitations and manifestations from the spirit-world, are to convince you of the immortality of the soul."

They seem more anxious to establish this point than any other. Is it not a little strange that men who have been noted for their infidelity should take the lead in endeavoring to establish what is considered a Bible truth (?) and still reject the Bible? Has it come to pass that skeptics have become the great defenders of the word of God? to "demonstrate" its truth? We think not. But why are these spirits so anxious to prove that man is immortal, and never dies? We answer, to show, if possible, that Satan, their great leader, told the truth to our first parents, in the garden of Eden, when he said—"ye shall not surely die." If man is immortal, as Satan there declares, then the lie falls upon the Lord, who had said to Adam, "thou shalt surely DIE." The Bible declares that Satan "is a liar," and the subsequent history of Adam and his posterity has shown most clearly that the Lord told the truth, when he said to Adam,—"thou shalt surely die . . . and return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

Satan has persuaded most of the heathen to believe his great lie, which was that man should not die,—he also persuaded Pope Pius V. to pass a decree that the soul was immortal; and now he is trying to demonstrate it, by his deceitful arts. We believe in the physical and intellectual phenomena as claimed by Spiritualists, but we are fully satisfied that the spirits are "spirits of Demons working miracles." We believe that the Bible most clearly teaches, in opposition to Satan, that the whole man dies, and that his future existence depends on the resurrection of the dead; hence we are prepared to adopt the language of Paul, and say—"if there be no resurrection of the dead . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished;" which is not true, if man is immortal and never dies, as Satan declared to our first parents.

For the Crisis

"Doth Job Fear God for nought?" Job 1: 9.

God and Satan are set forth in the Scriptures, as being two great opposing powers. In the connection of our text it appears that the Lord met Satan and a conversation arose between them respecting Job. God calls him a perfect man; Satan answers in the language of the text, and adds, "hast thou not made a hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? Thou hast blest the work of his hands, and his substance is increased in the land. But put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face."

Here it is plainly seen that Satan has undertaken to show God that Job is one of those speculative christians, so called. True, some men appear to serve God, make profession simply and solely from a speculative motive, supposing to get gain thereby. Satan well knew this, and mistook Job for one of this character. Job possessed great riches, so that he was the greatest of all the men of the East. But Job's riches did not make him proud, scornful, dishonest, covetous nor boastful; if they had, God, who is the searcher of all hearts, would not have called him perfect and upright. Such is the character of that good man, and in consequence of this he must suffer loss of property, servants, and children, and then be afflicted with boils from the sole of his foot to the crown of his head. Here in all this it was manifest whether Job served God for the world or a higher object. It was in the deepest of his afflictions that his wife said unto him,—"dost thou still retain thine integrity? curse God and die." What was Job's answer? "But he said unto her, thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. What! shall we receive good at the hand of God and shall we not receive evil?" How easy for man to talk thus, when everything goes prosperously with him. But in adversity, most all exclaim,—"my lot is hard;" a murmur escapes their lips e'er they are aware. But it was not so with Job; he was a pattern of patience. Hence, the apostle James speaks of him as an example. He was after the life that is to come at the expense of everything.

Many are apt to reproach christians on the account of those who walk disorderly, and instead of recognizing in them their true character, they are ready to tauntingly exclaim, "do they fear God for nought?" True it is that every child bears a resemblance to its parent, and if the devil could presume upon God's character so much as to doubt the truth of his word in reference to Job's uprightness, may we not reasonably suppose that his children will venture to anathematize those who belong to the family of God? Most certainly. Then, like Job we may expect to fall into sore trials; but as God's eye was upon him, so it will be upon us; and as he did not suffer Satan to take his life, no more will he suffer our lives to be taken: that is, if they are hidden in God as was Job's. Disease may fasten upon us, our strength may fail, our limbs become inactive, our body become lifeless; so did Job's, yet, like him we know that our Redeemer lives, and that our lifeless forms will spring up into new life when the heavens cease to retain Him who holds precious to himself the life of every saint.

O thank God! the christian does not fear God for nought. No, no! it is not the riches of an earth that fades, for which he labors, but for one that will bloom in more than Eden beauty. It is not to save his natural life which is mixed with sorrow, but it is for eternal life where sorrow will never be known. It is not to come into the immediate presence and favor of an earthly monarch, but it is to gain the smiles and the approval of the King of Kings and Lord of Lords. It is not for a crown that will fade, but for one of unfading glory and that will be at God's right hand. That for which the christian labors, is not all in the advance of him; an hundred fold is promised in this life, hence his peace is like a river and his righteousness like the waves of the sea. Job's religion was of that character which smoothed his pillow in all his afflictions; he felt that God was just and yet the justifier of him that believeth, and "although he slay me," said he, "yet will I trust in him;" and when bereft of almost all that he had called dear, he could exclaim, "blessed be the name of the Lord." O that there were more like Job! Many I fear are worse than covered with boils. God looks at the heart.

God is Ours.

God is our Friend and Helper,—what need we fear? Of whom need we be afraid? Let come what will, poverty, pain, sickness, death, or judgment, all is well while we trust in him. "All things work together for good to them who love" Him. We cannot fail or fall while His everlasting arm is beneath us, to hold up our goings. O, let us rejoice, and be glad, and lift up the voice of praise to His holy name, for all of that holy care, and tender saving compassion which He exercises toward us His erring and feeble children. With what blessed promises does He stay our fainting spirits! With what a glorious prospect does He charm and cheer our desponding and tempted souls! O, how equal are His ways with us! How longsuffering is He with our shortcomings and infirmities! He promises us help now—He promises us help in future—He promises us help forevermore! As the mountains were round about His city of old, so is the grace of His covenant round about His little flock, who love Him. Stand up, my soul in almighty strength, even stand up in the strength of thy mighty God, and challenge all thy foes and fears! The rock of our enemies is not like our Rock, even they themselves being judges. We drink from living fountains prepared by the Strength of Israel! Glory to God in the Highest! and let all the Redeemed say, Amen!

For the Crisis.

"If any Man will do His Will, He shall know of the Doctrine."

My attention has been arested lately by the use made of the portion of Scripture at the head of this article. I think there is a wrong application made of it by some of the brethren. If you tell them that you do not understand their conclusions to be correct, they will tell you, "if any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine." At another time, they will tell you, that it is necessary to understand his will before you can do it. Now this seems to be a direct contradiction. In the first place, they imply that the reason you do not understand their doctrine is, because you do not do his will; and in the next place, they say you cannot do his will unless you understand the doctrine.

This difficulty grows out of not reading the whole of the text; it reads,—"if any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether it be of myself."

This is the experience of all christians, because, when they do his will it makes them holy; therefore they know that it [illegible] of God. [A Traveller to the King[illegible]

For the Crisis.

Thoughts.

E. S. FENN.

There seems to be a feeling of great anxiety manifest on the part of those who believe that Jesus Christ is about to establish an everlasting kingdom on the earth; and so intimately have very many endeavored to acquaint themselves with him, (though not having seen him as yet,) the uneasy mind is often led to make such inquiries as these; "what of the night?" —"where are we in the history of this world?"—"is there no sign of day approaching?"—"why are we thus in suspense?"—"why this cry of peace and safety when we expected the nations to grow more and more angry, until the great day of God's wrath should be ushered in, and his Son be revealed from heaven, to reward the righteous and take vengeance on the ungodly?" So numerous are the questions ready to drop from the lips of those who have been interested in the return of our Lord, that it would seem to require a very faithful Watchman to be able to give an answer to all, without being somewhat puzzled.

Many are the causes which call forth these and similar questions; also the embarrassment of both watchmen and teachers in answering them. Undoubtedly one great reason is, the entire failure of worldly wisdom in making a proper application of the fulfillment of prophecy, and computing correctly the time or manner of the great event for which the anxious church have long waited, and hoped to see transpire. And while the wisdom of this world in many instances has seemed to blind the minds of men, they have forgotten that the word of the Lord is an all-sufficient guide to the City of the King, and are almost willing at once to admit that they are in the dark!

Now, if by running a little too fast, or being a little too zealous in the good cause, we have suffered a sad disappointment; and while our faith has been severely tried, we have neglected to watch and pray alway, and darkness seems to brood over us, and the beauty we once saw in the scriptures seems faded,—the sooner we get righted the better it will be for us; not only for us, but for all who may come under our influence. I am well aware that during the time we thought we were giving the last warning cry to the world, we (if possible) searched too diligently some parts of the word, while others were too much neglected; or, if noticed, were made to bend to the great point in view, though sometimes (sad to tell,) rather crookedly done.

Yet I can but wonder, to-day, as I consider what a complete piece of machinery it seemed to be, comparatively speaking; and I had almost thought it often caused a feeling of pride, that there was none to overthrow it. Hence, though firmly I believed it and faithfully lived accordingly, I could but call to mind, as time rolled on and brought not the looked for events with it, these words,—"is not this great Babylon that I have built?"

Man's wisdom is but little when compared with the plans and wisdom of the Almighty! "How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor?"

Well, the night has been long and dreary; only now and then a star has seemed to penetrate the thick darkness to give hope to the weary wanderers on the rough, dark ocean of time. But shall we relinquish all hope in this time of peril, because we have failed to realize our expectations in full? Nay! Was there ever a night so long, or storm so great, but that the morrow's sun appeared after it? And will not a brighter era dawn ere long to break the long dark spell which has desolated earth for about six thousand years? Methinks there will! So says the word, and THY word is truth.

It is a cherished opinion of my own, that there is a certain portion of the word fitted to the ability of every one who has a heart to know and understand the truth. I feel a spirit of sympathy for those who have been shaken overboard, and are still struggling with the waves, loth to give up the ship, and need but a friendly hand to pull them on board. Perhaps we cannot interpret all [illegible] symbolic language used in some [illegible] Scriptures, but there is a part [illegible]erstand, and become sufficiently enlightened upon it, even with our feeble intellects, to constitute us fit subjects for the kingdom of heaven, instead of cherishing the unpleasant thoughts [illegible] it is too late.

about his return, and all the inspired Apostles follow in the same train, when all the Prophets spoke so eloquently of the demolition of earthly kingdoms, and the reign of the Prince of Peace, and even pointed (as some suppose) to the very time when the everlasting kingdom should be established under the whole heavens, and the Prince of Peace commence his reign? Why did he speak to his disciples of signs and wonders which were not to take place in their day, just prior to his second advent? Surely it was for our benefit, not for theirs alone. Methinks, as he looked down through the vista of time, he saw a few who would be unlearned and perhaps unable to fathom the deep things of God, and wishing to have them without excuse, he fits a portion for them. Thus we find him noticing some very small events, comparatively, which were to occur about the time of his return. So, if we will obey the injunction of the Savior,—"search the scriptures," we shall not only find them "profitable for doctrine, reproof," &c., but shall be "thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

Then take courage, Brother, Sister,
There's light to follow still;
The weak, perhaps, may help
The Master's table fill.

Oh! when they all are gathered,
And Jesus serves them, then,
May with you there be seated,
Unworthy Sister Fenn.

Bridgeport, Ct., Feb., '57.

From Bro. J. T. Ongley.

Bro. Grant:—Having just returned from my appointments, I thought I would write a few lines for the Crisis, thinking that some of those friends in the different places that I have visited in New York State and Canada, would like to know what we are doing in Pennsylvania. I would say in the first place, that we are trying, by the assisting grace of God, to live so as to please our Heavenly Master, and gain the kingdom promised to them that love the appearing of Jesus Christ. Secondly, we are endeavoring to do all that we can to warn our fellow men to prepare for the judgment; to comfort those who are looking for that same Jesus that went away to come again; and to reprove, rebuke, &c., those that have a form of godliness, but deny the power, (which Paul says is the Gospel of Christ,) having turned away from the truth, and are turned unto fables, as we find that class wherever we go.

In Girard and Franklin, Erie Co., there is a small company of believers in the glorious truths of the Gospel, who stand firm, and are in good working order. They meet together every Sunday to exhort and comfort each other. I preach there once in four weeks; viz., in Girard in the forenoon, where the brethren meet, and in Franklin, two miles from G., afternoon and evening. The signs in that neighborhood are ominous of good. Some confessed the truth. The Universalists and Spiritualists are stirred. May the good Lord direct is my prayer.

In East Washington, I find a few that love the truth. But the Devil rages; he cannot bear to have the truth promulgated there; his emissaries will do all they can to hinder those that desire to hear.

At Edenboro and vicinity, there are quite a number of like precious faith. At Well's Corners, we find a few that love the truth, and some that stand ready to misrepresent the truth; but trust that good will be done in the name of Jesus in that place.

I preach in this place (Blooming Valley) once in two weeks, on Sundays in the day time, and evenings in other neighborhoods near by. On the other odd Sunday I go in another direction, and preach Saturday evening and in the day time on Sunday in the vicinity of Bro. Ellis, the one that put out the book,—Bible vs. Tradition. The good Lord is to work in that vicinity, by his Word. There are a few there that love the whole truth, and are willing to work. Some that were on the fence when we first went there have come out on the truth. The last time we were there some came six miles on foot, through the woods, to hear the strange doctrine. Also others that came out to hear the week before when we preached a funeral discourse, were inclined to come again; said they, "why, th[illegible] given us more Bible in two [illegible] than all the different ministers combined in a year." The truth is gaining ground in that place. Praise the Lord.

In the evening we preach about five [illegible] from that place [illegible] come, and give Eternal Life to those that love and obey him.

We have also established prayer meetings in this place (B. Valley) every Thursday evening. There are a few here that love the whole truth, and, like Zachariah and Elizabeth, have a desire to walk in all the ordinances of the Lord. Some here have only a head theology. Oh, how it stands us in hand to understand ourselves, and the word of God. Dear brethren and sisters, let us try ourselves by the word of God. My prayer is that we may be sanctified by the truth, and saved in the coming Kingdom. Amen.

John T. Ongley.

P. S. I should be glad to receive letters from any of my brethren and sisters. Direct to Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Penn.

Sick and Needy.

Dear Bro. Grant: I write at this time to apprize the brethren through the Crisis, that I have learned, with sorrow and regret, that our beloved brother Turner has been, and still is, very sick with the lung fever. He has bled at the lungs, has been near death, and that his case is still very critical. Let me ask those who love our Lord Jesus Christ, and his sick children, those who have in days gone by received special benefit, consolation and instruction from his unwearied toil and labor, to be mindful of him in his sickness and needy circumstances. Prayers and aid are solcited at this present time, remembering that "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Yours in the love of Jesus and his suffering poor. L. Boutell.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. N. M. Henry writes from Blandford, Mass.:—"We feel that we cannot do without our precious little messenger, the Crisis. Our Congregational neighbors send for it to read, and some others, and I do not feel at all ashamed to send it. It can show its honest, truthful, loving little face, anywhere without a blush. May the Lord bless the Editor and contributors. We have not been to a prayer meeting since the Wilbraham camp meeting; have no preaching, nothing but the Crisis; so how could we do without that?"

—:o:—

Sr. U. A. Witherell writes from Winhall, Vt.:—"I have read the Crisis more or less for two years. I do love to read the soul-cheering and heart-comforting letters written by the brethren. I feel that we have the same Father in Heaven, and I am looking forward to the time when we shall all meet in the city of the New Jerusalem. Those that now sleep in Christ, our much loved friends, whom we have been compelled to lay in the silent grave, will arise at the sound of the last trump, and we shall all meet at Jesus' feet, to part no more forever. Oh, glorious day! My heart leaps forward at the thought. Only yesterday I was again reminded that death has not been banished from our land, by attending the funeral of a lovely girl of about nineteen summers. Oh! what must have been the anguish of the widowed mother's heart, to see her dear daughter close her eyes forever on all things earthly, while in the bloom of life. By this we see

'Hopes that to-day look bright, may soon
Lie moldering in their final graves;
And castles built upon the sand,
Shall be destroyed by time's dark waves.'

Brn. and Srs., let us be up and doing while the day lasts, for soon the night cometh wherein no man can work."

—:o:—

Bro. S. Marsh writes from Shabbona Grove, Ill.:—"I believe we are now in the days of the sounding of the 7th Angel, and between the events of the 6th and 7th vials. I expect very soon the 7th vial will be poured in the air, when the winds, or warring elements among the people, that the four Angels or allied powers of Europe, viz., England, Austria, Russia and Prussia, have kept in check since 1815 until the present time, will be loosed, and then will be the greatest revolution or earthquake that ever was known before since men were upon the earth. Immediately after that I believe the Lord will come."

—:o:—

Bro. B. T. Weaver writes from North Dana:—"The spiritualists are doing great things in this place in these last days. There are a few poor pilgrims here who are looking for and expecting the coming of the Lord soon, who will judge the world in righteousness. We believe the word of the Lord, and for it are cast out [illegible] meeting with the nominal churches, yet our hope is in the Lord, whom we expect will soon grant to all his faithful ones a sweet release from the sorrows of earth, and gather us with all the sanctified to praise God and the Lamb forever. Amen.

We have no Advent preaching here, but greatly desire to have some; and do most ardently wish some of the preaching Brn. would come this way, if they can only tarry for the night."

SECTARIANISM.

It is a bitter root, and baneful its effects
Upon the human heart, preying upon,
And eating out, though imperceptibly,
The very life of true religion—Love.
It giveth an expression to the eye
Forbidding and severe, and causeth words
To come forth from the lips, as far removed
From that pure gentleness the Spirit yields,
As polar mountains from the burning zone!
There is no virtue in it—not one spark
Of vital godliness. 'Tis from beneath,
Not from on high, where all is light and love,
For it is "earthly, sensual"—yea more,
'Tis "devilish." The root and offspring too
Of that "old serpent," who doth generate
All species of deformity on earth.
Away then with this evil, ye who love
The holy principles of God's blest word,
And to the truthful Pattern there inscribed
Study to bear resemblance. Use no more
Your "sibboleth's," and rods, or measuring lines,
But make alone that perfect law of love
The testing-point, standard of fellowship;
So shall ye flourish like the "bay-tree," green,
And freshly watered, and the word of life
Like rivers flow unfettered, while the Lord
Shall be well pleased, and smile approvingly.

Animal Diet bad for Children.—There is no greater error in the management of children than that of giving them animal diet very early. By persevering in the use of an over-stimulating diet, the digestive organs become irritated, and the various secretions, immediately connected with, and necessary to digestion, are diminished, especially the biliary secretion; and constipation of the bowels, and congestion of the abdominal circulation, succeed. Children so fed, become, moreover, very liable to attacks of fever and of inflammation, affecting particularly the mucous membranes; and measles, and the other diseases incident to childhood, are generally severe in their attack. In reference to this last remark, a distinguished medical gentleman mentioned to us that, in families where children lived on simple diet, without tea and coffee, if they were seized with measles, whooping cough, mumps, and similar diseases, he never called but once, as he knew there was no danger; but that in families where an opposite course was pursued, he always expected trouble.—Ledger.

The True Star.—There is one star that will never disappoint the hopes it awakens; its ray is never dimmed, and knows no going down; its cheering light streams on through ages of tempest and change. Earth may be darkened, systems convulsed, planets shaken from their spheres—but this star will pour its steady and undiminished light; the eye that is turned to it will gladden in its tears; the countenance that it lights, sorrow can never overcast. The footstep that falls in its radiance finds no gloom even at the portal of the grave. It is the star—

"First in night's diadem,
The star, the Star of Bethlehem."

Husband and Wife.—Between you two, let no third person come to share the secret grief or joy that belongs to your two hearts alone. Let neither father, mother, brother nor sister be the confidant of that which concerns your domestic peace. Bear all things, suffer all things, but in silence and sadness. Let a moment of alienation or years of estrangement be healed and forgotten in after moments and years of intense love, but never let the wall of another's confidence be built up between you and your wife's or your husband's heart.

Obituary.

Died in Raymond, Jan. 3d, Lizzie Jane, youngest daughter of Nathaniel and Esther Staples, aged ten months and ten days.

This is the first time that death has ever entered our family, and we truly feel that death is an enemy. Our little Lizzie, though young, was seemingly the joy of the family circle. She was lovely and interesting, and we deeply feel our loss. Her absence brings a sadness which nothing but the hope of the resurrection can dispel. But we mourn not as those that have no hope; for amid all our sorrow we do rejoice in the hope that when the promise made to Rachel is fulfilled, that her children shall come again from the land of the enemy, we shall then embrace our little one again. O, how sweet those promises! and sweeter still to know they are sure; for he who has promised has said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away;" therefore we are looking with anxiety and fond anticipation to the time, when shall come to pass the saying which is written, "death is swallowed up in victory, when He who hath the keys of death and hell will come and unlock the prison doors and let the captives go free. Thank God, the gathering time will soon come.

"O there the loved of earth shall meet,
Whom death has sundered here."

"We weep o'er the grave of our loved one,
Who suffered its brief hour of pain;
But know when the sepulchre's opened,
She will bloom in bright Eden again."

Domestic Summary.

Later from Nicaragua.

New York, April 1.—Steamer Texas arrived this evening, from San Juan, 20th and Aspinwall, 23d ult. She connected at the latter port with steamer Orizaba.

The Texas brings no later news from California.

News from Rivas, the head-quarters of Walker, is to the 18th. The purser reports the Army in a good condition, and well provisioned.

Walker, with 400 men, attacked the Allies at St. George, gaining the Plaza, and burned the important part of the town. He then retreated to Rivas, which Chamarro, at the head of 1200 men, had in the meantime attacked and been driven back with great slaughter by Hengingsen.

Walker met them retreating, and they were, consequently, placed between two fires, and becoming completely paralyzed, suffered intensely. The Allies are said, by their own accounts, to have lost 327 killed, and over 300 wounded; while Walker states that their loss is 600 killed and 500 wounded; and states his own loss at 2 killed and 21 wounded. Walker had the bodies of the dead buried.

U. S. sloop-of-war St. Marys was still at San Juan del Sur.

It is reported that Canas, the commander-in-chief of the Allies was under arrest for making certain overtures to Walker; that Clidlon had raised a body of men in Leon, and was about to join Walker; and that President Rivas had been assassinated; the last report is said to have been confirmed.

From Santa Fee and the Plains.

St. Louis, March 31.—Sante Fee dates to the 28th ult., have been received. The Indian depredations were on the increase.

Several skirmishes had occurred between the Mexicans and the Indians, and numbers of both parties were killed.

It is reported that Judge Hoppin, James Lucas, and two other Americans had been killed by the Indians near El Paso, and also that Jas. Hubble, who had gone to Sonora to purchase mules, was killed by the government party.

A letter from Santa Cruz river, dated Feb. 30, says that if the people of Sonora had encouragement, they would declare themselves independent of Mexico, and ask to be annexed to the United States.

The country is overrun with Indians, who are robbing and murdering the people in every direction.

Most Important from Utah.—We have no doubt that there is positive information in this city that Brigham Young and his crew have burned the United States archives, court records, &c., in Utah Territory; that they have demanded the appointment of one or two federal officers, both headed by Brigham Young for Governor, with the avowal of the purpose of driving any other out of the Territory by force of arms. The truth is, the Mormons are already practically in a state of rebellion.—Washington Star.

New York, April 3.—The Herald says there are at present in the city of New York, a number of Spanish agents, who are actively engaged in raising munitions of war for shipmennt to Cuba, in view of the anticipated hostilities between Spain and Mexico, and to provide against the threatened descent of a Mexican force upon that Island. The Mexican government have also their agents here, and particularly in New Orleans, for the purchase of arms and amunition and the enlistment of men to be sent under the American flag to Tampico and Vera Cruz, in preparation for this contemplated invasion.

From Washington—The Chinese Troubles—The Views of Gov. Walker.—The following intelligence from Washingtoh in regard to two important matters, we copy from a letter in the New York Courier, dated March 31:

The Administration finds itself also suddenly called upon to provide against a very sudden and unfavorable change in our affairs in China. The unprovoked attack of the Chinese upon Com. Armstrong's Squadron, makes us an involuntary party to the hostilities in which, at nearly the same time, the British fleet became involved. Our trade with China is of great value and importance. It gives employment to a large fleet of our best vessels. The post of Commissioner or resident Minister has become one of very great difficulty. Dr. Parker will probably be superseded notwithstanding his long experience and admitted ability. It cannot be doubted that the President and Gen. Cass fully appreciate the necessity of selecting for this post a statesman of the highest qualifications. As the war is flagrant, and its effect upon trade is already serious, a new appointment will be presently made, or instructions will be sent to Dr. Parker adapted to the present exigency.

A considerable reinforcement of the American fleet wil. of course be immediately made. A large proportional force of marines will also be necessary. Our new steamships of the large class will now come into most advantageous use. It would be an opportune service in which to test the powers of the noble Niagara, now fitting at your port.

Information.

I would just like to say to those brethren who wish to know if I am restricted as to where I may sell the History of the Russian War, that I am not; and any one, from any part of the United States or the British dominions, can have them sent to their address by express, by remitting fifty cents a copy for them. Abraham Flagg.

Foreign News.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ASIA.

New York, April 4.

Steamship Asia, from Liverpool March 21st, has arrived.

Austria threatens to suspend diplomatic relations with Sardinia. The latter power is busily strengthening her fortifications.

A difficulty has occurred between England and Japan. Two English ships of war now occupy Nagasaki.

The Irish Liberals have adopted their electioneering programme, of which the following are the leading points. 1. One tenant, as recently modified. 2. Disendowment of all religious sects, and abolition of the Irish Church, as a State establishment. 3. Religious equality, involving the repeal of the Ecclesiastical Tithes Act. 4. Enlargement of country franchise. 5. Abolition of the property qualification.

China.—It is said a great portion of Canton, both within and without the walls, has been destroyed.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News asserts positively that negotiations are progressing between France and England, in relation to sending a French army of 20,000 men to China.

THE INTERIOR TROUBLES OF CHINA.

[From Le Nord of March 11.]

From a correspondence sent from the frontiers of China to the St. Petersburg Gazette, we extract the following particulars:—

We have learnt from our neighbors, the Monguls, that the rebellion in China is extending far and wide, especially in the South, where all the provinces have joined the rebels except Tou Taian and another one. The Northern provinces submit without murmuring to the Mandchou government, probably because war does not suit the commercial spirit of the people, nor advance their interests. The Monguls who have lately visited Pekin, report that this capital possesses no longer even the shadow of its former prosperity. Everything is falling into ruin. The revolted provinces no longer pay their taxes—the revenue derived from the customs is at an end—the penury and destitution of the treasury is complete, and is most frightful in its effects. Those who are in the public employ no longer receive their wages, and the government cannot remedy any abuses. To add the climax to the ruin, the moneyed men, brokers, money changers, &c., have all left the city, taking with them all their capital, and have left for southern ports or for any other places where there is greater tranquility. Silver no longer exists in Pekin, and even the copper coin is becoming very scarce. In this dilemma the government has had a large quantity of iron coined into money, but the people will have nothing to do with it if they can help it.

In a word, Pekin has all the appearance of a besieged city, cut off from external communications. The Chinese consider the Mandchous as tyrants, whose rule has come to an end, while, on their side, the Mandchous look upon the Chinese as rebels, ready at any moment to take up arms against them. [The Mandchous here spoken of are of the Tartar race. The present imperial family is of Tartar origin, and rules over China by right of conquest. Since 1640, when the Tartars conquered China, this family of the Tartar race have been upon the throne, and the Chinese proper have been, in fact, a conquered people.]

Books Sent—B. Spaulding, J. Crosby, S. Woodruff, H. H. Arnold, Isaac Dimmick, Nancy Foss, J. Burley, J. N. Berry, M. Merrill.

To Correspondents.

M. M. Eastman, the letter was received, but cannot decide now when to come.

Bro. Nichols, we are out of No. 3, Marc 18.

Bro. A. Ross' P. O. address is Lowell, Mass., care of Daniel Churchill.

Sr. C. E. Gierlow's P. O. address is Athens, Tenn.

Nancy Foss—We are out of the works you order, but send such as we have in place of them, hoping they will suit.

J. Vickery—The money was received and credited, as you will see by referring to the Crisis of March 25th.

A Duren should have been credited $2.50 instead of $1.50 in the last Crisis.

M. C. Kershaw—We find two dollars credited to you on our books, which pays to No. 104.

SOLITARY MUSINGS.

'Twas eve in the summer gloaming,
When the silv'ry moon shone bright,
And the stars adorned the concave
With their gleaming rays of light.
The gorgeous clouds were slumb'ring
B neath the moon's pale sheen,
And the heavens of peerless beauty,
Threw a halo round the scene.

The air was filled with odors
Exhaled from blooming flowers;
And the zephyrs waved the leaflets
Among the Floral bowers.
When mid such scenes of beauty,
To a lonely place I strayed;
Absorbed with heavenly musings,
To my Maker thus I prayed:—

Shall I, a homeless wanderer
O'er life's tempestuous sea,—
Shall I, with saints and angels,
Forever dwell with Thee?
Or, must I on the billows
Of sulphuric seas be tost,
And dwell in hell's dark caverns,
Forever with the lost?

But soon on heav'n-plumed pinion,
An angel winged his flight,
Adown the glorious concave,
From yonder world of light.
I asked the heav'nly stranger
If my friends in peace should dwell,—
If my Father and my Brother
Would heavenly anthems swell?

He then replied most sweetly,
"Ah, yes, thou sorrowing child;
With thy friends thou wilt be happy,"—
And then with joy I smiled.
As the falling dews of Hermon,
Were such tidings to my soul;
And from off my troubled spirit
A burden seemed to roll.

But soon the heavenly stranger
Closed the interview with me,
And soared on heav'n-plumed pinion
As far as eye could see.
From that place of lonely musing
I homeward did repair,
O'er blooming fields and meadows,
Whose fragrance filled the air.

Then the moon was slowly treading
Along the western aisle;
And the gorgeous clouds were gleaming,
With the rays of her last smile.
Then all those glorious visions
Soon faded on my sight;
But those solitary musings
Still fill me with delight.

Invalidity of Profane Chronology.

FOUR REASONS WHY I HAVE NO CONFIDENCE IN PTOLEMY'S CANON.

It is well known that astronomical observations of eclipses, if truthfully recorded at the time of their occurrrence, for the purpose of marking any particular year of the reign of any sovereign, are sure evidences of what they mark; but it is no less true, that when such discoveries are made hundreds of years after their occurrence, they are not sure evidences of the first, second, tenth or twentieth year of any king's reign. On page 39, (Anal. Sac. Chron.) I read,—"B. C., 523. (An Eclipse) M. July 17th, Morn. o. 12; dig. 7 1-2; seventh (y'r) of Cambyses."—Ptolemy.

Now this record looks fair, and to a superficial observer, it would be demonstration itself, that B. C. 523 was the 7th of Cambyses. But there is no valid evidence that Cambyses reigned 7 years. Though we can now go back to B. C. 523, and find the same eclipse of the moon to have fallen on the 17th of July, just as the record states, still I hesitate not to say, that there is no proof that the year 523 was the 7th of Cambyses. Why? Because it was not recorded till more than six hundred years after it occurred. Ptolemy lived 137 years after Christ, (page 26 Anal. S. Ch.); and B. C. 523 added to 137, amount to 660 years. Now Ptolemy could only suppose that it was the 7th of Cambyses, from the histories he consulted; and Josephus states that "Cambyses reigned six years, and in that time he overthrew Egypt, and when he was come back, he died at Damascus: and the Magi obtained the kingdom for one year." Josephus lived about a hundred years nearer the time of Cambyses than Ptolemy, and would be likely to know much more about it.

My second reason is, the eclipse which occurred in B. C. 502, said to mark the 20th year of Darius, has no name to vouch that it occurred in the 20th year of Darius; and doubtless was discovered and marked also by Ptolemy. True, there was an eclipse; but evidence is wanting to prove that B. C. 502 was the 20th year of Darius.

My third reason is, that the eclipse which happened in B. C. 491, said to mark the 31st year of Darius, is proved to have happened in his thirtieth year, by those very histories which are presented to sustain the canon. This was fully done in Nos. 17 and 19 of the first volume of the Crisis, which can be referred to. This also has no name to attest that it happened in the 31st; and if it had, it is proved erroneous, and was, I doubt not, also marked by Ptolemy, though he wisely chose to withhold his name.

My fourth reason is, that 2300 full solar years have passed away, from and after his 20th year of Artaxerxes. These reasons are abundantly sufficient for me to regard it, not only apocryphal, but absolutely fallacious, though probably it is not many years out of the way; but one year proves enough to show us that it is not reliable. How often it is said, "Ptolemy's Canon is based upon astronomical observations." Whereas the truth is, astronomical observations are (not based,) but placed, or recorded upon Ptolemy's Canon; and these make it appear like a mathematical document, that must not be disputed. But I have no confidence in guesses, that are made at such a distance of time; and this I give gratis, and leave every one to think and act as they choose respecting it. It is time for us all to trim our lamps, and be ready to meet the Bridegroom; and the voice of Wisdom admonishes us to watch and pray, that we may go in to the marriage, before the door is forever shut.

For the Crisis.

Be not Weary.

The christian has to encounter many stern difficulties, rigid oppositions, fiery trials and strong temptations in life, yet what are these compared with the reward offered to him at the end of his warfare? For a short tribulation endured patiently and with Christ-like submission, he has an eternity of happiness offered to him. For spending his mortal life in the service of God, he has the promise of a glorious immortality. For sacrificing to the truth of the gospel here, he has the promise of an heirship to a portion of an eternal inheritance—to a "real estate" which will never be subject to mortgage—to a land where the leaves of the trees never fade, where the flowers never wither, where the green fields will never be blighted by frost.

Why, then, will you let your heart grow faint and allow weariness to come upon you? Why rest by the way? You have the promise of an eternity of rest! Why falter in climbing the rugged Calvary of life? You have the promise of roaming the elysian fields of Paradise beyond the reach of fatigue! Why thirst? The river of life is before you; push on, and its crystal waters are yours! Why hunger? Be firm, and you may pluck golden fruits from the clustering trees of Eden! Why weep? You will be glad and rejoice throughout the vast forever!

"Then never sit we down and say
There's nothing left but sorrow,
We walk the wilderness to-day—
The Promised Land to-morrow!"

Then be industrious. There's enough to do. "The fields are white and ready for the harvest." "The day is far spent." The ebon shadows of the night of sorrow, wailing, groaning, weeping, despair and destruction, are gathering around! Yet even at this "eleventh hour" a glow lingers over earth, which bids you work a little longer—the black curtain of the awful night of doom is now fringed with the glowing colors and gorgeous clouds that surround the sunset of the world's destiny! Soon the last ray will be withdrawn, and the sable curtain be upon us! Labor while you may! The coming wheels of vengeance and retribution "spin too swift for sight!" Work! work! for "the night cometh!"

"Work away!
For the Leader's eye is on us,
Never off us, still upon us,
Night and day!
Wide the trackless prairies round us,
Dark and unsunned woods surround us,
Steep and savage mountains bound us;—
Far away
Smile the soft savannahs green,
Rivers sweep and roll between:
Work away!

Work away!
Scouts upon the mountain peak—
Ye that see the promised land,
Hearten us! for ye can speak
Of the country ye have scanned,
Far away!

Work away!
For the Father's eye is on us,
Never off us, still upon us,
Night and day!
Work and Pray!
Pray! and work will be completer;
Work! and prayer will be the sweeter;
Love! and prayer and work the fleeter
Will ascend upon their way!

Live in future as in present;
Work for both while yet the day
Is our own! for the lord and peasant,
Long and bright as summer's day,
Cometh, yet more sure, more pleasant,
Cometh soon our Holiday!
Work away!"

Correspondence.

For the Crisis.

From Sr. Sarah Mix.

Bro. Grant:—Some time in May last, it was my happy privilege to meet with you in Cheshire St., Ct., and to enjoy a short interview in company with your most amiable companion in life's uneven way. Since that time, a little "white winged messenger," called "The World's Crisis," has made its weekly, welcome entrance into our humble abode, richly laden with precious articles of various kinds, suited to the wants and capacities of almost every degree of human intellect. Feeling unwilling that it should thus come any longer without contributing another mite to its further support, I herein enclose $—— for its aid. I have hitherto been deterred from writing for its columns, from a sense of my inability to say any thing through the medium of the pen, to the edification of my Brethren and Sisters in the noble cause of truth. Not long since, however, I met with a reproof in this matter, in the language of the servants of Naaman to their enraged Master,—"If the Prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it?" How much rather then, when he saith, "wash and be clean." 2 Kings 5: 13. If you could produce some very elaborate and well digested essay, upon some very important point of doctrine, would you not do it? How much rather then, when I only require of you to stand as a witness to the truth of God's word, as it regards the near approach of the reign of the Prince of life upon the earth. Yes, glory be to God, I am willing to testify to all the world, that notwithstanding death now reigns, and has reigned even from Adam unto Moses, and onward to this present year, the great Life-Giver, and everlasting Life-Preserver, is soon to make His second most glorious and august advent to our earth. And for what purpose will He be thus manifested? "To ransom from the power of the grave, and to redeem from death,"—to be the plague of death, and the grave's destruction. Yes, thanks to the King immortal, the Son of God must reign until the last enemy, which is death, is completely vanquished, and the lawful prey delivered from his cruel power, and made like unto their glorious Head, to die no more. Never did I see such a glory and power in the doctrine of the resurrection, as I have done for a year or two past. Oh, ye mourning, sorrowful ones, from whose fond gaze and loved embrace the grim tyrant has taken a dear companion, or a promising child—an affectionate father, or a fond and tender mother—a kind sister, or a loving brother, "sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." The God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, will also bring with Him from the grave every sheep of His flock, and you will again behold them; not in the habiliments of the cold, damp charnel house; not as when last you saw the marble features of death depicted in their countenances. No, no; but all radiant as the dazzling glory of the "Son of God himself," and clothed upon with immortality, living an eternal life in the kingdom of God. Well has the poet expressed it,

"Oh, that will be joyful, joyful, joyful, joyful,
To meet to part no more on Canaan's happy shore."

'Tis there we'll meet the loved and valued of earth, of every age and clime; and with them swell the song of redemption, until the reverberating sound shall fill the new heaven and the new earth with thunder tones of praise, unto Him who gave His life a ransom for many. Amen. Even so, come! Oh, come!

Your Sister in expectation sweet; waiting, singing, praying,

Sarah Mix.

P. S. If Bro. Burnham, or any other ministering Brother should, Philip-like, be directed to our place, I think there is more than one who greatly desires to understand what they read, and who will as readily receive instruction from them as did the Ethiopian officer from the mouth of Philip. Please wait upon the Spirit for Divine direction, and your course will be ordered by the Lord.

From A. R. Bassett.

Bro. Grant:—As I wish all the brothers and sisters, scattered through the land, to know of the refreshing season from the Lord in Haydenville, of late, I will just say, that Elder S. Chapman has been there and preached two weeks to attentive audiences. Most of the time was spent in serving God. The larger part of the hearers were Roman Catholics, who paid good attention, with the exception of one evening, when Bro. C. brought up the "little horn," which made them squirm; but the constable took a decided stand in favor of the meetings, and told the brethren to let him know if there was any more trouble, and he would take care of them. Bro. Chapman did not fail to do his duty in meeting and out; he was the instrument in God's hands of converting one Heman K. Vining, a strong believer in spirit-rapping, and who, a short time since, denied that Christ was coming literally he said that he had come. But thanks be to God he is now rejoicing in the Lord, and looking, with all the dear saints, for speedy redemption through Jesus. Brn. and Srs., pray for him, that he may be found with his garments pure. He is fully convinced that his spiritualism was of the devil, and says that he has not the least doubt but that he shall soon see Jesus coming in all his glory, to crown all those who are waiting. He says that he is looking for the consummation of all things soon. There also was a young man converted the last night that Bro. C. preached. This young man felt his sins and confessed that if he did not start that night it would be too late.

Pray for us that we may have a revival here in this town, and that great good may be done. Bro. C. formed a church in Haydenville. May it increase in numbers, and its members grow in grace, until Jesus comes. May union be in all our hearts. Now, all who know this place, and feel an interest here, will you pray God to give us strength according to our day. If any one should feel it a duty to come and preach, we propose to hold meetings at H. every Sunday, in Bro. Chester Sheldon's hall, where we should be glad, at any time, to give attention.

Yours waiting redemption,

A. R. Bassett.

Williamsburg, Mass.

From Bro. W. Tuttle.

Bro. Grant:—I have been a reader of the Crisis for some time. I value it as the best paper in circulation. I believe we are living in the last times, for the signs that were to be given to the church and the world, we have had, with the exception of the sign of the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. Brn. and Srs., glory to God! we are to lift up our heads; for our redemption draweth nigh. "So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." "Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my word shall not pass away." We are to take heed to ourselves, lest at any time our hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon us unawares. And now we are to occupy, and be vigilant, that we come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I am one that is in sorrow and afflictions. Three years ago this present winter, I was called to part with three little children from three to twelve years old: two boys, a little girl, and a loving mother, all within the short space of twelve days. As I stood by the bedside, where they were rolling from side to side, a fathers or a mother's arm was not long enough to save. I felt to weep as the blessed Lord did over the grave of Lazarus; and with the poet I could say,—

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just;
While the rich blood of martyrs slain,
Lies mingled in the dust."

Those that have lost friends know my feelings; but, glory to God! the time I hope is near, when Rachel's children will come from the land of their enemy; the earth will no more cover her slain. When I stand over the little graves, I think of the words of the blessed Jesus,—"marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves, shall hear his voice and come forth." While friends that we loved are many of them hidden in the noisome grave, we ourselves are full of disappointment and mourning. "We which have the first-fruits of the spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." In this condition we groan, "earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." When I look around, all looks dark and gloomy; sin and iniquity abound, and with the poet I can say,—

"Temptations are thick'ning, and perils surrounding,
And nothing below can my aching heart cheer;
For love waxes cold and all sins are abounding,
And all things betoken a crisis is near.
But hope of redemption my sad heart is cheering,
The bright star of hope doth illumine my way;
O come, blessed Jesus! O haste thine appearing,
O hasten the dawn of a happier day!"

Finally, Brn. and Srs., may we be rooted and grounded in love, able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height; and to "know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that we may be filled with all the fullness of God."

Brn., pray for me. I live where I hear but little about the coming of the Lord. Bro. A. Ross preaches sometimes where I can hear him. If any of God's servants come to Skowhegan, call and see me, a pilgrim and a sojourner. I keep a home for all saints.

Yours, longing for deliverance,

Warren Tuttle.

"The Inhabitant shall not say, I am sick."

Where is that world, through whose vast realm so fair,
A trembling, wasted form meets not the eye,—
No deep groan pains the ear—the healthful air
Is burdened never by the wail and sigh?

Where is the clime that breathes no deadly blight,
No poisonous vapor in the still night time—
Quenching forever bright young eyes' love-light,
Fading the cheek of bloom—where is that clime?

Where is that land upon whose verdant breast
The grave's low, narrow mound is never made;
And where no mourner bending, sable drest,
A fruitless prayer pours where her all is laid?

Where is that happy realm, that radiant shore,
Where walk in beauty that immortal band;
Where they shall say, "I'm sick, I'm sick," no more—
Here all is dying—where, where is that land?

The world thou seek'st! the blest eternal shore,
Thou'lt find beyond the dark, rough tide of Time;
There in that land thy life-long search is o'er—
Thine th' immortal, in that deathless clime.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. Ruddell writes from Buffalo, N. Y.:—"I feel gratified in reading the results of your Conference in Boston, and whilst reading, it brought to my remembrance the many happy meetings we have enjoyed in this place, in times that are past and gone; but, alas! things have changed, and I might safely say that the cause of God in this city is at present in a very low condition indeed. The reasons why it has become thus low, it is hardly needful to mention. Suffice it to say, that the injudicious course of some was one and a great reason why at present we are not as we should be, to say the least. Another reason, and by no means a small one, is the doings of some who have introduced test questions, and not satisfied with that, have denounced all others who came not up to their standard. The fact is that the influence of such things on community is bad, bad indeed. There are, however, a few in this place who object to all such proceedings, and are anxiously waiting for that Nobleman who has gone to receive for Himself a Kingdom. My object in writing this letter is first to say to the brethren, beware, and try the spirits whether they be of God; and secondly, to induce, if possible, some of the preachers of the word, that seem to be so abundant in the eastern States, to give us a call while passing this way, for certainly if there is any place on earth that needs an effort of this kind it is this."

—:o:—

Sr. R. Morrill writes from Lowell, Mass.:—"While iniquity abounds and the love of many is waxing cold, it is gratifying to know that there are so many still looking for 'that blessed hope, and glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.' When compared with the whole human family, the number of true christians is very small. When we look abroad over our land and world, we can see, as we never could before, that the earth is fast filling with violence.

Brethren and sisters, let us take new courage; look up, and lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth near. The world is almost ripe for destruction, and let us be fully ripe for God's Kingdom;

'For soon the reaping time will come,
And angels shout the harvest home.'"

Individual Responsibility.

In public or social questions where moral principle is involved, the responsibility of the individual is not merged in the action of the many. The Right is not a question of majorities. Numbers cannot sanctify a wrong. Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil. Though numbers, parties, and majorities—though all around you—are bent upon some deed of wickedness, do not you participate in it; be not thou a partaker of other men's sins; have no fellowship with them; have no part in anything that is evil.

Nor is this enough. Not only are we forbidden to participate in the evil deeds of others, we are commanded to reprove those deeds; to oppose them by word, by example, by every legitimate form of action; to testify against wickedness in private life; in the social circle; in public transactions; in political parties; in government itself; wherever deeds of wickedness are done; though backed by numbers, and wealth, and power; though advocated by interest and policy; though cheered on by a depraved public sentiment, by an unprincipled press, and by the demands of trade and pelf;—no matter where originated or how sustained, if it is wickedness, do not suffer yourself to be drawn into it; if done by your partners in business, your party in politics, your representative in the government, disown it; have no fellowship with it; reprove it; testify against it; bring it to the light; talk it down; live it down; vote it down; let your disapprobation be known; let your reproof be felt; acquit your soul in its responsibility to God, by abjuring and protesting against all manner of iniquity. God will deal with you in the judgment as an individual man.—Independent.

Lost—Wanted—Found.

1. Lost—By the churches generally, much of that zeal for God and his laws which characterized the ancient disciples. And, also, their first love and assurance of faith, that heavenly-mindedness, possessed alone by those who are in quest of honor, immortality, and eternal life.

The articles were first missed soon after neglect of family prayer; and were doubtless lost in the path of disobedience, as the owners were running tilt and main after a God-forgetting world.

2. Wanted—In the churches generally, men and women who will keep their covenanted vow, made to the Lord when they "put him on;" and will watch over each other in love, and admonish each other, and be diligent in every good work. Further, is wanted, a good conscience for a number of church people, who have spoken evil of one another. neglected the stated duties of the Lord's house, cheated their neighbors, and done many other things too numerous to be mentioned, thereby defiling their old conscience.

3. Found—On the highway to death, a package containing a ball of selfishness, so hard that it cannot be broken or melted by any human means. A list of objections to the gospel of Jesus. PASSING AWAY.

The pains, the groans, the bitter strife,—
The evils of this mortal life,—
The sorrows of to-day;—
The darkness of the rayless tomb,
And death itself and all its gloom,
Must shortly pass away.

The woful power of those who can
Compel their brother, brother man,
To bow beneath their sway;—
Who can forbid him "serve his God,"
And tread the path that Jesus trod,
Must shortly pass away.

The power enthroned so proudly now,
That reigns supreme on Nature's brow,
And holds supremest sway
O'er Nature's form,—forbids her smile,
Tho' attempting pleasures all the while—
Must shortly pass away.

And Earth, O, Earth! soon thou shalt wear,
The beauteous robes of Eden fair,
And an "immortal lay"
Shall echo through thy broad domains,
While saints pervade thy hallowed plains,—
Death having passed away.

We hail those beams of glory bright,
That will dispel these shades of night,
And bring an endless day.
We long those pleasures to behold,
Which, tho' unnumbered ages roll,
Shall never pass away. MARIA.

Conversation Between a Brother and Sister.

No. VI.

Bro.—There is the history of the rich man and Lazarus, Luke 17th chapter, which, in my opinion, presents an insurmountable barrier to your doctrine. I am curious to hear what you can say of it.

Sr.—I can say with Adam Clark that "no metaphor" is ever to be produced in proof of a doctrine." We need positive assertions to base our faith upon. Let me read an extract from George Storrs: "Parables are used only to illustrate some truth already known, or partially so, or to prepare the way to present a truth not yet fully developed, but about to be, either by facts or explicit instruction. The scope or design of the parable is what we are to seek, and not pervert the truth of God by the assumption that the parable is a reality that has been or may be: nor yet, that every item in it was ever designed to have an application to the subject it was intended to illustrate."

Bro.—I would like to see you prove this to be a parable. You know it is thought by many to be veritable history from the peculiarity of the phraseology, "there was a certain rich man;" whereas, parables almost invariably commence with, "the kingdom of heaven is like unto," or something of the kind.

Sr.—We will look at the parable at the commencement of this same chapter. "There was a certain rich man which had a steward;" and also in the preceding [illegible] a certain man had two sons."

Bro.—Yes, but both these may also have been veritable histories, related as illustrations.

Sr.—Then we will turn to Ezek. 17th chapter, where the prophet is commanded to speak a parable unto the house of Israel;—"A great eagle with great wings, long-winged, full of feathers, which had divers colors, came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar," &c. You see, this parable commences in as positive language as that of the rich man and Lazarus. Now turn to 2 Sam. 12: 1–17,—"There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor," &c. Now I don't really suppose that a great eagle ever literally transplanted a tree; or that Uriah's wife was literally a ewe lamb, and was cooked by David, and served up for dinner; or that any poor man ever literally died, and was then carried, all covered with sores, away off into somebody's bosom.

Bro.—Do stop, sister. How very ridiculous! It was Lazarus' soul, not his body, that was carried.

Sr.—Was it? Why, I must get the Bible and read it again. I never noticed that Jesus said his soul was carried. Here is the passage,—"the beggar died and was carried." I thought so. Let us be careful and not contradict our Lord to establish our own traditions. "The rich man also died and was buried; and in the grave he lifted up his eyes—

Bro.—Let me correct you; "in hell," not in the grave.

Sr.—You read Greek, I believe; just look and see if the word is not hades, the Greek word for grave.

Bro.—How could his body lift up its eyes and cry from the grave?

Sr.—And how could Abel's blood "cry from the ground?" or the souls under the altar; how could they cry, "how long," &c.? You see, these are figures of speech.

Bro.—I am glad you mention the souls under the altar.

Sr.—Recollect they were under the altar, the place where they were sacrificed, not in heaven as some suppose. Now let us suppose such a heaven as you fancy the parable to represent, within speaking distance of a place of torment, where you can recognize your friends writhing in agony, and hear their entreaties for favors which you know will be eternally denied them; even making benevolent prayers for their living friends, and showing a spirit of sympathy, which, according to modern theology, the redeemed in heaven are destitute of,—

Bro.—I must interrupt you. I do not think the spirit which actuated the rich man when praying for his five brethren was that of benevolence, but a dread of their arrival in hell, as his misery would then be aggravated by their mutual upbraidings.

Sr.—Very well. Would you like to go to a place within sight and hearing of your own relations, where you would witness their misery, and listen to their mutual upbraidings, with the prospect of being haunted by these horrid sights and sounds to all eternity? For my part, allowing this to be veritable history, I do not envy Lazarus his situation.

Bro.—Well, suppose we allow this to be a parable, it must illustrate some truth.

Sr.—Certainly, it illustrates the very truth he is enforcing when he commences the parable. Let us look back a few verses and see what he is talking about. Ver. 16,—"The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached," &c. You see, he is trying to make the Pharisees understand that the dispensation is changing. Let us read on. "Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery; and whosoever marrieth her that is put away . . . . committeth adultery." The law is now divorced, and we must not go back and marry her that is put away. "There was a certain rich man which was clothed in purple and fine linen," (the very costume of the Jewish priesthood.)

Bro.—I think you will find it difficult to make all the points in this parable have an application to the changing dispensation.

Sr.—Very likely; and you would find it difficult to make all the points in the parable related by Nathan to David, have an application. There was no ewe lamb in the case, nor traveler, nor dinner; still it perfectly illustrates the ill treatment of Uriah by David. So in this parable; there were no literal sores, or dogs, or graves connected with the changing dispensation, still the parable perfectly illustrates that change: "The two leading characters representing Jew and Gentile. The Jew, after the expiration of his ecclesiastical lifetime, dead and buried; the Gentile, after the expiration of his ecclesiastical lifetime, dead, but unburied, and just entering upon his ecclesiastical lifetime. Admitting this, the condition of the Gentile could not be better represented than by being in Abraham's bosom." (See Age of Conquest, by Z. Campbell.) The Jewish law (the conditions of which were obedience,) being abolished, we now come under the gospel or Abrahamic covenant, (the conditions of which are faith,) by adopting the faith of Abraham, or (figuratively) by being in Abraham's bosom.

Letter to a Newly Married Couple.

(PUBLISHED BY REQUEST.)

MY DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER:—Your letter was received the other day, and I occupy my first leisure hour in writing a few lines in response to it.

You are not mistaken in supposing that I feel interested in hearing from you. I confess that I feel for you an especial regard. It has been my privilege to preach to both of you the word of God. I have tried to point you to Jesus Christ, the sinner's friend. It has been my joy to see you both yield your hearts to the law of Christ, and to hear from your lips those first confessions "unto salvation" which result from believing "with the heart unto righteousness." I have led both of you down into the consecrated stream, and bathed you in the crystal waters of an holy Baptism; I have tried in weakness to direct your feet amid the perils of the youthful Christian's pilgrimage; I have bowed with you around the altar of prayer have gathered with you around the table of the Lord, have with you looked for that blessed hope,—have shared your kindness and liberality, and now though separated from you, you are objects of peculiar regard. For though you may have ten thousand instructors in Christ Jesus, yet no one else can sustain a relation precisely similar to my own.

Under these circumstances, when I learned that you had united your destinies and joined yourselves together as fellow traveler's on life's pathway, it seemed fitting that I should comply with your request and write to you a few words. And though formality would merely demand that I should express to you my desires for your prosperity and happiness, affection seemed to dictate something more.

Many a gay bark that sets sail with painted sides and gorgeous streamers, goes down into the ocean's depths an unsightly wreck; many a fair flower is nipped in its budding beauty and ceases to blush for those who had planted it;—and so many a cherished hope of earthly happiness proves but a delusive dream. Many a bridal greeting, many a wish of joy, proves to be vain as the morning cloud—deceitful as the early dew. And though each may suppose that their voyage shall be a prosperous one, yet still it is well for each to think calmly and soberly, and to realize that their hopes may be destined to wither, their vessel may founder, and their voyage be one of disaster and dismay.

So then, while I would gladly wish you joy, I will endeavor briefly to point out some of the dangers that may threaten, and warn you of some of the perils that surround you in your course. Fortunately you are not unequally yoked with unbelievers. You have in obedience to the apostolical command married "only in the Lord." It has not been, I trust, without due consideration, earnest prayer, and a sincere conviction of duty, that you have taken this important step. May you never have cause to regret your course. And to guard against such an evil let me make the following suggestions.

1. You should become acquainted with each other's faults as with your own. Persons who are married expecting that they have found perfection are always disappointed. A little time pulls off the blinders, and when the eyes are unscaled the "angel" is found to be nothing but a poor erring mortal. Then follows disappointment, then misery. You each are conscious of personal frailties—expect then to find just as many in each other as you know you have in yourselves. Expect to bear, and to make allowance for others just as you often need others to do for you. Men and women are not Gods or angels—no, never; they are nothing but mortals with errors, and faults, and frailties, and infirmities, every one of them. All these human angels die when they are young; if they lived to grow up, they would be just like everybody else to a great extent. Now if either of you judge the other by the rule of absolute, immaculate perfection, you will judge wrongfully and cruelly. "I have seen an end of all perfection." Expect then, each of you, that the other has as many faults and foibles, and has just as good a right to have them as yourself. And in picking motes out of the other's eyes, be always sure and first get the beam out of your own. When you are absolutely and perfectly right, then you may require the same of others.

2. Learn at the first to have a world of your own and keep your troubles in it. Some of your joys you may share with others, but your griefs and petty troubles are your own. Let that be a precinct where no other foot may tread. The man or the woman who carries a family grief to an outside ear (so long as even the shadow of marriage remains,) inflicts on him or herself an injury that may never heal. Confess your faults one to another and pray one for another that ye may be healed. You two go to work and build your own sweet, quiet world. Keep sacred the privacies of your hearts. Let no stranger intermeddle there. Let no mortal come between you. Let no friend, however dear, enter the consecrated enclosure that is hallowed with conjugal affection.

3. Reprove each other. You will both need reproof; who does not? And where can you hope to receive it so fully as at home, and from those who are constant companions? "Faithful are the wounds of a friend." You are not to expose each other's faults. You are not to rebuke in roughness and in rashness, nor in anger. The time of committing a fault is often a poor time to reprove it. Wait; go and pray over it; watch a favorable, private opportunity, and then in tones and words of love correct each other's mistakes. This is right. It is duty. The man or woman who cannot bear a kind, private, christian reproof, is neither a christian, a gentleman, or lady.

4. Bring all matters of difference to a speedy settlement. The first opportunity is the best. Let every trouble be disposed of immediately. Let nothing lie and rankle in the heart and eat out affection as doth a canker. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

5. Pray one for another. You can thus be helpers of each other's joy. Nothing will bind the sweet ties of love about your hearts like pure christian charity. If you can be united in Christ, you will be not only "one flesh," but "one spirit;" your hearts will unite, and together you will go forth, hand in hand, to overcome the trials of mortality, and to gain a glorious crown of life.

6. Conceal each other's faults. Not by hypocrisy, but by caution. Keep them hid. Many like nothing better than to find out the private faults of families. This makes food for scandal, alienation, strife, bitterness, disunion and division. To avoid it you will recollect, (1.) What faults that can be remedied you must cure. (2.) What cannot be you must endure. So to say anything of either class only makes a bad matter worse.

7. You must sympathize with each other. Many a tender-hearted wife is miserable from want of that sympathy that she should receive. We are to be tender-hearted one to another,—kind, easily entreated, full of gentleness, and patience, and good fruits. This will make us more and more like Christ, and we shall afford to the world an example of the power of grace divine.

8. Finally, you are to recollect that you wield a tremendous power over each other. Your characters are not yet fully formed. O form them right, in all the meek and patient love of Jesus Christ. Let your lives be such that you can have confidence in each other. Let every wrong be promptly made right. Let every act and purpose be to glorify God. O strive, by all the mercy and grace which you have received at the hand of God, to make your calling and election sure! I trust that your lot may be a joyous one, and though many trials may attend you here, yet

"To patient faith the prize is sure,
And all who to the end endure
The Cross, shall wear the crown!"

In view of that everlasting crown you may well endure the transient trials of our mortal state. We may strengthen our hearts with the consolations of the blessed hope, and walk joyfully on to inherit the promises at last.

And if we will do this, if we will persevere in patient hope unto the end, we shall find strength according to our day, and grace sufficient for us in every trial. And by and by, when we pass from the changeful scenes of an inconstant world, if faithful, we shall meet and share the peaceful blessedness of the Eternal Home. God grant, my dear Brother and Sister, that you and I may rest forever in that blessed home with all the saints of God!

You have my best wishes and my earnest prayers for your spiritual, temporal, and eternal welfare. And now may grace, mercy and peace abide with you evermore, is the prayer of your friend and brother, and former Pastor,

Moral Young Men.

Moral young men are the pleasure of their country. They are among the most interesting objects of social life. They are some of the brightest ornaments of community. Every consistent person is disposed to speak well of them. All well disposed and candid persons love them. What if the moral young man may not have the most brilliant intellect and splendid talent? What intellect he does have, and what talent he does possess will be turned to some good purpose; and thus, he will be useful to his fellow beings and the general interests of society. How glad is that father's heart who can look upon a beloved son, and, with confidence, call him "a moral young man!" How happy is that mother, and how sweetly she smiles, who can trust her dear son among the multitude without fear that he will bring shame on the family, by acting some immoral part! Our young men are not generally aware how valuable they make themselves, in community, by being strictly moral.

Letters to a Friend.

No. V.

DEAR SISTER:—We have fallen upon times that try men's souls; but for our consolation, our Lord forewarned us of all these things, that when they come to pass, we may remember he told us of them. He sent his first disciples forth as lambs in the midst of wolves, but said for their encouragement, and no less for ours,—"Lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

The enemy reigns to a great extent among the professed followers of Jesus. O, how artful he is, in seeking to turn our eye from having it single to the glory of God. He, the "old serpent," knows well the weak points to attack! How ought we to set a double guard there, and know Jesus is our helper and protector.

Cheer up, be not discouraged, "for our redemption draweth nigh." The defection of many, nay, of all whom you once hoped well, should not discourage you. Paul had this trial,—"All they of Asia have forsaken me." Some, at one time, were willing to pluck out their eyes and give them to him, but afterwards became his enemies. He well knew what it was to be in perils amongst false brethren. We cannot take a step, or taste one cup of trial, which has not been taken and tasted before us. Let us be followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. Let us seek the Lord and his strength continually. God reigns. It is better to think of His strength than of our weakness. We are weak, it is true, and so was Paul; but, as he was stronger in the hours of his weakness than at any time, so may we be. "When I am weak," said he, "then am I strong." You are cast down but not destroyed. When I was in deep affliction, I committed the great error of thinking more of my great loss, than of the immense amount of God's mercies which I had enjoyed, without any adequate gratitude, for many long years. I was too ready to think and say, I must sink. But this was wrong. I now see it and feel it, though not as I ought. Many of the children of God have said, as David did, "I sink in the deep waters;" but not one of them has ever sunk there, nor will our gracious Lord allow them to sink, any more than he did Peter when he walked on the waves.

Looking simply at our own hearts as they are, what comfort can we find? But looking unto Jesus, a world of rich consolation opens to us in a moment. To Him let us continually look. Darkness, and nothing but darkness, will be found within and around us; but light will shine as soon as we look upwards to Jesus, the light of the world. Why is he not to us as he was to the apostles, all in all? We must continually look to Jesus, and then our peace will be like a river, and our joy be full. Instead of this, how often are we afraid to rejoice at all, and go mourning all the day long as with a sword in our bones.

Dear sister, our reward will depend upon our works, not upon our success. Let us obey the Lord, and leave the consequences with him. He knows the future; it is safe to have our trust in God. Jesus is soon coming! How all things point to the speedy coming of the King of Kings and Lord of Lords. Who can look at all the heterogeneous elements, temporal and spiritual, ecclesiastical, political and commercial, attracting and repelling, fermenting, and foaming, and threatening, and then look into the Scriptures, and see the "signs" given for the Advent of our Lord, and not be found looking for that "same Jesus that went away?"

Let us try to wait on the Lord and be of good courage, and he will strengthen our hearts. I suppose every child of God has met trials of a very different complexion from what he had anticipated. Certainly it has been so with me, especially since I have looked for Jesus soon to come. Let it satisfy us that the Lord has chosen them for us. He knows what we need. He knows what will perfect the bridal robe of his church. Holy, pure, spotless, without wrinkle; how those words vibrate on my ear and sink in my heart. I sometimes am ready to say, "who then can be saved?" O for an increase of faith in God! that faith which will overcome the world, the flesh and the devil.

The signs of the times, all the world over, are full of admonition. The leaven of wickedness seems to be everywhere fermenting in a wonderful manner! How great is the long suffering of God! Surely we ought to account this as salvation. The Lord reigns, and the agitations, confusion, and wickedness that fill the world, do not, in the slightest, disturb his glorious and eternal purposes. "Be patient and establish your heart, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Shall we not say with all our hearts,—"Thy kingdom come," and "Come, Lord Jesus!"

Yours, looking for the blessed hope,

T. F. S[illegible]

Concord, N. H.

From Bro. B. P. Manning.

Bro. Grant:—I feel like saying a word through the Crisis to the children of God in this time of declension and wickedness. If ever I felt like a pilgrim and a stranger it is at this time; but the Lord will soon deliver all his children. I praise the Lord that there is light shining from the word of the Lord.

In Daniel 8: 26, we read,—"and the vision of the evening and the morning which was told is true; wherefore shut thou up the vision, for it shall be for many days." Then we turn to the first verse of the 10th chapter, and we find Daniel has an understanding of the vision. What vision was it? It was the vision that had time in it; for in the 10th chapter and 1st verse, he says, "but the time appointed was long; and he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision." In the 8th chapter and 14th verse it reads thus,—"And he said unto me, unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

Where did the 2300 days begin? We are told in the 9th chapter and 25th verse;—"Know therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times." Here, I think, is the starting point.

Now turn to Ezra, 7th chapter and 8th verse, which reads thus,—"And he came to Jerusalem in the fifth month, which was in the seventh year of the King." This could not be the starting point for the 2300 days, for this was B. C. 457, and then the days would have ended long before this time. But there is one point more to look at, in Neh. 2: 1, where we find a commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, in the 20th year of Artaxerxes If the chronology is correct in the 7th chapter of Ezra, then it is wrong in Neh 2d chapter. Now from the 7th year of Artaxerxes to the 20th, is thirteen years, from the first month of the 7th year to the 20th year first month. So then instead of B. C. 445 it is B. C. 444 444 and 1856 full years added together make just 2300 years, which reach to the first month of the Jewish year 1857.

Will the 2300 days end this Spring? If so, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness? I believe those days will end this year; if they should not end this Spring, I shall expect them to end in the Fall, in the 7th month. Jesus has told us to watch. "Watch ye, therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning; lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, watch." Watch for what? the coming of the Lord; and this is not all that we must watch for. Rev. 16: 15,—"Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." We must watch over ourselves. Brethren, be faithful a little longer, and Jesus will come and deliver you.

My health is poor. I have not been able to travel but a very little for some months, but hope to be able to attend a few more meetings before Jesus comes to judgment. O how I long for that rest that remaineth for the people of God. There will be no night there, no more death; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. Glory be to God! I do feel to rejoice that deliverance is coming so soon. Pray for me. Farewell.

Benj. P. Manning.

Goffstown, March 28, '57.

From T. S. Canfield.

Dear Brethren:—It gives me great satisfaction to hear from you, as you send forth an exhortation, or word of encouragement while we are toiling on in this world of sin, amid winter's cold and stormy blasts. We sigh for that land where no chilling winds nor poisonous breath can ever come; and pray,—"let thy kingdom come," and with David say—"let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end." But when shall that glorious day arrive? how long, O Lord! shall thy children pray and sigh for deliverance? how long shall the wicked scoff at thy coming, and put far off the judgment day? When the declaration shall go forth, that "time shall be no longer," what will be the doom of this world of sin? And shall we be found clear in that day of the blood of souls? Have we in our lives, by precept and example, warned the wicked of their condition, and told them of the abundant fullness of God's mercy to those who repent, and believe on the Lord our Savior? If so, shall we refrain from praying, Lord, "let thy kingdom come," although the wicked must forever perish, and perhaps some who are near and dear to us by kindred ties, must be parted with forever? Ah! no. If we have been faithful in the discharge of our duty, we shall look with longing desire for the day when the wicked shall cease from troubling, and the weary be forever at rest.

Children of the kingdom, seek to be cut loose from the world. You may be parents having children on the way to ruin; if you have been faithful to them and cleared yourself from their guilt, resign them to the Lord, who doeth all things well; and while we feel that many kindred ties must be forever severed, we can but rejoice that the day of deliverance draweth nigh. The gospel of the kingdom has gone forth as a witness to all nations. The end draweth near. O! for a deadness to the world, and a life hid with Christ in God.

"O, for a closer walk with God,
A calm and heavenly frame;
A light to shine upon the road,
That leads me to the Lamb."

Spiritualism.

No. II.

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." (demons.) 1 Tim. 4: 1.

If this scripture is not now fulfilling, then we are not in "the latter times." It appears that the Spirit is careful to call particular attention to this fact,—that some will lose their faith in the true doctrine of the Bible in relation to the gospel hope, and will listen 'to seducing spirits," who teach doctrines of demons. We believe that Spiritualism is fulfilling this scripture. It has been thought to apply exclusively to Papacy. Papacy may have fulfilled it in part, for one of its cardinal doctrines,—the immortality of the soul, is also a cardinal doctrine of Spiritualism. If the Romish church had not incorporated this great lie of Satan into their creed, prayers to saints would have been unknown, and priests would have received no money for praying souls out of purgatory. This doctrine has been the root or foundation stone of the papal abomination,—take this away, and you have removed its vitals;—it would become a corpse at once. So, if it were not for the belief in the lie of Satan to Eve, when he declared man was immortal, which is the only place where we can find the doctrine taught in the Bible,—Spiritualism, as manifested in these last days, would stand forth before community in all its hideous deformity, as the work of demons, or fallen angels, whose grand object is, to overthrow the Bible and the christian religion. We believe the great mass of this generation will be deceived by them, "because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned (condemned) who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." 2 Thess. 2: 10–12.

The prophet saw that "seducing spirits" would come "in the latter times," and that some would "depart from the faith" on account of their efforts to deceive. The churches of the land are trembling and tottering to their fall, before the powerful battery of error, arrayed against them in the form of modern Spiritualism. The sad news is continually arriving, that church members and ministers are being taken captive and bound hand and foot by these "seducing spirits." And shall we, brethren, who have had our eyes opened to see this delusion, in season to escape from the fatal snare, look quietly on, while our fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters, children and companions, are being drawn into this vortex of ruin, and not lift a warning voice? If the truth ever needed bold and brave men it is now. Christian soldier, arouse! The serpent is already coiling around that noble boy, and soon he'll be awakened to feel the death grapple of his insidious foe. As soon let your children visit gambling dens, grog-shops, theatres and brothels, as to consult with the "familiar spirits" in the "circles" of infidelity, that are being established throughout the length and breath of our land, and "of the whole world." I had rather hear to-day that my best friends on earth are dead, than that they have embraced "Spiritualism." Far better to die and sleep in Jesus till the resurrection, than to live in infidelity, and perish at last.

The Spirit of Christ.

"Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9.

Vastly important is our serious and impartial consideration of this declaration of eternal truth in this day of popular christian profession.

The Spirit of Christ! Alas! how doth the adversary triumph by substituting the form of godliness, speculative knowledge and a dead faith, for this blessed spirit which alone prepares us for the holy kingdom of God.

The Spirit of Christ is a spirit of holy love.

"I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea thy law is within my heart." Ps. 40: 8 "The Son of the Father in truth and love." 2 John 3. "Having loved his own . . . he loved them unto the end." John 13: 1. His holy love was not a mere transient affectionate emotion; it was and ever is a vital abiding principle influencing all his purposes and actions.

It was manifested in his voluntary humiliation, in leaving the glory he had with the Father "before the world was," and being obedient to the death of the cross, that God "might be just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Rom. 3: 26. Throughout his entire ministry on earth, and in his continued intercession in heaven, the spiritual mind traces the overflowings of His blessed love.

Now, reader, in obeying the solemn injunction, "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith," &c., 2 Cor. 13: 5, the great question is, not whether we can 'speak with the tongues of men and of angels," not whether we "have all knowledge" and "all faith" to "remove mountains—not whether we have "the power of godliness," but whether or not this blessed holy love is the ruling principle of our lives? God is love and God is holy. True love towards God is holy love. All other love is spurious and worthless.

The holy love of the Son of the Blessed was manifested in his constant regard to the glory and will of his Father. "I came down from heaven (he said) not to do mine own will but the will of him that sent me." John 6: 38. Is this the nature and character of our professed love? Have we this Spirit of the holy Savior? O! how did he exemplify that most important principle. "This is love that we walk after his commandments." 2 John 6. Is it our "meat" as it was his, to do the will of God? John 4: 34. If so, then indeed have we the spirit of Christ and shall "not be ashamed before him at his coming." 1 John 2: 28.

The spirit of Christ was a spirit of love benevolence, compassion and sympathy towards all men. "Jesus wept." John 11: 35. Does our daily conduct towards our fellow-men exhibit the same mind which was in him? Alas! where is that spirit of true love, which so happily influenced the first christians to consider that none of the things which they possessed were their own—that spirit of love which induced them to sell their houses and lands, that distribution might be made to every man according as he had need? Acts 4: 32–35. Their love was too kindred to that of Him whose precious name they professed, to leave their poor bretbren to this world's cold charity. O that we knew as they did, how much more blessed it is to give than to receive! What a loss do even real christians sustain by not thus laying up more treasure in heaven.

Beloved brethren in the Lord, let us pray for more of the spirit of our dear Savior. Let every covetous and carnal professor of the holy religion of Jesus Christ awake from awful delusion. "God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Gal. 6: 7.

The Crowning Work of the Holy Spirit;

—or—

Christian Experience under the Spirit.

1. He convicts of sin—our utterly lost estate, our diseased, mortal, corruptible condition.

2. He convicts of righteousness. Christ is accepted of the Father, therefore the system of righteousness by faith is the only practicable—nay, the only possible way, in which God will or can constitute a sinner righteous, and save him from his sin.

3. He convicts of "judgment." The world has yielded to Satan in politics and in religion. "The whole world lieth in the Wicked One," and God has already pronounced its judgment. He has assured this to all men by the Resurrection of Jesus. Acts 17: 30–31. The world, therefore, cannot be converted by human agency.

The crowning work of the Spirit of truth in the heart is to convince us of sin, of righteousness, and of the world's destiny, in and by "the judgment of the great day." Sin and righteousness are laid open to our view; but a knowledge and sense of the world's judgment is inwrought as the crowning work of the Holy Ghost.

Munger's Life.

Bro. Grant:—Having read and re-read the life of Bro. H. Munger, I wish to express my opinion that it will be a good book for thousands to read who are weak in the faith. And certainly it will gladden the hearts of many a pilgrim who has found the Lord in the same way as is here described. Besides many curious circumstances recorded in the book, which show ours to be a wonder-working God, there are many practical thoughts of much value which do not appear in our books generally, as well as some wholesome truths which will enlighten any who are inquiring after truth. Although I do not agree with all the author's conclusions, yet I hail his book as an excellent one to circulate among all classes. I hope it may be widely circulated. May God make it a blessing to many.

Yours, hoping to see Jesus soon, and in him to obtain eternal life at his coming,

For the Crisis.

From Bro. Turner.

To the Church:—Dear brethren and sisters: After reading Bro. Boutell's notice of my sickness, I resolved to speak to you about it myself, that there may be no misapprehension on the part of any. Again, while I feel very grateful for the early, kindly remembrance of Bro. B., I am not quite willing that the church should be generally invited to assist me by donations.

I have indeed been very sick with lung fever. I was taken the 9th of March and was confined to my room for four weeks, and for more than three confined to my bed. I have barely escaped with my life, and am as yet, but a mere wreck of my former self. My right lung and side were affected, and so severely, that both are still very feeble and lame, and it is altogether problematical when I shall be well again, if I ever am; it must certainly be a long time before I shall get fully over the effects of this, to me, untimely sickness. My kidneys have been so severely implicated, that I do not readily recover the use of my limbs, so that I can walk but poorly, and I have as yet gained strength very slowly; I hope to gain faster in future, in walking, at least.

I have raised frightful quantities of apparent blood and mucus, but it was only such as is common in lung fever; it was not from the substance of the lung, but from the pleura—the covering of the lung, the lung has not been ruptured; I have had no hemorrhage, or bleeding from the substance of the lungs this time. I am left with a slight cough, but aside from the lame side, that is not an alarming symptom; I may, I hope to be well again ere long, or at least, be in possesssion of tolerable health.

My reasons for objecting to a general invitation to the church to assist me, is not because I am not needy, nor because I am too proud to receive a gift from any, nor yet because I would have any with whom I have in any way been connected in faith, forget me; but because I know that such an invitation will reach the hearts of such as always give, and such as have already given toward paying the debt that has crushed me so long; and such, I fear, by that notice, will be moved to give again.

Now I do not wish them to do so; I cannot bear to feel the obligations such gifts lay upon me, while I am, and may still continue to be unable to render them or the church any effectual service. I beg all such not to feel called upon by Bro. B.'s kind notice of my sickness.

But, if any one of the readers of the Crisis are owing me for the Reformer, I would have them feel that what they owe me is now much needed, and they would do me a great favor to pay me immediately; and if they do not, I would have them feel, that they will lose ten times as much some other way. Again, if there are any of the readers of the Crisis who have not given to help pay the debt which was so cruelly and unjustly thrown upon me, a donation from them to assist me in bearing that burden, would relieve my present wants in an effectual manner. If I had my dues, or two thirds of them, I should not be in want.

I have been more particular than I should were it not that I wish distant friends to understand my case, since it has been noticed. Let all act as the Lord directs.

Be Thankful.

"In every thing give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." 1 Thess. 5: 18.

It is very natural for people to be thankful, when every wind that blows brings about something in their favor temporally; when no one says aught against them; when they can occupy the pre-eminence among men; be highly esteemed, &c. But it is just as easy to murmur under adverse circumstances; and the question arises, is it our duty under all circumstances, and in all things, to give thanks? Yes. What! does the word of the Lord require us to thank God in poverty, in afflictions, in reproaches, in distresses, and when all manner of evil is spoken against us falsely, for Christ's sake? and when brethren that are honest, in whom you have confidence, whom you love, and in whom you might expect to find a spirit of sympathy, become prejudiced, look sour and say hard things against you? Yes.

But how can you do this?

Answer. I find a text in Rom. 8: 28, embracing the very things mentioned in the text, which reads as follows: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Mark the text.

1. "We know," not perhaps it may be so, not we think it is so, not some one says it is so, but "we know" it is so.

2. "All;" not one thing, not a few things, not some things, not many, but all.

3. "All things;" not all heavens, not all angels, not all good people, not all temporal prosperity, not all these merely, but all things;

4. "Do;" not may, not perhaps they will, not ten chances to one if they do not, but "we know that all things" do, (though the word "do" is not in the text, yet it is implied in the language:)

5. "Work;" not all things are good of themselves, not that every thing that is done is good; but "all things work:"

6. "Together;" not separately, not one against another, but together. All heaven, angels, men, whether wicked or righteous, devils, temptations, pains, sorrows, slanders, reproaches, persecutions, cursings, blessings, storm or sunshine, prosperity or adversity, weal or woe, height or depth, love or hatred, or death: glory to God! all things work together;

7. "For good:" not for evil, not to our injury, (though some things may appear for the time, to injure our reputation, or our health, or injure us in a pecuniary point of view,) but for good:

8. "To them that love God." And who are they? We shall find out by ascertaining the nature and manifestations of the love of God in those that possess it.

First. Its nature is sincere, constant, universal, progressive, superlative, eternal.

Second. It is manifested in a desire to be like God; in making his glory the supreme end of all our actions; in delighting in communion with him; in grief under the hidings of his face; in renouncing all that opposes him; in regarding his worship; in love for his truth and people; by confidence in his promises; by self-denial and obedience to his word; by a desire for the welfare of others; by love for our enemies, and in a disposition to bless them that curse us.

9. "To them who are called according to his purpose;" that is, as I understand it, through Christ into the sheep-fold, not by the vote of a sect, but through Christ called to self-denial, to cross-bearings, to holy living, to a warfare against sin. God has purposed that we should come out from the world, love not the world, and be unlike the world.

Finally, those that love God are his people, and to such the promise—"all things work together for good"—belongs; and such can in "all things give thanks."

"Saints' Inheritance."

Bro. Grant:—I wish to call your attention, and that of your readers also, to a book written by Bro. H. F. Hill, N. Y., and now published by Jewett & Co., Boston, entitled, "The Saints' Inheritance; or, The World to Come."

It has now been out about three years, and has reached its fourth edition. I have not seen it noticed in the Crisis, and presume most of your readers do not know of it. But I do not hesitate to say that, should they read it, the larger number would say with me, "It is the sweetest book I ever read, the Bible excepted." I think it the best book of all we have ever had published, to circulate among all classes. It is thoroughly scriptural, deep, clear, devotional, racy, and greatly reformatory in its doctrine. I have sold several thousands of Advent books, but none with so universally good results as this.

I have purchased nine hundred and fifty copies in all, which are nearly circulated. It is so written as to make believers of readers before they get mad. I wish you would keep it for sale, and that all our ministers would circulate it. We have books treating on a greater variety of subjects, and more deeply theological, more radical and pointed, but which would not be read by thousands until they had read this, while they would not be able to quarrel with this book. I hope to circulate one thousand, and then shall try to circulate one thousand more.

The price is one dollar, neatly bound, and can be afforded to be sent by mail, post paid.

The Vision of Two Thousand and three Hundred Days.

No. I.

It may be deemed superfluous by some, to attempt to make any more computation on the above vision; but the promises, that "knowledge shall be increased," and "the wise shall understand," have not failed, and these should invite us to search diligently what the prophets have said, that we may understand both the "salvation" promised, and also the time of its completion. I have been once disappointed, and consequently can never feel so sanguine on any point of time again, unless the signs concentrate more fully to a focal point. But I have not lost one particle of my interest on the subject, nor of my desire to behold the blessed One.

We know that we can trace the symbolic prophecy of the great image through all its changes, to its very last phase, and what remains we feel assured is but a very brief space; and have we not a greater evidence, even the words of "the wonderful numberer," who assures us, "at the time of the end, shall be the vision?" "Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation; for at the time appointed the end shall be." This time appointed, must be the end of the 2300 days, when "Michael, the great prince, shall stand up." In view of this vision, I do solemnly feel that there is but a step between us and the Judgment; and shall we not communicate our views to those we love, who are fellow travellers with us, and bound to the same judgment?

The question has been asked, "has the vision, if commenced by the seventy weeks, run out?" To this I answer, I think not; and I shall give my reasons in as plain and simple language as possible. I read, Dan. 9: 24, 25;—"Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, . . . to make an end of sins, (sin-offerings,) and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy. Know therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah, the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks." Here are two standing monuments fixed by God: the going forth of the commandment, and the time when Messiah was anointed "the Prince." We have supposed that He was anointed the Prince at His baptism; but we now suppose it was not so. He was anointed and ordained as a Prophet and Priest: anointed, by the descent of the Holy Spirit; ordained, by the process of [illegible] the High Priest, "to make reconciliation"—the great antitype of Aaron, who was consecrated by the same process of washing. Lev. 8: 4–12.

When He, Jesus, was in the Synagogue at Nazareth, and "stood up to read," He found the place where it was written, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor." Here then we learn what He was anointed to do, from His own mouth, "to preach," though He was "born king of the Jews; i. e. He was heir to the throne of David. But there was a time, even after His birth, according to this prophecy, when He was not recognized as the Prince; for Gabriel said there should be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks, before He should be manifested as the Prince; and there was a time when He said to the multitude,—"there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." Did they not see Him on the Mount of transfiguration? And was He not manifested as "the Prince" at the same time, so as to fulfill this prophecy? I think so. The same voice from heaven declared,—"this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," as at His Baptism; and here He was manifested in what Peter calls "the excellent glory," so that the transfiguration has a connection with this vision, and appears strongly marked as a period of it. This is supposed to have occurred, not at the Passover, but in the early part of the year, before that of His crucifixion; and as the sixty-nine weeks had passed, at the manifestations of "the Prince," or 483 years, we come to the conclusion that the remaining 1817 years will conclude the vision this present year.

We find that there was a Paschal full moon on Friday, A. D. 41, at which time I think the Savior suffered; and we do not find that there was one on Friday, from A. D. 33, till A. D. 41, and this is proof enough, for we know that it was not A. D. 33, and every effort to fix it at that date has been proved to have been too early, by four years, as it was ascertained, by the Eras, and the reign and death of Philip in the 20th of Tiberius, that He could not be less than thirty-seven years old; hence, the antedate of His life, four years before A. D. 1.

It has been argued that Jesus ate the passover himself, on Thursday; and that this must be the true fourteenth day. But this objection loses its force when we consider that their evening and morning was the fourteenth day; i. e., their days invariably began at sunset, and ended at sunset; so that they began with an evening, and ended with an evening; and between these two evenings He both ate the passover and suffered. Thursday ended at sunset and Friday began at the same time; and Friday did not end till sunset on that day in which He was crucified. Christ fulfilled the law, as to the eating of the passover with his disciples, on the fourteenth day of the first month; and he also fulfilled the law, in suffering as the great Passover, on the same day. But we are so habituated to calling the evening that succeeds Thursday, Thursday evening, that we forget that Thursday ends at sunset, and Friday begins at that time: so that the moon must have been full at, or soon after sunset, on that eve in which He ate the passover. Hence, it could not be on any other day but Friday; and this is one of my principal reasons for believing that it was not A. D. 40, but 41. And I think the Savior's own words to Peter will be found to establish this fact, for He sent Peter and John to prepare the passover; "and in the evening He cometh with the twelve." "And when the hour was come, He sat down, and the twelve Apostles with Him." Before they left that room, Peter said,—"Lord, I am ready to go with thee both into prison and to death." And He said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me;" which proves that the fourteenth day had commenced. I have been thus particular, because I know that there are some who think it was Thursday.

Addition.

1. Add to your faith virtue. A theoretical faith, though perfect in all of its parts, is insufficient to save you. Connect virtue therewith.

2. Add "to virtue knowledge." "Grow in grace and in knowledge."

3. Add "to knowledge temperance," or "self-control."

4. Add "to temperance patience." "Ye have need of patience."

5. Add "to patience godliness." Genuine godliness.

6. Add "to godliness brotherly kindness." Practice it too.

7. Add "to brotherly kindness charity." Love unfeigned.

Now "if these things be in you and ABOUND," you need not complain of barrenness of soul! But he who "lacketh" these christian graces is in an awful dilemma.

The christian works in the rule of addition; but the backslider is practicing subtraction.

For the Crisis.

The Doctrinal Trinity,

INWROUGHT BY THE HOLY GHOST IN THE HEART.

[Thoughts suggested by H. W. Beecher's sermon, at the Communion Service in his church, Sunday, March 1, from the text, John 16: 7, taken out from its connection.]

"But now I go my way to Him that sent me; . . . because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart. Nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you. And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin and of righteousness, and of judgment," &c. John 16: 5–8.

In order to console His disciples in view of His departure, He disclosed to their minds the coming Comforter—gave them a comprehensive view of the character and the consequences of the Comforter's work. He will carry forward and apply to the heart the grand system of truth. "He will guide you into all truth"—into the whole gospel scheme. As I have just said that "I will come again and receive you to myself," and "judge (rule) the world in righteousness,"—so He, the Spirit of truth, will lay open to your mind this entire Trinity of doctrinal and experimental truth. He will convict and instruct—reprove;

1. "Of sin;" because the promise of Divine mercy and life by Jesus is not believed. John 3: 16–20; 3: 36; 9: 39–41; 1 John 5: 10–12.

2. "Of righteousness;" because Christ's acceptance on high would demonstrate the truth of His claims to be the only Savior—the New Way to Life. Man was cast out of Paradise, out from the presence of God and "the tree of life." Now "a new and living way" is opened—a new way to the tree of life, and the presence of God in Paradise restored. Heb. 10: 20; John 14: 6; Rev. 2: 7; 22: 2.

This whole system of "righteousness by faith," in Jesus, is assured to us by his acceptance at the right hand of the Father. Rom. 3: 21–26; Heb. 1st to the 10th; Ps. 110.

3. "Of judgment;" because the prince (archon, ruler, chief,) of this world is judged. The judgment is pronounced, but will be executed at "the time appointed," when Christ's session at the right hand of the Father ends, and He "takes to himself His great power" to reign, rule, judge, or act in his official character as King. Then, Satan shall be bound, the groaning world delivered, and all things spoken by the prophets, restored. Rev. 20: 1–4; Rom. 8: 19–23; Acts 3: 20, 21; Ps. 72 and 98; Acts 17: 31; 1 Cor. 15: 24–27; Heb. 2: 5–8; 1 Thess. 1: 9, 10; 2 Thess. 2: 1–8; Titus 2: 11–14; 2 Pet. 1: 17–20; 3: 1–14; Rev. 22: 20.

Three essential points of revealed truth, like the three angles essential to a triangle, are here made. The system of Revelation only serves to fill up this outline. But the crowning consummation of the system never comes short of the Judgment.

The Holy Spirit has always asserted this ultimate truth—the judgment and its results. The first promise, and the last prophecy, embrace this doom of Satan and his organized government in order to the world's emancipation. Gen. 3: 15; Rev. 20 to 22. This stands out most conspicuously in Jacob's blessing, (Gen. 49,) and in Moses' last and sublimest song, Deut. 32: 43. The inspired odes of David, Deborah, and Hannah, involve the Lord's triumphant destruction of his foes; but never this side the judgment. The foes prevail till then. 1 Sam. 2: 1–10; Ps. 7: 5–9; 83: 9, 10; Isa. 11 and 12; Luke 1: 67–74. Every prophecy and promise assumes about this shape and this complexion. Jer. 23: 5–8; Ezek. 21: 25–27; Dan. chap. 2, 7, 8 and 9; Zech. 12 to 14; Matt. chap. 13, 24 and 25; Luke 19: 11–15; Jude 14–15. Rev. 1: 7.

This, then, is "the sum," the mighty range of all inspired teaching. The conviction of this is the aim of the Spirit's indwelling, saving energy. To convince of this, the Holy Spirit was sent to abide in the church. The Apostles thus convicted, instructed, and pre-occupied by the Holy Ghost, became witnesses of these things, in all their Epistles. 2 Pet. 3: 1–17.

The Spirit's convincing work comprehends the whole system of Gospel instruction—the word and its ministry, as well as the inworking of his mighty power by that word and ministry. It relates to the sinner's lost estate—his only help, or hope of righteousness by faith, in Jesus; and the utter apostasy of the world, which is doomed to end (not in conversion by poor sinful mortals, but) in judgment, at the coming and kingdom of Christ. 2 Tim. 4: 1.

The character of the kingdom, the judgment, or the subduing reign of Christ, which will culminate in the restitution of all things, spoken in the deliverance of the whole creation, in the New Earth and New Heavens, is plainly taught. This wide earth, and these overhanging heavens, and woods, and fields, and floods, are inspired with joy and song in view of this judgment, when "the Devil, Death, and Hell" shall be hurled with the wicked into the lake of fire. Thence, "there will be NO MORE CURSE," no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, nor any more pain. But "all things NEW!" Then, every creature in Heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, shout the Earth's everlasting Jubilee. Rev. 5: 13; 20: 10–14; 22: 3. Such is the scheme of Truth. Such a conviction as this in the heart is the proper work of the Holy Ghost.

Remarks. The whole history of man proves his sin and personal helplessness as to self-restitution, or the restoration of the world. He did sin, even in Eden; and has sinned and only sinned of himself ever since, in every dispensation.

The entire action of the Almighty in Redemption, proves that there is no restoration to righteousness but through Jesus. The world's unceasing and organized antagonism against "God and his Christ," makes it a righteous thing in God "to execute the judgment written." 2 Thess. 1: 5–8.

"All taught of God," must be so taught; for God cannot deny Himself. Truth involves eternal harmony. John 6: 45; 2 Tim. 2: 12, 13. Nothing in truth can contravene the Holy Ghost!

The somewhat inappropriate phrase, "Holy Ghost men," so popular with some, loses all propriety when it denies or overlooks this essential work, for which He was sent. "He shall show you THINGS TO COME." The Judgment, Advent, and its concurrent scenes, are the things to come. "We are co-workers with God," said Paul. But this cannot apply to any who oppose this primal operation of the Holy Ghost.

Repentance—change of mind, is essential. Naturally, all fix their hope in themselves, and in the world. But such is man as a "lost" sinner, dead or dying; and such is the world in array against God, and doomed to judgment, that we must repent, or all "likewise perish." The mind that cannot be changed (or led to repent) by the whole system of grace and truth, or the inworking of the Holy Ghost, is irreclaimably doomed. "He that believeth not (is not so convicted of the Holy Ghost, by any of his heavenly methods,) shall be damned."

The Gospel plan does not urge us to "do and live," but to own our sin, and to accept, by faith and hope, the promise of salvation at the judgment. Heb. 9: 27–28; Tit. 2: 11–14; 2 Tim. 4: 1–8; 1 Thess. 4: 13–18; 2 Thess. 1 and 2; Rev. 11: 18; Dan. 7: 18; 12: 1–3; Matt. 25: 30–40.

The ordinances of the gospel refer to the Lord's second coming, and the Resurrection. 1 Cor. 11: 26; Rom. 6: 3–5; I Cor. 15: 29. All observance of the ordinances—all teaching and preaching that has not this reference, this style and shape, "is not of God." No other system has been originated, or authorized by "the Holy Ghost." Yet the popular preachers teach that it is "expedient for" the Lord who went "away" to "STAY AWAY"!!! "When the Son of Man cometh shall He find faith on the earth!"

J. B. Cook.

Affection is the stepping-stone to God. The heart is our only measure of infinitude. Thought is worried and weakened in its flight through the immensity of space; but love soars around the throne of the Highest, with added blessing and strength.—D. H. Mitchell.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

LET US GO HENCE.

"Arise! let us go hence,"
Forsaking sin;
Through grace, o'er self and sense,
The victory win;
Leaving the world behind,
Its pomp and pride,
Counting for Christ all things
But dross beside.

"Arise! let us go hence,"
With strong desire,
Let zeal with knowledge burn,
And love inspire.
With faith, and hope, and love,
We watch and pray,—
Heirs of the promises—
Go on our way.

"Arise! let us go hence,"
Escape earth's doom;
Without the eye of faith,
How dark its gloom!
Our Captain 's gone before;
With him in sight,
Let us like valiant ones,
Fall in the fight.

"Arise! let us go hence,"
Crowns are in view;
The Prince of peace shall reign,
O'er all made new.
The night is now far spent,
The land we hail,
And we our anchor cast
Within the vail.

Obituary.

Died, in Attleboro, of apoplexy, March 7th, Bro. Samuel Guild, aged 71 years.

Bro. G. was a father in Israel. His whole life was one of uniformity. For several years he was a consistent member of the Baptist church in this place; in which relation he was esteemed as a christian in all his works. In the early part of the Second Advent movement, he became a believer in the personal coming and reign of Christ. To this doctrine he was firmly attached to the time of his death. During his whole christian life he grew in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. His circumstances being easy, he could devote his time to the study of the Bible, and, improving his opportunities, he made himself extensively acquainted with the word of God. His great theme was religion. This he talked and lived in all his ways. Though religion with him was first in importance, he did not lose sight of other subjects. He made himself acquainted with all passing events, and drew from these, lessons of instruction which are favorable to christian character. He was a friend to all, and consequently he had many friends. He enjoyed life in no small degree.

Our Bro. was beloved in his family. His companion was truly a helpmeet. His children, five in number, have all been converted to God. They are all located in the immediate neighborhood. Four of them have families, who with their companions are devoted to the cause of religion. They are all believers in the personal advent of our Savior. They sensibly feel their loss which is great. They do not, however, mourn as those who have no hope, believing "that Christ died and rose again;" they also believe that "they also who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." He has left the best evidence of an acceptance with God. His sickness was of short duration. He lived about five days after he was taken in an unconscious state. He remarked but a day or two before he was taken, that he was the happiest man that lived. May the mantle of his spirit rest upon the surviving companion, and on all the family.

His funeral was attended by a large concourse of people. An appropriate sermon was preached by Bro. Osler, from the words, "And there shall be no more death."

Choice Selections.

The Comet.—The correspondent of the London Christian Times writes from Paris, Feb. 25, 1857:

The comet! yes, the comet whose burning tail is to lash our world to pieces, and close with one great catastrophe our planet's history, has been the theme of the hall, the workshop, and the street for the week. The ominous thirteenth of June is the day irrevocably fixed for this fiery adventurer's exploit; and the watchword from one end of Paris to the other is, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die!" Seriously, it has been so alarming in some quarters, that some of our leading journals have taken up the theme, gravely explaining to our knowing citizens—whose characteristic answer to all who think to add to their stock of information, is connu! with a shrug—that a comet's first appearance is not exactly within the predicting powers of astronomy, and that no such visitor is expected this year. Moreover our great Arago's statement is given, that there are 81,000,000 of chances against 1 that any comet should come in contact with the earth; and the opinion of M. Babinet, that in the event of any such collision, the rarified substance of the comet would produce upon our denser globe no greater perturbation than is effected by a fly when it comes in contact with a railway train! Others, resolved to dive deeper into this vitally important subject, and after vast research, have dragged up into daylight the unlucky wight who has caused all the mischief, and who is no other than Matthieu Laensberg, Canon of Liege, the venerable composer of the first Liege Almanac, and who volunteered the prediction, doubtless with the satisfaction of gaining applause for wonderful penetration into a futurity which neither himself nor his generation were to see. These popular panics are curious; the eagerness with which they are propagated, the mixture of superstition and trifling they exhibit, are to our mind painful in the extreme, inasmuch as they prepare the way for the mockery with which the awful truth of the fiery regeneration of the earth is increasingly received. Scoffers walking after their own lusts, say, "Where is the promise of His coming"—Adv. Herald.

The Jewish Passover.—The celebration of the Jewish Passover commenced Wednesday April 8, that day being the 15th of the month Nisan, according to the Hebrew calendar. The observance continues for seven days, on the first and last of which secular business is entirely suspended, and services are held in the Jewish synagogues every evening. During the Passover the adherents of the Jewish faith eat "Mazot," or unleavened bread, which is prepared in the cities of New York and Baltimore, and sent to all parts of the country where it is wanted. This bread is made of the finest wheat flour and purest water, kneaded and rolled by wooden implements, and cut by machinery, without being touched by hand in the process of making.

Be gentle; much good is done by kindness. When you are troubled sometimes, do you not find yourselves made happier if some one asks you pleasantly, "What is the matter?" and tries to comfort you? Then when you see others sorrowing, try to help them. If they are angry with you, answer them kindly. If they have tried to injure you, do some good act in return, and every one will love you, and more than all, conscience will whisper, "That is right."—Child's Paper.

THE WANDERER'S FRIEND.

How oft by life's dangers, its conflicts and snares,
How oft by affliction, hard fortune and cares;
When my heart has nigh failed and my spirits have drooped,
And anxiety has baffled wherever I looked;
When my heart spoke the sentence, I'll yield to despair,
O then, my ever true friend, thou wert there.

When by love of adventure and ill-founded hopes,
I wandered from home mid strange fears and doubts;
Far distant from friends, still envied by foes,
By strangers half slighted, 'till inward arose
Sweet peace—a bright hope that the world cannot share,
And a whisper that told me my true friend was there.

E'en now from the sphere of my birth am I hurled
By carnal misfortunes, to fight with the world,
Its pride, its ambition, its scorn and contempt,
With its many dark clouds, still I'll be content,—
Though at times to be sad, yet nought do I fear,
From one consolation, my true friend is near.

The lusts of the flesh, the passions of nature,
In morality's garb to attack me adventure,
To which, I regret, too oft I have yielded,
By trusting in combat my own strength unshielded;
Though strong be their force and vital their sting,
No weapons will match those my true friend can bring.

The past like a dream brings remorse, to reflect
How led by false notions the wise to neglect;
Yet prospects I view through the gloom that exists,
That tells me as soldiers must struggle for peace,
So must I fight through this world as I wander,
And my true friend shall guide me and lead me to honor.

LINES.

ON THE DEATH OF SISTER - DWIGHT.

I've laid thee down to rest,
Peacefully sleeping,
But with a troubled breast,
And heart wild beating;
My dearest gem I gave,
To the cold cheerless grave,
My arm too short to save,—
Sadly I'm weeping.

Oft in some stranger land,
Sadly I gather,
With a warm household band,
All, all together.
Then, then methinks I hear
A wailing on the air,
From orphan children dear,
Weeping for Mother.

Her gentle bosom heaves
No longer for thee;
Where once thy childish griefs
Were pillowed fondly.
My darling, stricken ones,
There's One that hears thy moans,
And pities all thy groans;
He will redeem thee.

Soon will the morning burst
On my glad vision;
Then will the slum'ring dust,
Break from its prison;
O haste, ye wheels of time,
My arms would now entwine,
That radiant form divine,
Safe in the Kingdom.

Hush'd then my every sigh,
Mourn her no longer;
My blessed Life is nigh—
Faith groweth stronger.
No more my wounded heart,
Bleeds with affliction's dart,
He's kindly healed the smart,—
I'll doubt no longer.

The Two-horned Beast.

No. III.

The next point that claims our attention is, the image beast described in verses 14–15 as follows: the two-horned beast is represented as "saying to them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live. And he had power to give life to the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed." This language clearly proves the existence at one and the same time, (as stated in a former article,) of three distinct and separate powers, as symbolized by these three beasts. The evidence has heretofore been given, showing that the allied powers of Europe was the universal, supreme form of government, after the overthrow of Papal Rome; and, also, that Papal Rome was wounded by a sword and carried into captivity by Napoleon; and that wound was healed by the Allies in 1814, when they restored to the Popes of Rome the civil and ecclesiastical power since exercised by them.

Hence, the argument is clear, and none can deny the fact, that since that time, these two powers have existed. Now we wish to find the existence of another power distinct from both, resembling the Papacy in her present attitude, and in like manner sustained by the civil code. As we have already seen that the body of the Roman beast is made up of the various kingdoms of Europe and the world, each maintaining a separate existence, having its own internal laws and regulations, like that of the toes of the great metallic image, which mingle with, but do not cleave one to another, (or rather, are not consolidated,) we need not look for another universal creed, like that of the Papacy; but rather seek for it in the ecclesiastical organization of those various kingdoms adapted to their peculiar religious tenets. Would our limits admit of an extended comparison of those various organizations, with the papacy, the resemblance would be nearly as perfect as a good daguerrean likeness. A few of the leading points of resemblance can only be examined.

1. The Papacy is an ecclesiastical organization based upon or sustained by the civil code, with the pope as it legal head. The same may be said of nearly all the hierarchies of Europe.

2. The Papacy has assumed to legislate for the church of God in matters of faith, and does resort to the secular authorities for the improvement of those laws. So, also, have many of the anti-papal, ecclesical organizations of the States of Europe assumed to do.

3. The Papacy is opposed to progress in knowledge of the truth. So, also, in like manner, are all the other organizations, except as seen and apprehended through their respective creeds.

4. There is a strong resemblance to the Papacy in most of their creeds, their formulas of worship, &c. All alike derive their power or life from legal enactments, Even in these United States a church is not considered established, till it has assumed a sectarian name, adopted a creed, and obtained a charter from the State making it a body corporate. In thus doing they derive their being or life from the beastly governments, as directly as did the Papacy in 1814, or at any other period of her existence.

The homage these organizations receive amounts to worship, as much so as the adoration received by the Papacy from her devoted subjects. As to having power to kill those who will not worship the image beast, it may be fulfilled in their having power to deprive their various members of all the rights, or life, they may have in common with others in such chartered institutions. In their thus mingling with and resorting to the secular powers of earth for life and support, they imitate the mother church, in turning away from Christ and the words of his grace; and are, like her, guilty of fornication with the world, and identify themselves as apostate daughters of a corrupt mother. Ver. 16–17, (Catholic trans.) —"And he (the two-horned beast) shall make all, little and great, rich and poor, and freemen and bondmen, to have a character in their right hand or in their foreheads. And that no man may buy or sell, but he that had the character, or name of the beast or the number of his name." With this translation, it is no difficult matter to decide who they are that have a character in harmony with the laws and acts of the kingdoms of this world, in their present completed form.

The number of his name, which is 666, as previously shown, aptly represents the names of the kingdoms of the Roman world, which constitute the body of the beast, and also the names of blasphemy of which the scarlet beast is full. All who traverse the great deep, carry at the top of their masts, their national flag, symbolizing the name of their nation, which is a passport with the nations of earth. Those who will buy and sell, within their own dominion, even, must first procure a permit from the powers that be, with the broad seal of state attached, and then they can traffic in all of great Babylon's merchandize, up to "slaves and souls of men," without which character or mark they cannot so do.

The all important inquiry, beloved brothers and sisters in the Lord, relative to ourselves, is, as to our respective relation to these beastly powers. Have we gotton that victory over them, so that we can believe, and fearlessly and openly confess to the world any and all of the blessed truths and doctrines of the Bible, and obey all its requirements? Or, in other words, are our connections with either the civil or ecclesiastical powers that be, such as to hinder or prevent us from believing, confessing, or obeying any Bible requirement? If so, we are in danger of incurring the dreadful penalty denounced against the worshipers of the beast and his image. No time should be lost in obtaining that victory over them that will insure the promised blessing of standing upon the sea of glass, and singing the song of Moses, and the Lamb.

In the light of this subject, we see that all of the forms and changes of the kingdoms of this world, noted in these prophecies, are in their proper position, to be broken and destroyed by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands; and nothing further must necessarily be looked for, prior to the opening scenes of the great day of God's wrath. What Christians Should Do.

1. "Rejoice evermore."
2. "Pray without ceasing."
3. "In every thing give thanks."
4. "Quench not the spirit."
5. "Comfort the feeble-minded."
6. "Support the weak."
7. "Be patient towards all men."

Correspondence.

From Sr. S. P. Green.

DEARLY BELOVED IN CHRIST:—I have felt a desire this some time to write a few lines to all the dear brethren and sisters. There are some that I have seen, with whom I cannot converse, and should these few lines meet your eye I would say to you, hold on, be good, watchful and prayerful. I am striving, by the help of God, to endure unto the end. Although we are "In the midst of temptation, and sorrow, and strife,

And evils unnumbered of this bitter life," let us

"Look away, far away, from all the scenes of strife:
From the world's delusive cheering
Gladly let my heart remove;
Thee, O Lord, alone desiring,
Then to rest in perfect love."

O, may the Lord give to all his dear children his Holy Spirit; may we not be "weary in well doing," for there is a rich reward laid up in store for all that are obedient and diligent, and in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

I want to say something in regard to our paper. I can hardly keep my paper at home long enough to read it through, as it is the only one that comes to Plymouth, Vt. I do feel to thank the Giver of every good and perfect gift, that it is freely sent to me, for I should have to go without it were it not thus sent.

There is another favor God has seen fit to confer upon us in this place; it is what I have long prayed for. He has sent a servant into this part of his vineyard, to administer to our peculiar wants, to preach the life-giving word, and nourish up a little church ready for his coming and kingdom. Bro. Willard H. Dow preaches half the time for us. He preaches no other gospel than that taught by Christ and his Apostles. O, may his labors be blessed, wanderers return, sinners be called to repentance, and much good be done in the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Let us be ready, "for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." We shall soon see him. I do mean by the grace of God to be prepared, with my little family. O, may the good Lord help us to make an entire consecration of all here in this world, that we may be able to stand when He appeareth. Your Sr., striving for deliverance, SOPHRONIA P. GREEN.

Plymouth, Vt., Feb. 1857.

From Bro. W. Nichols.

BRO. GRANT:—The little church here has been blest with a revival, by the word and power of the Gospel of the Kingdom. Bro. L. L. Howard commenced a meeting on the evening of the 19th inst., and continued to the 29th. The weather was against us, but God was for us to revive his work and to forgive sins.

There was quite a little church in this place in 1854, which maintained their meetings through the winter after the time passed; but the cares of the world, &c., at last broke up our meetings as we had no preaching brethren among us. But we now praise God, and rejoice in the fullness of our Savior, that God has put it in the hearts of his servants to hold a protracted meeting in this place. The church has risen again, several have been converted, and others have believed and are praying for deliverance. The meeting was appointed by Bro. Damon, but he was only there a few days. Bro. Howard was here during the whole meeting and preached the word of truth, by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation.

We now have a little church of some twenty-five members, and quite a number more are favorable to the Advent. Pray for us, that we may hold out and have our lamps trimmed and burning at the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Yours in the love of the Truth,
W. NICHOLS.

No. Searsport, Me., March 30, '57.

From Sr. M. E. Hamilton.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been thinking of the emblem of Baptism, and contemplating the great event which it so fully illustrates. Who does not enjoy a pleasing retrospection when he recalls to mind the time when he was, by the love of God, constrained to come out publicly before the world, and follow the footsteps of the Redeemer down into the watery grave, there to be buried in the likeness of his death, and raised to walk in newness of life. How the heart was made to rejoice. Oh, how transcendantly beautiful did our Savior then appear. The blessing which attended by far outweighed the cross we had taken, though it was never so great. And if there be such real enjoyment in obeying the commands of our Savior while in this mortal state, what must be the reality—to be raised immortal, all freed from sin and sorrow?

Although we naturally shrink from the ordeal of death, yet our Savior's promise is sure, and hope waves her white plume not very distant, when death shall be disarmed of its sting, and the grave no longer prove victorious. Although consumption may now be fastened upon us, and we be swiftly passing away—though friends may seem never so dear, yet, if we keep our eye upon the Star, we shall come safely into port. God's grace is sufficient if we trust alone in the Rock of Ages. Pray for me, dear distant friends, that as life recedes, my evidence may be brightened,—that my "light affliction which is but for a moment," may work out for me "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." That we may all meet in the land of the blessed, is the prayer of your

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. A. R. BASSETT writes from Williamsburgh, Mass.:—"While reviewing the Crisis of two or three weeks date, my attention was called to a subject written by a sister in which I was deeply interested.

The subject brought to view was this,—'Is death the end of us?' and my heart answers, no. Must all go into the narrow house? No, for God has promised that we shall not all sleep, but that some shall remain, and be caught up with the Lord, and so ever be with him. We read,—'The dead praise not the Lord; neither any that go down into silence.' If, then, death is the end of us, I ask who it is that shall praise the Lord? I bless God that there was ever a promise of a glorious resurrection. When Jesus shall come, He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord will wipe away tears from off all faces. Then there will be no more burying the dear loved ones out of our sight; then no more sadness because a fearful disease has taken hold of a loved companion, or a dear child. The Lord says,—'I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death. O, death, I will be thy plague. O grave, I will be thy destruction.' Isaiah says,—'Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise.' 'Awake, and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs; and the earth shall cast out the dead.' Glorious promises! Paul says,—'and now I stand and am judged, for the hope of the promises made of God unto our fathers; unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come; for which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews.'

Brethren and sisters, are we ready to give an answer for the reason of this hope in us? are we ready to stand before the great King and give our reasons to him for this hope? O, that God would grant us a more fervent spirit, a more lively faith, and a deeper love for this hope. 'Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?'

Philosophers may argue, and strain their utmost to get away from this, but I, for one, thank the Lord that I have no desire to turn from the truth; for soon shall we see the end of all sin, and oppression. A few days of care and toil, anxiety, fears, and doubtings, and we shall see Israel's God in all his beauty and glory.

Lift up your heads and rejoice, for your redemption draws near!"

SR. E. GARLAND writes from Chester Factories:—"As I read the Crisis week after week, I find much to comfort, edify, correct, instruct, and help me to pursue the narrow way that leads to eternal life. I rejoice that immortality is soon to be given to the righteous through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I feel more than ever like striving to gain eternal life.

There are a few of us in Chester Factories, that love the Lord and claim the promise. We have no shepherd to feed the sheep, but plenty of wolves to scatter abroad. We feel to bless God that ever Bro. Goodrich came to this place to sound the gospel.

A few of us hold a prayer meeting every Sunday in the school-house. When I look around me and behold the world, my heart cries out, 'Come, Lord Jesus.'"

BRO. S. W. H. writes from So. Hope:—"Three years ago I was baptized and professed to be a christian. I was quite young, and my parents were very much opposed. But I felt that it was my duty. I believed the Lord would soon come. Shortly after the time passed, I was again urged into the ball-room, and step by step I became one of the world. But alas! how many bitter tears I have shed because I have backslidden.

I believe the Advent doctrine, but I am afraid that I have been so wicked that God will never again receive me. But I am determined to return if He will receive me into His fold. I love the advent people. I have the privilege of reading a kind brother's Crisis, and enjoy many privileges; but my friends are so much opposed to my professing the advent doctrine, that I have been undecided until now: and I am determined through the grace of God and my Savior to become a christian. I am still in the dark, praying for light; and I believe it will come. I am trying hard to break away from the world, and to strengthen myself with the Lord's help to bear the scoffs of those 'who ne'er religion prized.' I desire an interest in your prayers that I may be found waiting and watching when the Lord comes."

——:o:——

BRO. CALVIN FLEMING writes from De Kalb, N. Y.:—"Brn. and Srs. in Christ;—I have not yet cast away my hope in the speedy coming of Christ, but while reading and observing the signs of the times, my pathway to glory grows brighter and brighter. Bro. Grant, I am almost alone here; once in a while, I see one that is willing to receive the truth. I believe the Lord is at work in the hearts of the people. O Lord, help me, that I may let my light shine. I know if I walk in the light, I shall not fall. It seems to me while I read the political news, the world is angry, just ready to break out in war. There is but one place to hide, and that is in Christ. Let us keep ourselves unspotted from the world, and all will be well."

——:o:——

SR. E. BUCKLAND writes from Somers, Conn.:—"Dear sisters, the Word says, 'know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid.' Now, did you ever think after adorning your persons and standing before your mirror, with your blue and purple and scarlet colored ribbons, and flowers, and plumes streaming from your bonnets, that they are the colors that adorn the harlot woman, that sits upon the scarlet colored beast? Rev. 17: 4. O what a contrast to the modest apparel of which the apostles speak, and the simple attire with which John saw the church adorned! I know you will say, the outward appearance is nothing, God looks at the heart. So he does, and I think if your hearts were wholly his, you would desire none of these useless ornaments.

Examine closely that knot of ribbon you are about to affix to that richly embroidered collar, with that brilliant pin, and see if you don't find pride in it: does not the blessed Spirit reprove, with these words, 'be ye not conformed to this world?' and do you not do it to take away the reproach, and to destroy the peculiarity of our sect which, as Paul says, is 'everywhere spoken against?'

Well, you may have your ornaments and your costly array, but give me the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, and the reproach, with the spirit of glory and of God resting upon me. It is good enough for me."

Truth, though crushed to earth will, rise again.

For the Crisis.

Buffalo, March 3d, '57.

BRO. GRANT:—The following I clipped from the Hornellsville Tribune. If you think proper, you may give it a place in The Crisis. It is a "true picture" and I would that men might see the fulfillment of God's word in the present state of society as given by themselves, and make preparation for that day, when not only "all that do wickedly" but "all the proud" shall be burned up, as God says by the mouth of the Prophet Malachi.

WM. PECK.

A Picture of the Times.

The records of the past have never presented a more fearful and corrupt state of society than now exists throughout most parts of the United States. The newspapers from every quarter are becoming more and more loaded with the records of crime, and it would seem as though Satan had actually been let loose for a season, and was improving his liberty.

The following from the New York Chronicle, touching the subject of crime in that city, is but too true; and the remedies suggested for bringing about a better state of things are worthy the consideration of every friend of moral improvement:

"Never was crime more rampant than now. Garroting, burglary, stabbing, fraud, lewdness, forgery, embezzlement, and every imaginable form of wrong, cruelty, and murder meet us at every turn. The morning and evening journals are encumbered with the disgusting details. Police has become impotent, Indeed, crime enters the sanctuary of law and presides on the bench of justice. Rulers have lost the public respect and confidence. Wrongdoers laugh them in the face and chuckle over the imbecility and wickedness which are set to preserve the public order. There is no such respect for rulers as was felt in the earlier years of our city. Our doors are entered and our halls stripped of hats, cloaks, and furs; our necks grappled or our voice stifled as we pass along the streets while our pockets are relieved of their contents; and it has come to pass that a man who walks out at night feels himself surrounded by robber hands just ready to pounce upon him with fatal results to limb and life."

LEGAL TENDER.—A writer in one of the N. Y. papers furnishes the following statement derived from the law regulating the payment of debts with coin:

1. All gold coins at their respective values for debts of any amount.

2. The half-dollar, quarter-dollar, dime and half-dime at their respective values, for debts of amount under five dollars.

3. Three cent pieces for debts of amount under thirty cents.

4. By the law just passed we may add, one cent pieces for debts of amount under ten cents.

For the Children.

The Will.

A little Irish boy, one day going to school with his Bible under his arm, was met by a minister, who asked him what book he had there.

"It is a will, sir," said the boy.

"What will?" asked the minister.

"The last will and testament that Jesus Christ left to me, and to all who wish to claim a title to the property therein left," said the boy.

"What did Jesus Christ leave you in that will?" asked the minister.

"A kingdom, sir."

"Where does that kingdom lie?"

"It is the kingdom of heaven, sir."

"And do you expect to reign as a king there?"

"Yes, sir; as a joint-heir with Christ."

"And will not every person get there as well as you?"

"No, sir; none can get there but those that claim their title to that kingdom upon the ground of the will."

The minister who spoke to the boy was one who daily read the Bible himself, and wished children to go to school where it was read; he was so much pleased with the boy's answer, that he said, "Indeed, you are a good little boy; take care of that book in which God gives you such precious promises; believe what he has said, and you will be happy hereafter." Let us follow out the little boy's thought, and say,

"When from the dust of earth I rise,
To claim my mansion in the skies,
E'en then shall this be all my plea—
Jesus hath lived, hath died for me."

A Short Sermon.

Now, children, if my watch has lost its main-spring, where shall I go to get it mended? To the tailor's? No. To the blacksmith's? No. To the watchmaker's? Yes. Why? Because he makes watches and knows how to mend them. Now, if your hearts are bad, where will you go to have them healed? To your parents? No. To the priest? No. To Jesus Christ? Yes. Why? Because he made the heart and knows how to heal it.

THE SONG OF SIMEON.

LUKE II: 25–32.

Now, Lord, thy servant's eyes
Have seen the longed for sight,
Have gazed upon the Savior's face
With rapture and delight.

Mine eyes have looked on Him
Who brings salvation near;
My burdened heart is freed from sin,
By Him who sin shall bear.

Before a fallen race,
Thou hast this light prepared,
Filled with the brightness of thy grace,
By sinful mortals shared.

He shall the world illume;
Gentiles shall share his ray;
Jews shall in him their glory find,
Which ne'er shall fade away.

Now, Lord, I haste from earth,
According to thy word;
Let me in holy peace depart,
As thou hast promised, Lord.

"Of more value than many sparrows."

"Mr. Nosworthy, a minister of Christ, who died in 1677, had, from the persecuting spirit of the times, been imprisoned at Winchester, where he met with much cruel usage. After his release he was several times reduced to great straits. Once, when he and his family had breakfasted, and had nothing left for another meal, his wife lamenting her condition, exclaimed, 'what shall I do with my poor children?' He persuaded her to walk abroad with him, and seeing a little bird, he said, 'Take notice how that little bird sits and chirps, though we cannot tell whether it has been at breakfast; and if it has, it knows not whither to go for a dinner. Therefore be of good cheer, and do not distrust the providence of God; for are we not better than many sparrows?'

Before dinner time they had plenty of provision brought them. Thus was the promise fulfilled,—'They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing.'"

The above is recorded in Wm. Patten's note on Matt. x: xxxi.

Thus has God cared for his people in all the ages past; thus he has numbered the very hairs of their heads; thus has he fed them, and clothed them, and watched over them continually. "I have been young," said David, "and now I am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread!" Never have the promises failed; never have the people of God found him a barren wilderness unto them.

Christian, cannot you trust in this Lord as your everlasting strength? Can you not bring your woes and wants and burdens and lay them on his bosom? O will you not lay all upon his promises? Cast thy burden upon the Lord; hope ever in his providential care. And if you will do this you will find day by day, a sweet experience of God's providential care which will nourish your fainting heart as the nightly dew nourishes the fragrant flowers. You will have a deeper, a sweeter and a more intimate communion with Christ, who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and who in the days of his earthly humiliation "hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." You will find him a present help in every time of trouble—a refuge from the storm—a covert from the tempest—as rivers of water in a dry place, and the shadow of a great rock in a weary land!

O, how sweet to repose in Christ! to feel the guidance, to enjoy the protection of an almighty hand! Christian, do you feel this blessedness? wordling, would you know the greatness of this blessing? Come, then, to Christ! Give up thy heart to him. Consecrate yourself entirely to his holy service. Give all for Christ. Live for him alone—then you can trust in Christ. Then you can rejoice in afflictions, and at last you shall know eternal joys at his right hand.

Our Hope.

Dearer to the weary, way-worn pilgrim's heart, than the gold of Ophir, the riches of Peru, the honor of the world, the glories of this fading, changing state, and all the glittering baubles that can be made to glisten in the future prospects of life in this sad world, IS THE CHRISTIAN'S GLORIOUS HOPE.

I speak of the hope of the gospel of the Son of God, and not the hope which fanatical, wild and extravagant theorists have labored and are laboring to substitute for that of the gospel,—I mean the hope presented in the gospel Advent doctrines—the hope of the personal coming of Christ—the literal, identical resurrection of the really dead—the gift of immortality and eternal life—the new earth beautified, dressed in its virgin robes of green, and groves, and flowers—the possession of an individual portion of that earth with an eternal title—an eternal association with the good of all ages, when all are righteous, and when in every face we gaze upon, we behold the undisguised tokens of true, abiding friendship; the still dearer, sweeter hope of the meeting of friends who are tried and true in this vale of tears, and the dearest, sweetest, brightest hope of all, that of seeing Jesus and of being with him forever,—and all this when Jesus comes, which, from the darkest look we can take of the evidences, we know must be very soon.

"No more to sever;"

For such a hope, we must (and we can well afford to do it,) sacrifice all of earth's baubles, tread the world beneath our feet, and live as strangers and pilgrims here. With this hope in possession, earth's glories fade before our eyes, its riches are rust-eaten and worthless, its popular pleasures lose all their power to charm, and its sinful pleasures, which appeal to the passions, are alienated, vitiated appetites disgust the heart with their native ugliness and deformity, so that the curtain falls on earthly hopes, the scene changes, and we are ravished with the glorious prospect of a home in Paradise restored.

"We gaze on our treasure
And long to be there."

In this blessed hope, there is something all glorious, beside the hope of living till Jesus comes. It would indeed be blessed to be alive and remain till the rumbling wheels of the chariot of our coming, triumphant King, and the tramp of his attendant cavalcade should be heard by the waiting host—until the shrill, last trump of God shall reach the most distant, the earliest sleepers in the dust of the earth and in the briny deep, and raises all to life,—until from Jehovah the electric spark of life eternal vibrates through the entire being of every saint, making them all immortal, and until death, the last enemy, shall be destroyed;

"For death itself must die."

But, merely to live till then is but a trifle compared to that part of our hope embraced in the words of the Savior,—"He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." The certainty of the resurrection of the identical body, and of the righteous unto life eternal, is the glory of this glorious hope.

In my recent sickness, I have looked death in the face; I have almost felt his cold embrace; it seemed as if he must devour, must conquer, and bear me to the grave; but with our good hope within, I could defy his power, for I knew it must be short; beyond the roar of Jordan's dark rolling billows, I could see the morning break—the promises of Jesus were sweet and sure, firm as the Rock of Ages.

To look into the cold, lonesome grave as one's bed—to think of leaving the active scenes of life to lodge in the tomb alone—to think of leaving family, relatives and friends, and of the sundering of the tie that binds to the dear of earth, to leave them amid their busy scenes, while we may lie mouldering back to our mother earth,—if we carry with us in our meditations the idea of consciousness, is most distressing, most heart-rending; and, to me, an existence as a spirit beyond the bounds of time and space, could have no charm to lift the gloom of the grave. But when I remembered that death was an undisturbed sleep, that the grave would be an unconscious resting-place, that there the wicked would cease from troubling, and the weary be at rest, and that from that sleep all the saints would be awakened by the trump of God to everlasting life, it seemed tolerable to die, and all the glories of the doctrine of the resurrection hung in gorgeous splendor above the tomb, and exalted above price or comparison THE HOPE OF THE GOSPEL.

Reader, hast thou this hope? You may be dreaming! You may only be hoping you shall have it; or, having a zeal that is not according to knowledge, you may be vainly presumptuous. If you have it, keep it at any cost, even to that of life itself. If thou hast it not, obtain it; now, it is within thy reach; a little while, and it will be too late. Yes, thou mayest obtain it now on easy terms; it is within the reach of all, without money, without price. For what does the Lord require of thee, O man and woman, but to DEAL JUSTLY, to LOVE MERCY, and to walk humbly with thy God? More anon.

What Mighty Opponents We Have.

BRO. GRANT:—While looking at the spirit and arguments of our opponents, I am astonished as well as amused; and feel stronger than ever that our position is correct. I will now give a few germs of the theology of some of our opponents that have come under my observation.

A short time since one of our preachers took up the subject of church fairs and gambling, and some other inconsistent practices tolerated by the professed churches in these last days. This preacher did his duty, and made these practices look very inconsistent with Bible religion, and scattered the good seen generally over the place. While a few of us were watching the seed and keeping off the devouring fowls, we met with some supposed powerful arguments, like these:—"Eld. Grant needn't think of converting the people here to his doctrine; the Adventists have been guilty of as much mischief as any of us."

In what respect?

"Haven't they set the time for the Lord to come"

What mischief was there in that?

"A good many were frightened, and prayed and cried hours, and were nearly crazy, exhorting their friends to get ready, &c."

I do not see any mischief in that; it only had the tendency to make men look about them, and get ready and try to get others ready. This is certainly more consistent than selling tickets for a fair, and indulging in many other things that are forbidden in the Bible, and your own discipline.

"You can't get Millerism down me."

This was the sweeping argument used in most cases to keep truth from having effect, and to get out of the controversy, which they had commenced. When sound, scriptural arguments are lacking with our opponents, they will generally try to neutralize the effect of truth with the simple twit, "Oh! that is Millerism."

Another germ of theology by a minister. "Well, Mr. M., I have wanted a talk with you for some time. I understand that you believe the dead saints are not yet in heaven."

According to the Scripture the day for reward and punishment has not yet come. I then quoted the Scriptures to prove it. He then said that Jude said, the Sodomites were then suffering the vengeance of eternal fire, and he believed it. He then read Jude, and found it taught a very different doctrine altogether. I then asked him if he believed the Sodomites were then alive in fire and brimstone, and he said he did.

In Sodom?

"Yes, probably."

Then the cities and region round about must be now burning, the same as the sinner, if your position is true; but history, travelers, and geographers say, that there is no fire, nor brimstone burning on their cities, but a filthy pool of stagnant waters called the dead sea, is only seen. The fire did its work and went out, and Jude tells us that this was an example to us who live since that time, teaching us not to follow the ways of Cain, and be so greedy after money as to neglect the dispensational truth, and curse Israel as Balaam did. See ver. 11, 12, and 13. See the spots in their mock feasts, clouds without rain, and trees without fruit. The 16th verse portrays the very class I am contending against.

This application ended the controversy, the preacher telling me he thought he could convince me of my error, and wished me to come and hear him preach on that subject. I told him if he had no more foundation for his position than he had presented, I didn't want to hear him attempt to preach. This brought out the great and final argument—"Millerism has done a great deal of harm."

Another attack. A few weeks since, a preacher asked me if our people, the Adventists, believed that the wicked were not punished? I told him no. He said he understood Mr. Grant preached it. I told him he did not. He told me he wanted to ask a few questions. I told him I was willing if he would recollect that it took a much wiser man to answer questions, than it did to ask them. This he said was true; but he first wanted to know if we believed that a sinner would be punished. I told him we did, for the Bible taught it.

"When will it commence?"

At the judgment, as the Scriptures tell us.

"How long will they be burning?"

Until they are burned up; for the fire is unquenchable, and is the very element that will devour if not quenched.

"What will become of them after they are burned up?"

There are more than twenty passages which tell us that they go to dust, or ashes. Malachi is very plain; see Mal. 4: 1–4. I commenced the application. At this time he wanted to go to his office, saying, "Adventists are very stubborn." He then wanted to know if he understood me to say that the wicked burned out like a candle. I quoted the scriptures—"The spirit (life) of man is the candle of the Lord;" "the candle of the wicked shall be put out." This was more Millerism than he could digest, and refused to answer my questions, saying, he had no time. He has since preached a funeral discourse, telling the mourners that the spirit of their friend was mingling in the congregation, and knew what was going on, and so on. Now if this is not Catholicism, it is spiritualism. I think it is both and tinctured with heathenism, and of course no Millerism about it.

Such miserable stuff as this and anything, and everything but the word and work of God will pass current in these days and bring a good price. The fact is, they see their weak position, and are mad with others because they are not able to defend themselves from the two competitors that are now prophetically in the battle; one contending for God's word and truth, saying, "the soul that sinnethit shall die," and the other saying, "ye shall not surely die." The rappers claim them, and have a right to. The Adventists leave them, for they are obliged to or walk in heathenish darkness.

As fast as men investigate, their eyes are opened to see these truths. But it takes energy, courage and grace to proclaim them in the midst of a wicked and gainsaying world, and in the face and eyes of a time-serving ministry, and a backsliding church. But God requires it and we must obey. We see the baneful effects, where people have seen this truth, and because they met with some of these squibs, have backed out. You will find them like so many old logs after a freshet, hung up in the brush, or on the beach, all dried up.

No man can enjoy religion and disobey knowingly, the commandments of God. It is too late in the day to expect that we can hold out the truth to the world, and keep back in the dark and shun the cross, and please God. There is a class of professors that are very zealous, like the Ephesians. "Great is Diana!" If this class ever had grace it seems to me that a compound of idolatry, bigotry and ignorance had taken its place. This is the very class that will scoff at Millerism, without knowing what it is. Ignorance is the mother of superstition and bigotry.

Be Little.

Yes, be little. You cannot be very big if you try; and then, again, while you are trying, what a fluttering, fretting, tormenting, miserable work you will make of it! I know by experience. In former years, I was very anxious to be something in the world, as most young men are; but God, in latter years, has made me to see the folly of this consummate foolishness? O what a little, feeble, mean, earthy, unworthy, dying, insect-like being is sinful man! On a throne to-day, and in the grave in three days hence. In splendor to-day, and in the winding-sheet to-morrow. Boasting of beauty to-day, and a mass of corruption and loathsome rottenness in one short week or less. Chafing with the cares of life to-day, and to-morrow silent in the cold embrace of death. Of what shall such an one be proud? Have we talents? they are not our own; God lends them to us for His cause and glory's sake. Have we power? we could have none at all except it were given us from above. Have we ability to speak well? let us speak "ALL THE WORDS OF LIFE." Have we knowledge? let us seek grace to sanctify our knowledge, or of what important avail will our knowledge be? Have we friends? let us depend only on the One Eternal Friend. God loves the humble, poor in spirit, contrite ones, who tremble at his word. Those who do not seek to climb up need not fear a fall. Those who are little—who feel little—do not feel unhappy if others are larger than themselves. The springs are found at the base of the mountains. The streams meander in the valleys. The moisture is found in the low places. It is warmer below than on the mountain top. One in a low place is not so conspicuous a mark for the arrows of the enemy. Be little, and let God make you great, in His own time and manner. Keep down, humble, and let God exalt you in due time. O, I love to be little, meek, humble, lowly. God help me!

Christ.

"Christ is all in all." Col. 3: 11. The being here referred to is none other than the Son of the ever blessed God, "whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting," or ever the earth was; whose created existence preceded all other creation, whether animate, or inanimate, visible, or invisible; whose image, wisdom, beauty, and glory, was that of his Father—the omnipotent Jehovah,—for he was "the express image of his (Father's) person." Heb. 1: 3. This great and glorious model of God's perfection was an inhabitant of the world above, or of his Father's mansions of bliss, where joys and pleasures forever remain unencumbered and unmixed with any of earth's darkness, sorrows, tempations, or disappointments. He was "given" for the redemption of the world which has revolted from the government of God; in whom existed, by the will of his Father, all power, wisdom, goodness, redemption and riches with which to bless and exalt mankind.

His advent into this world was predicted long before the event occurred, by Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalmist; and when he came, in fulfillment of these various predictions, he "established," "magnified" and made them "honorable;" he addressed those to whom he came, (the Jews) as they were unbelieving, thus:—"O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken! Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself." And the ultimatum of this instruction was to open their eyes and understanding that they might understand the scriptures. "And they said one to another, did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way." Thus were they satisfied that they had seen the Lord's Christ, and that all the sayings of inspired writers relating to him, whether found in the law, Psalms, or the prophets, had received a literal accomplishment. They would have then said, truly, the child has been born, the son has been given, the Governor, Wonderful, Counselor, mighty God, the Prince of Peace is among us; and hence they would expect from his hand, by obedience to his "counsel" eternal salvation or redemption, bliss and glory.

This is Christ's exaltation, as the apostle declares: "Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." And now, since his exaltation, "there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Consequently, 'at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father." He is the only medium of our salvation; no justification now by an appeal to Moses, the law, or prophets. "Justification" now comes by "faith;" yes, a living faith in Jesus Christ, and without faith in him, it is impossible to please God. Paul observes, that "Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption;" and if we do not "believe" on him we violate the commands of God, for "this is his commandment that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ." Also, at his baptism and transfiguration, a voice from heaven said, "this is my beloved Son: hear him." "In him (Christ) dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell."

Attend! listen! O, earth! listen to the Son of God, for he is God's minister sent from God, who is light, and in him is no darkness at all, to save a perishing world. He comes with a glorious proclamation—"I am the way, the truth and the life." "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden; and I will give you rest. Take my yoke (or instruction) upon you and to your souls." Yes, eternal rest, and the kingdom of God with all its attending glories, ultimately.

We see from the foregoing that there is no salvation, eternal life, immortality, or crown of glory out of Christ; we must come into him—be married to him, in order to secure the exceeding great reward. How do we come into Christ and abide in him? By faith and obedience to all the counsel that falls from his divine lips that belongs to this dispensation. God says, "he (Christ) shall speak in my name all that I shall command him." Deut. 18: 18–19. "Lo! I come to do thy will, O, God." What is God's will? He taketh away the first will (or testament) that he might establish the second by which we are sanctified, &c. This second will or testament is called the "law of Christ," Gal. 6: 2; "law of faith," Rom. 3: 27; "law of liberty," in contradistinction to the law God gave to Moses, James 2: 10–12; "law of the spirit of life in Christ," which has made us free from the law of sin and death. The instruction in this law was what Christ commissioned the apostles to go and preach in all the world. This is also what the Holy Ghost brought to their remembrance, and stamped upon the fleshly tables of their hearts. Christ in his prayer says, "I have given them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them." "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

Paul was one of the apostles of Christ by the will of God, and he says, "I am sure that when I come unto you I shall come in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ." "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." Did the apostle ever declare that the seventh day Sabbath was enjoined upon christians? No, never.

Not one doubt have I touching this question. A. N. Seymour.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. W. J. Hale writes from Springfield Mass.:—"Dear Brn., I truly feel that there is a necessity at this time to double our diligence, that each and every one of us be fully prepared to answer for ourselves the momentous question,—are you a christian? which question cannot be decided too soon. The question is not to what denomination do you belong; are you a Presbyterian, a Methodist, a Baptist, Episcopalian, or an Adventist? You may be ever so warmly attached to either of these sects, and still not be a Christian. The question is not, what doctrines are embraced in your confession of faith? You may in your speculative belief be ever so sound and evangelical, and yet not be christian.

Are you a christian, a true disciple of Christ? The question not only involves the form of godliness, but the power. If you rely in any measure upon your blameless life and good works, you deceive yourself; for "by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified." If you rely on anything but the blood of Christ, and faith in him to save you, then the love of God is not in you; you are yet in your sins.

Are we then christians? let us examine ourselves, whether we are in the faith; and if we do not find evidence that we have been begotten again, let us not give sleep to our eyes, nor slumber to our eyelids, until Christ is formed within the hope of glory."

——:o:——

Sr. H. P. Chase writes from Bridgewater:—"What joy it gives the christian to hear that the King is coming. Praise the Lord! the journey is almost ended; the night will soon be gone, for it is almost break of day. Cheer up, weary pilgrim, and hear the welcome sound.

I have felt for a few weeks past, that this year our great Deliverer would come. I do love his appearing, although I have been disappointed so many times. It looks to me as though the wise would understand the time, or somewhere near when the Lord would come. He has appointed a day in the which he will judge the world; and shall we not know anything about the time? 'Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.' O, ye servants of the Most High God, be strong! fear not! you will soon be clothed in immortal beauty. Praise the Lord. Amen."

——:o:——

[illegible] writes from London, N. H.:—"The apostle John says, 'every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.' What do we hope for? 'Beloved, now are we the sons of God and it doth not appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is.' Is this the hope, to be made like Christ? Yes. To be made immortal, to die no more. Blessed hope! Surely tis an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast.

Brethren and sisters, have we this hope? Let us examine ourselves, whether we are in the faith, yea or nay. Let us look to God for help. Let us love Jesus with all the heart. We shall soon be made like him if faithful; soon enjoy the kingdom under the whole heavens. Praise his holy name! God grant that we may be ready for that glad day."

Spiritualism.

No. III.

"Now the spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." (demons.) 2 Tim. 4: 1.

We now purpose to show that the doctrines of Spiritualism are the doctrines of demons. If the doctrines of Spiritualists are in harmony with the Bible, then the foregoing scripture does not apply to them; but if directly opposed, they may be fulfilling this prophecy.

Let us examine the doctrines of Spiritualism for a few moments, and compare them with the standard of truth, that we may know whether they are of the devil or the Lord.

1. They deny that Christ is the Son of God, any more than any other man, and consequently do not believe that he has anything to do with our salvation, any farther than we are affected by his example.

Is this in harmony with the Bible? We need not stop to prove that it is directly the opposite of what the scriptures teach, for they declare,—"neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Acts 4: 12.

2. They deny that Christ's body was raised from the dead.

What saith the scripture? After his resurrection, he ate with his disciples, and "showed unto them his hands and his side ... but Thomas ... was not with them." He had declared,—"Except I shall see in his hands the print of his nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." At a subsequent meeting with the Savior, Jesus said to Thomas,—"Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless but believing." This demonstration satisfied Thomas that Jesus was no shadowy form of a ghost after his resurrection, but that he had "flesh and bones," as our Lord himself declares.

3. Spiritualists deny that Jesus will ever come again personally to this world.

"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. 8: 20. "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 11. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven." 1 Thess. 4: 16. Is this the one that was dead? Ans.—"Wait for his (God's) Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead." 1 Thess. 1: 10.

4. They deny that our mortal, corruptible bodies will ever be raised and become immortal and incorruptible.

Is this a doctrine of the Lord, or the devil? Hear the Apostle,—"This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." The whole artillery of Spiritualism is arrayed against this cardinal doctrine of christianity; and we are sorry to say that many professors of religion, and preachers of the (a) gospel join hands with Spiritualists on this point. According to the plain teachings of the Bible, there can be no future existence of the dead without a resurrection of the material organism. We are well aware, if this doctrine were believed, that Spiritualism would at once stand upon its own platform, and that men and women would flee from it as from a gang of wolves, or the enraged forest lion; they would then see that instead of communicating with their dead friends, they are being ensnared by living demons.

5. They deny the existence of the God of the Bible.

We believe that Spiritualism will head up in Atheism. Hear the testimony of the "Spirits." In answer to the question, "what is God?" they answer,—"The sun which you behold is the God of heaven and earth." "What do you mean by that?" "Spirits know no other."

In an exchange paper we read the following:—"In a paper read before 'the Investigating Class' at the house of Mr. Partridge, Jan. 14th, and published in the Telegraph of Jan 24th, the writer says:—'The idea of a God of illimitable capacity is so incomprehensible, that in our judgment it borders on the absurd. . . . God in the abstract is a nonentity and ideality of man's brain.'"

Such are the teachings of Spiritualists. Are these Bible doctrines, or those of demons? What saith the jury?—Shall we follow Christ, or Belial? Shall we believe truth, or error? God, or the Devil?

Christian, be firm! Thy foes are strong, and their number is legion. Be bold,—the King of Kings leads the way, and he is more than all that can be against us. Though the contest be severe, it will soon be ended, and the victor will enjoy an eternal triumph in the everlasting kingdom.

"We'll face the storm,
It can't be long,
We'll anchor by and by."

An Exhortation.

R. E. S.

On, brave pilgrim, on, ever on, to the land where care and sorrow is unknown. Fight bravely in that battle in which to be conquered is death eternal; in which to conquer, is to be crowned with immortal glory and to reign in a kingdom of everlasting bliss, and that too in a place where care, strife, anxiety and contention is unknown; in an eternal city of love, of which even the streets are to be pure gold, and the gates precious diamonds, more precious than this sin-cursed earth contains. And who is to be King of all? The Lord; the Lord of Hosts, mighty and great; who created the earth for his own glory and honor. "He is our King of glory." He is to reign King of the whole earth in his own great majesty and power. And what is the battle to be fought? It is nothing but to refuse temptation. How easy the victory to be obtained, and how glorious, how great the reward! Oh, pilgrims, be firm; be steadfast; keep your eye on the reward; before it must crumble all the glory of this world in its present state: all must fade, all must wither before the mighty majesty of our King, the Lord, to whom be all honor forever. Amen.

The Beast and the False Prophet.

"And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and that worshiped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone." Or, according to the Douay Bible, "and the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet, who wrought signs before him, wherewith he seduced them who received the character of the beast, and who adored his image."

By a careful comparison of these verses with chap. 13: 12–14, it is evident that the false prophet and the two-horned beast are identical, and denote one and the same power. And that the beast in whose sight the false prophet works his miracles or wonders, is the papal beast, after its deadly wound was healed, as noted in chap. 3. The context indicates that the gathering of the beast, and the kings of the earth and their armies, is in "that great day of God Almighty," in which the battle is fought, or, in other words, after the saints are resurrected and caught away to meet our descending Lord in mid air, where they stand for a period, not indicated, as it were upon a sea of glass, and sing the song of redemption; after which, the marriage of the Lamb will be celebrated, the supper eaten, &c. From which place they descend, clothed in white, seated upon white horses, preceded by Christ clothed in garments of vengeance, to the battle. In which battle the beast and false prophet are taken alive and cast into the lake of fire. The time for the execution of this judgment synchronizes with (chap. 16: 19,) the execution of God's wrath upon great Babylon under the seventh vial; and also with chap. 17: 11,—when the scarlet beast, or eighth head, will go into perdition.

If the beast and the false prophet, the kings of the earth and their armies, are to be thus alive and united when that battle is fought, it is manifest, that just prior to the actual ushering in of that great day, there will be preparatory events, tending to reunite the discordant elements of the Roman world, and bring them into that relation, whereby they can be speedily brought together and unitedly take the field against Christ and his immortal army.

If our argument (as recently published,) relative to the Allies of Europe being the two-horned beast be correct, it follows that they also constitute the false prophet. The present aspect of that power, as connected with the oriental world, and as shadowed forth in numerous prophecies, seems to justify this conclusion. In order to obtain a perfect understanding of the subject, we will examine briefly the events of the sixth vial. Rev. 16: 12–15.

Douay Bible. "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon that great river Euphrates, (Ottoman empire,) and dried up the water thereof, that a way might be prepared for the kings from the rising of the sun. (that is, that the kings of Asia may be prepared or made ready to be gathered to that great battle. And I saw from the mouth of the dragon, (Imperial Turkey,) and from the mouth of the beast, (the papal beast) and from the mouth of the false prophet, (the Allied powers of Europe,) three unclean spirits like frogs. For they are spirits of devils working signs, and they go forth unto the kings of the whole earth to gather them to battle, against the great day of the Almighty God."

The prominent thoughts as connected with our subject are these: that during the drying up process of the Ottoman empire, an all-pervading influence would go forth from the governments or powers denoted by the dragon, the beast and the false prophet, unto the various kingdoms of earth, exciting them to a general preparation for war, and at the same time bringing them into that relation to each; other, (as before remarked,) that they may be speedily gathered by Christ in the place called in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon—the great battlefield of the world, now known as the plains of Esdrælon.

It is manifest that the Ottoman empire is about absorbed; enough so, to admit of the opening and preparing "a way for the kings from the rising sun," as witnessed in the present extension of railroads, telegraphs, &c., in that direction across the empire; and also in the extension of European domination by force of arms and by diplomatic intrigues over that kingdom, and likewise over the ancient kingdoms of Grecia, Persia, and even to India. Through these and other causes of recent origin, all the nations of Europe and Asia have been brought into peculiar relation one toward another, and have been stirred up to a preparation for war, on a more gigantic scale than ever before witnessed, and are apparently in a proper attitude to be gathered to the battle of that great day.

In their present position the hand of the Almighty is most manifestly seen in overruling and directing their various wicked acts, so as to fulfil his word, as spoken of old by his servants the prophets, as may be seen in their reconstruction of the great metallic image, preparatory to its destruction, as recorded in Dan. 2: 34. 45. In the European Alliance is found, the iron and clay materials which compose the feet and the toes of the image, including the divisions of Eastern and Western Rome; (Constantinople and the Turkish empire being an integral part of that alliance,) these together constituted the foundation, or pedestal of the structure. The next is the Grecian brass, and third, the Persian silver; last of all the golden head is found in the Apocalyptic Babylon,* having "a kingdom above them all." These powers are all in actual being.

In the light of this subject, no new forms of government are to be looked for, or other great national events to transpire ere the dawning of the glorious day of deliverance. Therefore we may lift up our drooping heads, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. P. Alling.

* It is contended, by some, that old ancient Babylon is also to be revived. I think the prophecies relative to her destruction forbid that conclusion. Again, in the judgment but one Babylon is noted in the scriptures of truth, and as the apocalyptic Babylon is the last power to be broken which comes in remembrance, under the seventh vial, we are not justified in looking for another, or a restoration of ancient Babylon.

For the Crisis.

The Melchizedek—Priest—King.

The scriptures which speak of Melchizedek; who is Melchizedek, king of righteousness; and also Melchi-salem, king of peace, are Gen. 14: 18–20; Ps. 110: 4; Heb. 5th to 7th.

He was welcomed on his errand of mercy—welcomed to the right hand of the Majesty on high, as "a priest after the order of Melchizedek."

Melchizedek is the term that indicates the character of his reign who met Abraham after his slaughter of the confederate, idolatrous kings. It is not his personal name, but is significant of his royal and priestly administration—his relation to both God and man. Among men he was a benevolent and peaceful king; but he was also a priest of the Most High God.

The whole subject of Melchizedek has been covered up by human ignorance in a cloud of mystery and folly. My aim is, mainly, to leave that cloud to those who "love darkness rather than light," and state the one leading assertion of both Testaments relative to his reign of righteousness.

He was personally, I believe, Shem. Shem was the heir of promise and the channel of blessing, in the age of Abraham; and he lived on 502 years after the flood, to near the time of Abraham's death. He, as the elder of Abraham, was his superior—the "priest" of the Lord Almighty. But let all doubtful points pass, though they have been made doubtful by human folly and faithlessness. We should stop at Revelation.

The titles of this priest, more honored, at that time, than Abraham, are expressive of his official character. "Melchizedek"—being by interpretation King of Righteousness, and after that also King of Peace—"Like unto the Son of God!" This King reigned in "Salem," which was changed by Abraham into Jerusalem.

This King, so righteous, so peaceful, was in his time "like unto the Son of God." This character of Christ, so represented, so personified, by this Melchizedek, is asserted and re-asserted in a multitude of cases. 2 Sam. 23: 1–5; Ps. 45, 46, 72 and 132; Isa. 9: 6–8; Jer. 23: 5–8; 33: 14–18; Dan. 7: 14; Zech. 14; Rom. 11: 25–33; 15: 8–12; Heb. 2 to 12; Rev. 15: 4; 20: 2–8.

Thus this subject of the Kingdom of Christ, 1 Cor. 15: 24–27, is made certain. The whole history, titles, and apostolic interpretation of Melchizedek is a sham! Nay, the entire testimony of Prophets and Apostles as to Christ's kingdom is an imposition, if this inspired representation fails. Faith says there must be such a kingdom; there must be time for it. Amen. J. B. C.

For the Crisis.

The Vision of the 2300 Days.

No. II.

Thus I think that neither the Birth nor Baptism were designed as monuments to mark a period, though they may be included in the prophecy; but that the going forth of the commandment, in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, was the commencement; that the sealing up of the canonical prophecies of the Old Testament completed the first period of forty-nine years, and that the 434 period was finished at the Transfiguration, when He presented Himself as "the Prince," "coming in His kingdom." He had just before refused the honor of men, when "they came to take Him by force, and make Him king;" but now He shows Himself "the Prince of princes;" and 483 years are completed in the early part of the year, A. D. 40, and at the next passover He is sacrificed. This view carries the third period into the seventieth week, though not into "the midst" of it; and we have the authority of Dr. Prideaux, and Prof. Whiting, both eminent for scholarship, that, "midst of the week," may properly be rendered, "in a part of the week," or "in the half part," without saying which half, or what part; and as it is nearly a year into the last week of the seventy, I think it is sufficiently expressive of the original of the prophecy, it it occur in the course of the seventieth week; and that the whole seventy were fulfilled in the course of the year A. D. 47, when the whole nation of the Jews were left to blindness of mind and hardness of heart, and sealed to reprobation, of which the overthrow of their state and polity was the pledge.

Thus, the "seventy weeks" were not only "determined," but fulfilled on the Jews, who were Daniel's people; "and the people of the prince" (Titus) that came, destroyed "the city and the sanctuary," whose end was as "with a flood;" and desolations have followed ever since, and will, "till the consummation." The remaining part of the vision must be fulfilled on the Gentiles, and be completed the coming year. From the early part of A. D. 40, when the 483 are accomplished, to the early part of 1857, is 2300 full years, and it must be understood, that in no case can the vision extend beyond 1858, if the seventy weeks are the commencing part. I make these remarks to show that the vision can yet include the seventy weeks, and be precisely fulfilled, at each period, according to the words of the prophecy . . . that the years which have passed, since the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, do not yet outnumber those of the vision.

What time Nehemiah received his commission, we have no means of knowing, though his petition was made in the first month of the 20th year of the king; but it would require time to fit out for such an enterprise, as it required a military escort of officers and cavalry, to conduct him safely to the land of Judea. But whatever month, or day of the month, whether the first, second, or third, I have no doubt that the second period, i. e. the transfiguration, was the same day, of the same month; for this would be necessary, to fulfill the seventy weeks, even if they were not a part of the 2300 days. "And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off." We are not told how long after, but this is to be ascertained by the fulfillment. The inequality of these parts, or periods, is no argument against their fulfillment, agreeably to the foregoing theorem; and it appears to meet and answer the words of the prophecy, like a mathematical principle which cannot be overthrown, so far, at least, as relates to the "seventy weeks;" which, if filled up in A. D. 47, it was unquestionably filled the same day of the same month that the commandment was given, and likewise the same that witnessed the transfiguration.

I have said that this vision, in connection with the seventy weeks, can in no case extend beyond A. D. 1858, nor can it extend even there, without making the crucifixion fulfill two periods; i. e., that of the manifestation of "the Prince," 483, and the cessation of "the sacrifice and oblation;" and this would look inconsistent with the prophecy, which evidently makes them two distinct periods. So that, if the seventy weeks be a part of the vision, we must expect it will terminate in the course of the present year, for the crucifixion period can never be carried later than A. D. 41. Taking the time of the death of Julius Cesar for the starting point—which, I believe, all the historians that I have ever consulted, except one, place A. U. C.* 710, (i. e. B. C. 41,); and the succession and reign of Augustus is given by Josephus, fifty-seven years, six months and two days, to A. U. C. 768, A. D. 48. Tiberius was adopted by Augustus in A. D. 14, nearly four years before Augustus' death, whose whole reign from his adoption was "twenty-six years, six months and nineteen days." Anal. Sac. Chron. pp. 31, 32. There are other accounts of the years of his reign, but they are only reckoned from Augustus' death, which was not quite twenty-three years; but that his death occurred on the 29th of May, I think can be learned by the reign and death of his successor, Caius Caligula, who immediately succeeded him, and reigned three years and eight months, and died Jan. 24th; and reckoning back eight months, from Jan. 24, we come to May 24th, which, I think probably, was the time of Tiberius' death, A. D. 41.

These are the principal chronological facts that I wish to sustain here, that it may be apparent to all that the crucifixion did occur A. D. 41; and there are not wanting good authorities which I think abundantly sustain this position; especially the eclipse mentioned by Josephus, which fell on the 13th of March, A. U. C. 750 B. C. 1; and Herod Antipater's reign and death, soon after that eclipse. Likewise, the length of the reign of Philip, his son, being thirty-seven years, to the 20th year of Tiberius, sets the case in its true light, and proves that the Savior must have been older than thirty-seven at the same time. It may be argued that the crucifixion passover was earlier than the 4th of May, because "the servants and officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals, for it was cold, and they warmed themselves. And Peter stood with them, and warmed himself." John 18: 18. But it must be recollected that Jesus and his disciples, and all the rabble that seized him, had been out all night; and it would not be at all surprising, under such circumstances, if they were all cold enough to need fire to warm them, even as late in the season as the 4th of May; and as "there followed Him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body," we cannot suppose he would be there in that situation, if it were extremely cold. And though the country of Judea is more moderate than this, and their fruits are ripe earlier, I do not think the fruits necessary for the feast of unleavened bread, could be ripe on the 3d day of April, even in Palestine, as it is said that day was a Paschal, A. D. 33. Nor can I understand how the sun could enter Aries, which is never earlier than the 20th of March, and the moon change afterwards, and certainly one day elapse before it could be seen; so that the first day of Nisan could not begin any way till sunset, the 21st of March, and fourteen days from that must reach to the 4th of April.

(To be continued.)

From Sr. E. M. Jackman.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me through the columns of the Crisis to address a few lines to some of the Brn. and Srs., who are looking for the return of the Savior.

I wish to say that I love the Savior, and am with joyful anticipations expecting His immediate return to earth. Upon this faith rests my hope of eternal life, "which is like an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast." It brightens my pathway and cheers my heart amid the cares, temptations, and vanities of this life.

I sometimes feel so weary of this world that I long for some place where I can be entirely secluded from society, and there hold communion with my Heavenly Father until Jesus shall come to take his children home. At other times when I contemplate the joys that are in store for the faithful, and the awful doom of the wicked, and that so soon to be realized, I feel such an ardent desire for the salvation of my fellow creatures, that it seems as though I could go abroad in the world, and face the storms of this inconstant life with fortitude, if I could in any way aid in the spread of truth, or the promotion of the cause of God.

There are a few in this place who love the doctrine of the second Advent of Christ and are striving for a home in his kingdom. It is seldom that we have preaching on this subject, so that the different Advent Periodicals which we receive weekly are a source of delight to us. When we read the communications from the dear saints scattered throughout the land, we feel to rejoice that there are yet a few on earth, whose sympathies, joys, sorrows and hopes are congenial with those of our own. The question often arises in my mind, what would such isolated ones do were it not for the sweet interchange of thought which they are privileged to enjoy through the medium of public periodicals? for truly we need christian sympathy while we remain in this world.

We have been cheered of late by a short visit from Bro. E. Burnham. We were exceedingly happy to listen to the sweet sound of the gospel from the mouth of one of God's faithful servants. It was like "cold water to a thirsty soul," although we have not as yet seen that effect on the community around, we had hoped to have seen produced. We hope that he and others of the preaching brethren may be permitted to visit us from time to time, while we continue in this world.

To Bro. and Sr. Whitney, I would say that we all felt to sympathize with you in your afflictions; and that there are yet some among the mountains of New Hampshire who cherish your memory and appreciate your labors of love while you were with us.

Death has also been among us. Little Frank E., the youngest child of my brother and sister Hunt, died last August after an illness of about two weeks. His disease was on the brain which caused great suffering. But he is free from trouble now, and we hope soon to see him with all the redeemed of earth.

May we be remembered in your prayers, and finally join with you in praising God around the throne, is the prayer of

Your unworthy sister,
Ellen M. Jackman.

Woodstock, N. H., April 4, '57.

From Bro. H. T. Hart.

Bro. Grant:—I was much interested a short time ago in reading the account of Professor Hardinage's operation of dissolving the quart of California, extracting the gold, and holding the rock in a liquid state, to be run into blocks of any size, form, or color, to be used for building. Truly, thought I, we have arrived at Daniel's time of the end, when knowledge should be increased. Again; the process seemed so much in harmony with Peter's description of the dissolving of the elements, that I could but think here was a witness for God and for his testimony, (for it is by fervent heat, obtained by steam generated and applied by a certain method, of which he gave a full description, that he accomplishes the work,) to convince, if possible, the ungodly and unbelieving of not only the possibility, but the plausibility of this world's destruction by fire.

But I thank God, there ever has been some who believed. We go back prior to the deluge and we find one, a preacher of righteousness, who believed God and built an ark of gopher wood, wherein he and his family were saved. Passing along down the stream of time, we find another example of God's justice is necessary, because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah was great and their sin very grievous. Yet he would not destroy it if ten righteous were found therein. But, alas! there was only one, a just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked; and though he seemed as one that mocked, as he went forth to warn his son-in-law to flee the city, (for God would destroy it,) yet, while he lingered the men laid hold on his hand, and the hand of his wife, and two daughters, and led them forth, and set them out of the city, saying, "escape for thy life!"

Now as it was in those days, so shall it be when the Son of Man cometh. There were but few then, there are but few now. And must the number grow still less? It seems to be so, unless He comes soon, for the church seem almost dead. Thank the Lord, there are some signs of vitality left, and those who are not dead but sleeping seem to be trying to shake off this lethargy. May God help us to awake and buckle on the whole armor, that when the destroying angel does come, we may be ready to flee to the city of refuge.

Yours in hope, Henry T. Hart.

Bro. J. Nute writes from Sandwich, N. H.:—"When I look at the life of Abraham, I sometimes think that we need to have the Abrahamic faith strengthened, so that we may not be conformed to this world; and also that, though the way may sometimes look hedged up, we may go forth trusting in the Lord. Is there one of us but what can say that He is a very present help in trouble? No, for he has promised to be with his children even unto the end of the world; and we know that he will perform, for he is not slack concerning his promises. Glory be to his name forever! He promised to come, and he came; he has promised to come the second time, and he will surely come. We ought to be very diligent in his service, lest we should come short in that day.

We have the promise that whatsoever we ask in Jesus' name, believing, we shall receive; and it is just so. I have found it so by experience. He is faithful who hath promised. We can trust in him and not be afraid.

Now let us try to be faithful, and endure unto the end, and so run that we may obtain. Obtain what? Eternal life!"

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Raymond, Me. April 8th, sister Lydia H. Dingley, aged thirty-nine years.

The disease of which our beloved sister died was consumption. Her sufferings at times were intense, but she bore them patiently. Her trust was in the Lord, and she found him to be a never-failing friend in the hour of trial.

Sister Dingley had truly been called to pass through the deep waters of affliction. Within about two years, the companion of her youth, and a beloved child had fallen by the cruel hand of death. Being thus bereft of the love and watch-care of a kind husband, and having three dear children to whom she must bid farewell, truly her lot was severe. But amid all the waves of trouble she remained unmoved. She loved Jesus; and the blessed truth that He will soon appear to give eternal life to His waiting, tried and despised ones cheered her heart. But she is now lying in the "cold, cold ground," and many are they who are left to mourn over her. Her heart and hand were ever open to help the needy, and many beside the writer can testify, that she was "not forgetful to entertain strangers."

May the blessings of the God of the fatheresless and motherless ever rest upon the dear little orphan children, and upon the sorrowing ones, that they may all enjoy the gospel hope, and be prepared to meet our dear sister and all the saints of God, when mortality shall be swallowed up of life."

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

RETURN, O LORD.

Ps. 7: 4.

O hasten, Lord, and bring
The promised glory near;
And send the Savior, King,
That he may quick appear,
And build thee up, Jerusalem,
And gather all thy people home.

O, soon may Zion rise,
And clad with beauty shine;
Soon may she lift her eyes,
And sing with joy divine;—
Her mourning garments cast aside,
Be clothed in royal robes, a bride.

Arm of the Lord, awake!
And make thy power known;
Unto thyself now take
The sceptre and the throne.
Now let the reign of Right begin,—
Restore, and cleanse a world from sin.

Lo! see thy people here,
They sorrow, groan, and sign;
"Return, O Lord, appear!"
Is their united cry.
When wilt thou come? O haste! return!
And call thy wandering children home.

As pilgrims here we roam,—
No certain dwelling place,
Till thou again shalt come,
And cause to shine thy face
Upon thy Sanctuary fair,
And gather in thy loved ones there.

Hail! happy morning, hail!
We greet the herald's voice—
Thy word—it cannot fail;
In this we will rejoice,
Believing thou wilt "come again,"
And soon begin thy glorious reign.

Foreign News.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE NIAGARA.

Halifax, April 9.

The Royal Mail steamer Niagara, from Liverpool on the morning of the 28th ult., arrived here at half past 4 o'clock, this afternoon, en route for Boston.

Spain.—The government contemplates the establishment of a submarine telegraph between Cuba and the United States.

The first division of the fleet against Mexico would sail about the 28th of March for Havana.

Russia.—It is stated via Berlin that Russia again refuses to admit British consuls to the ports of the Black Sea.

Russia is making preparations for a Circassian campaign in the Caucasus. She has 100,000 troops along the shore of the Caspian, and had, beside, secured the active cooperation of several native chiefs.

Austria.—It is stated that Austria has become convinced that Piedmont seeks to place itself at the head of the revolutionary movement in Italy—a movement of which the success would be the destruction of the Austrian domination there. Piedmont pursues then a policy which not only tends to disturb social order in Italy, but to totally change the European political system established by the treaties of Vienna.

In the presence of these facts Austria deems her dignity will no longer permit her to maintain official relations with Sardinia. Nevertheless, in informing foreign Courts of the step Austria is determined to take, she declares that this measure will not be followed by others of a more hostile character, and that in any event Austria will avoid up to the last moment all that can compromise the maintenance of peace or create embarrassment among European Cabinets.

Persia.—The insurrection has been already announced, and the revolt is spreading. The insurgents in Kardistan have seized the Shah's uncle and threatened him with death unless he is ransomed.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

New York, April 15.

The steamer Ericsson, bringing Liverpool dates to April 1st, arrived here at midnight.

Diplomatic relations between Sardinia and Austria will, it is said, be restored sooner than expected. The Times says that the intervention of the British and French governments for the arrangement of the existing differences between the Austrian and Sardinian governments has been favorably received.

The negotiations for the conclusion of a Treaty of Commerce between the French and Russian governments are terminated, and the Treaty will soon be reduced to writing.

INTERESTING FROM CHINA.

A letter dated Macao, Jan. 29th, says that the Cantonese (Chinese) compute their losses in houses, go-downs, shops, &c., at over 4,000 buildings—up to date; and in merchandise, and the value of the above property, they state their losses at 10,000,000 of dollars—which is probably not far from the truth. It is fair to suppose that the Chinese do not over-estimate the loss in life, when they state it at 70,000, of all ages and sexes.

The poisoning scheme at Hong Kong affected over 400 persons, but it is not ascertained that a single person died. The quantity of arsenic was too large.

Since then, another attempt has been made, but on a much more moderate scale, through poisoned oranges, a quantity of which (about 5,000 in number.) was introduced into the colony. It failed, however, as too little of the poison had been absorbed by the fruit, although two deaths took place, and they Chinese. The Chinese have a method of poisoning oranges—by piercing them in the first instance with minute holes, and then placing them over the vapor of the poisoning substance, which they then cause them to inhale.

Attempts have also been made to fire the settlement. That the Chinese are subtle enough to create some great catastrophe is well known, but how or when no one can divine. The consequence is, that the whole community is living in a state of complete and most painful anxiety.

A telegraphic message received at Bombay from the authorities of Calcutta states that the Emperor of China had sent orders to Yeh to conclude peace on any terms.

Domestic Summary.

PROGRESS OF SPIRITUALISM.

General inteligence from all parts of the civilized world convinces us, that at no time heretofore has Spiritualism been so much canvassed and investigated as it is at the present time, nor has the belief in it spread with so much rapidity. No other fact in natural science, contradicting the popular superstition of the age and nation, at the time and place of its promulgation, has ever met so liberal a reception among all classes.

Geology and the Copernican system of Astronomy made less progress in a hundred years, than this science has in ten; and a general feeling of sympathy in its favor seems to pervade the community. In fact, at the first glance it does not seem to meet with the opposition necessary to try its claims sufficiently. Other great truths have been obliged to fight an infinitely harder battle. But the readiness with which these experiments are made, places the power of verifying them in the hands of every one. Besides, no other truth in science has so directly addressed itself to human sympathy as this. That the earth moves around the sun, the moon around the earth, that other planets and their satellites have the same motions, that the infinite multitude of fixed stars are suns like our own, are abstract facts, sublime beyond conception, yet they do not address the sympathies of the soul like the discovery that our fathers and mothers, our brothers and sisters, lovers, children, and every soul who has lived its day on earth, are still accessible to us, know all our cares and vexations, give us their sympathy, influence us for our permanent good, and cheer us in the troubles with which accident, or our own bad management have obstructed our way in the battle of life.

Of all discoveries in natural science this is the most glorious. Religion and science strike hands; no longer jealous on the one side, nor scornful and contemptuous on the other. Henceforth they work in the same field, friends on earth, and friends in the spheres; each seeking to understand and elucidate the natural laws of the universe.—Excelsior.—["The dead know not anything." Ed.]

Believers in Spiritualism in Boston.—It is estimated, says the N. Y. Times, that there are 25,000 secret or open spiritualists in Boston alone. Not more than 8000 or 10,000 are avowed believers. They have three places of teaching, open every Sunday. The Melodeon is open twice, and is generally occupied by trance mediums, or celebrated expositors of the creed. The audiences there average from 400 to 1100 persons.

An "Old Sledge Society" has recently been formed in Oramel, Allegany county—H. L. Purdy, editor of the Era, President. He says it meets nightly when the following order of exercises is gone through with:

One of the members reads a chapter from "Hoyle's games," and then the balance of the evening is devoted to "seven up" and oysters. We learn that there are several similar Societies of this kind in Elmira. They always prosper where liquor is plenty and morals low.—Elmira Advertiser.

We should like to have the sagacious editor of the Advertiser point out a place, if he can in Western New-York, of the size of Oramel, or larger, where similar societies do not exist. If a low state of morals and a free sale of liquors are any evidence of such societies we fear he would look in vain to find one. Is not the night of even degenerate profligacy brooding over chrsitendom.—Tribune.

Supposed Murder of Twenty Families.—Pittsburg, April 4th. A letter received at Pittsburg, from a very respectable source, dated Fort Dodge, Iowa, March 23d, says that a settlement of twenty families, at the head of the Des Moines river, had been attacked by Indians, and that it was supposed that they were all murdered. Only two houses were visited by the persons bringing the news, in which fourteen dead bodies were found. Some had been shot, and others inhumanly clubbed to death. It is presumed that the whole number of persons composing the settlement were killed, or that they are now in captivity. A meeting of citizens was called on the 22d ult., and a company of 50 to 100 men had organized to march to take vengeance on the Indians, and rescue any persons that might be found with them.

Lectures on Spiritualism.—In accordance with a notice posted about the streets, three lectures on "Spiritual Manifestations; Divine, Angelic and Satanic," were yesterday delivered in Hampden Hall, by H. L. Hastings. Having reviewed divine and angelic communications during the day, the speaker devoted his evening lecture to the Demons, whose presence he alleges are manifest in modern spiritualism. He dated the first "communication" at the fall, and cited the serpent as the first "medium." He followed his subject to the present time, and quoting sacred and profane writers, made out a pretty fair case. At the close of his remarks, a well known believer in spiritualism arose, and some very pretty sparring followed, the sharper thrusts being decidedly given by the lecturer. This was interrupted by a vixenish female of unquestionable age, who rose to state that she was not in favor of Free-lovism, and moreover never intended to be. She merely wished, she said, to put herself right before the community. Judging from a hasty glance, this step was unnecessary on her part.—Springfield Republican.

Movement of Troops Westward.—We find the following despatch, dated Washington, April 13, in the Philadelphia papers of Tuesday:

Col. Sumner, with a force of about 1000 men, has been ordered against the Iowa and Cheyenne Indians. On the restoration of peace in those quarters, he will proceed with his troops to Utah,—the shameful licentiousness of which territory the administration is determined shall be broken up.

It is estimated that early in June there will be at least 3000 U. S. troops in Kansas under the command of Major Generals Harney and Persifer F. Smith.

The arrangements made last fall, for a deputation of Choctaws and Seminoles from the west of the Mississippi, to pay a visit to Blily Bowlegs, and endeavors to coax him to remove west, will be carried out in a few days.

Important from Nicaragua.—Charlestown, March 14. Steamer Isabel arrived yesterday from Havana and Key West, April 10.

Steamer Tennessee, from Aspinwall, had arrived at Key West, bringing the news that Col. Lockbridge had been driven from Serapique, and that the whole of the River San Juan was in the hands of the Costa Ricans.

The steamer J. N. Scott exploded in the river killing 60 filibusters.

The Tennessee brought home a part of Stockbridge's command, including 50 sick and wounded.

There are twenty-six orphan asylums in the State of New York, in which nearly nine thousand little ones are fed, clothed and educated.

There is a rumor—probably unfounded—that a military expedition is being organized in Georgia, and some of the adjoining States, for a descent on Cuba, as it is presumed, or a filibuster foray of some description.

The Methodist Society at Warrentown, Va., is raising funds by the performance in the church of the scriptural drama of Joseph and his brethren.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

THIS IS NOT YOUR REST.

I am weary, I am weary,
Fain would I rest,
Fain escape these scenes so dreary,
Where none are blest.
But the world is full of sorrow,
Shrouded in woe;
Smiles are changed for tears to-morrow—
Where shall I go?

Here the brightest joys will perish,
Ere scarce possessed;
Here the glowing hopes we cherish,
Leave us unblest:
Thorns we grasp with every treasure,
Our hearts to grieve,
Poison taste with every pleasure
This earth can give.

Here the broken-hearted languish,
Depressed by woe;
Here the tears of bitter anguish
In secret flow.
Vain our hope of e'er securing
A happy lot;
Vain our dreams of joys enduring,—
Earth yields them not.

Quiet in the churchyard slumber
Earth's fairest flowers;
Thousands daily swell their number,
Culled from Life's bowers.
I will ask no home abiding
In this dark land,
Where Death's arrows are dividing
Each loving band.

Is there no bright home where sorrow
Reigns not supreme?
Where the brow no more shall furrow,
Nor eye grow dim?
Yes, a home untrod by mortal,
The pure shall win;
Through its bright, resplendent portal,
They'll enter in.

There the heart shall feel no sadness,
No chilling fear;
There the hours bring nought but gladness,
There falls no tear.
In that land, that clime celestial,
Death cannot come;
There, when fled are things terrestrial,
I'd have a home.

DOST THOU LOVE HIS APPEARING!

2 TIM. 4: 8.

Say, poor pilgrim, dost thou love Him?
Art thou daily sighing, come?
Would you dearly love to see Him?
Do you long to be at Home?
Are you weeping, watching, praying,
As you journey on the way?
And entreat Him, always saying,
Come, my Savior, come away?

Then rejoice, a crown 's before you,
'Tis laid up at His right hand;
'Twill be given when He cometh,
Unto all the pilgrim band.
Bless the Lord! a crown of glory
Is laid up for me, above,
And I'll always tell the story,
'Till I see Him whom I love.

For the Crisis.

Short Sermon.

BY W. SHELDON.

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14.

The text presents three items for our contemplation:—

I. The "commandments" of Jesus.
II. "The tree of life."
III. "The city."

I. The commandments of Jesus claim our attention. What are his commandments? They are those which he has personally uttered, or authorized his apostles to utter, as his ambassadors. They are numerous.

First. Church ordinances are among his commandments. The ordinances of the church cannot be set aside, or neglected by those who strictly "do" the commandments of Jesus. Baptism and the Lord's supper are prominent ordinances. Great importance is attached to doing, as well as knowing, these commandments.

Second. Practical duties are enjoined by these commandments. Prayer is required, even though our heavenly Father knoweth what we have need of before we ask him. We must "pray in the Holy Ghost." We must pray in faith, for "without faith it is impossible to please God." We must "pray with the Spirit, and with the understanding also," or we may "ask amiss" and not be heard. Again; we are commanded to "follow after charity." Without this, our christianity is totally worthless. Unparalleled faith, unbounded benevolence, and unlimited knowledge in the mysteries of God, will not weigh one item in the scale, when we are "weighed in the balance, and found wanting" of charity—divine love! These, and kindred commandments, must be practically adhered to, as indispensable prerequisites to salvation.

II. The tree of life.

First. What is it? Some theologians understand it to symbolize Christ, and claim that we now partake of it in a spiritual sense. But the scriptures prove that it is connected with another dispensation, and to be enjoyed by overcomers, instead of present probationers. "To him that OVERCOMETH will I give to eat of the tree of life." Rev. 2: 7. In Eden lost, there was a literal tree of life; so in Eden restored will there also be a literal tree of life.

Second. Where is it? On the "new Earth," on the banks of the river of water of life. "On either side of the river was THERE the tree of life." Rev. 22: 2. This is Paradise restored, and "the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Rev. 2: 7.

Third. What is it for? "The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." Rev. 22: 2. What nations? The nations previously spoken of in the same connection—"the nations of them that are saved." But what healing will they need? They will not need to be healed in a moral point of view, nor of sickness, for "the inhabitants of that land will not say, I am sick." But they will need to be healed of various physical imperfections, from which the resurrection will not free them. This is evident from the Savior's own language: "If thy hand or thy foot offend thee, [or cause thee to offend,] cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed," &c. Matt. 18: 8. Also, Mark 9: 43–47. Thus it is clearly taught by the Savior that we may enter into life "halt," or "maimed," or "with one eye." Now we do not "enter into life" till we are resurrected; hence, the resurrection does not heal these physical imperfections. Indeed, the term resurrection does not suggust such a work. It brings up what went down. It brings the dead to life—an endless life. It brings them into reach of the "tree of life," and the "healing" properties which have been connected therewith by the skill and wisdom of God. Obviously this is the "healing of the nations" to which allusion is made.

III. "The city."

First. This city is called the "New Jerusalem," in contradistinction to old Jerusalem, which was a literal city; hence this city is a literal city.

Second. This city is now "reserved in heaven." "Jerusalem which is ABOVE, is free." Gal. 4: 26. Yet we are nowhere taught that we shall go to heaven to walk its streets of gold.

Third. It is "ready to be revealed in the last time." Says the Revelator;—"And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven." Rev. 21: 2.

Fourth. Abraham, "the friend of God," and "father of the faithful," looked for this same city, and distinctly understood that its builder and maker was God. He looked not for a city to which he must emigrate, but "for a city to come." Here is the home of all the saints. The abode of angels too.

Fifth. This city is not a symbol of the resurrected saints—the church—for they are to "enter through the gates INTO the city:" and they cannot enter through themselves into themselves!! No; it is a city; the measurement is given; the choice materials of which it is composed are named. Then let us DO Christ's commandments, that we may enter this city of repose and felicity.

"Behold, the Kingdom of God is within you."

LUKE 17: 21.

The ordinary explanation of this passage goes to show the reign of God in the heart. It is sufficient to point attention to the fact, that the Lord is not addressing his disciples, in whose hearts his gracious rule was acknowledged, but the caviling Pharisees; and in that sense it could not be said that the kingdom of God was within them.

He was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come. Their meaning must have been regarding the time of the establishment of Messiah's glorious and everlasting kingdom, when, in the language of Daniel, "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose Kingdom is an everlasting Kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." According to such interpretation, the Lord must be understood as saying to the Pharisees,—"you are altogether mistaken, in expecting any such kingdom; the kingdom of God has already come." But his disciples did not so understand him, for we find them on the very eve of his ascension, asking a question very similar to that of the Pharisees.

Such an answer is also inconsistent with his own subsequent teaching; for we find him, in the 21st chap., informing his disciples of the signs of the last days, down to the last hour, when the Son of Man shall be seen coming in a cloud, with power and great glory; and then he says, "when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." The kingdom of God so far from being already come when he spake to the Pharisees, is only to be known to be nigh at hand when the signs of the last days are come.

That the Lord, in his reply, did not evade the question, by speaking of a different event from that regarding which they were questioning him, is evident from the sequel; for he immediately turns to his disciples and speaks of his coming sufferings, his prolonged absence, and his ultimate return, and dwells chiefly on the manner in which the Son of man shall be revealed.

In illustration of his remark to the Pharisees—the kingdom of God cometh not with observation—it may be objected that if the Lord spoke of a visible and glorious kingdom, he could not have said, it "is not with observation;" that is, with outward show or manifestation. But, it should be noticed that he does not say the kingdom is without observation, but its coming; and the importance of this distinction we shall immediately see. He tells them that the coming of that kingdom will be of such a nature that no one will come to them with the tidings that it has come. Man shall not say,—"lo here!" or "lo there!" for behold, the kingdom of God is among you."

The coming of the kingdom of God will not be a matter of ordinary observation, so that some who have seen its opening acts shall hasten to publish the news, and call men to bestir themselves because it is among them. Those who are not meet for it shall have no knowledge of its coming. The reason of this he explains to his disciples, who might otherwise have been distressed at the thought that it might come, and they too be ignorant of it. He tells his disciples of the days of sorrow and separation, when his pining church should long for his coming; and then deceivers would arise with false tidings of his arrival. He warns them to turn a deaf ear to all such rumors. A man, says he, might as reasonably pretend to give you notice of the approach of lightning. When the Son of man comes, his true disciples will need no messenger to carry the tidings, for in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, they shall be all changed. The church of God shall be taken out from among the wicked, as Noah was taken out from among them in his day, and entered into the ark; or, as Lot was led out of Sodom and went into Zoar. And, as in both cases the ungodly went on with their business and folly, heedless of danger, until God's judgment overtook them, so, when the church is removed from the earth, the world will rush recklessly on until the Lord comes with all his saints to execute judgment.

He warns his disciples against any lingering on that day, and tells them that it will be a sudden and simultaneous rending of all earthly ties and relationships.

His disciples ask the question; (and few words suffice for so solemn a moment,) "where, Lord?" that is, where shall we be taken? He replies, as eagles seem to be gathered from all quarters by some irresistible attraction to the point where they find their prey, so shall you from every quarter, be guided with infallible precision to the point where you shall find me.

It is thus that the Lord warns the Pharisees that they ought to have been occupied with other questions than the time; for only those that are ready shall go in to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. None but the wise shall understand. The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; you shall not have warning that it is within sight, or already on the way; noiselessly, steathily, as a thief in the night it shall come, and all who are accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, will be removed before an ungodly world can have notice of it.

Shall not that be a strange thing, says one, in the day when it cometh to pass, when, from among the active members of society, many being visited with the power of an endless life, shall suddenly disappear? They shall be missed from the earth, and no one shall know whither they have journeyed. From the solitary dwelling a beloved one is gone. In the retired hamlet there is a stir and an inquiry after some humble person, whom, in past days, no one much heeded. And now they themselves are sought after, but are nowhere to be found. In the city, in the crowded hall, in the places of business, in the seat of judgment, in the house of council, from the throne itself they are taken away; they are taken away from all ranks, from all occupations, of all ages. As, when the sons of the prophets sought after Elijah, whom God had caught up into heaven, so, everywhere, shall men seek and wonder.

Did ye not know it would be thus? Wherefore, being forewarned, would ye not yield to the preparation? Ye also might have shared in that blessedness.

The time is at hand, when they that are filthy, shall be filthy still; and they that are holy shall be holy still. "Behold," says Jesus, "I come quickly, and my reward is with me." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." For the saints shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom even for ever and ever. Amen.

From Sr. Emma Stedwell.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to write a few lines for the Crisis. I feel that I love the Lord and his people, and desire to be found among the redeemed of the Lord at the last day, when Christ shall come to give his children rest. I was thinking this morning what a glorious meeting there will be at the morning of the resurrection, when the tares shall be severed from the wheat, and the little flock shall all be gathered home, forever to sing the praises of their blessed Redeemer; when kind friends that have so long been separated by death's cruel power shall meet to part no more. How foolish to choose the vain things of this world, rather than such a glorious possession. I think we have not long to stay in this world. Soon we shall see the King in his beauty, and Oh! how much we ought to be concerned about our eternal welfare.

I take great pleasure in reading your excellent paper, and feel that is a gift from on high. I am thankful for it, but feel that I am not as thankful as I ought to be for the many privileges that I enjoy, and do not prize them at their true value. It is something of a task for me to write, as I am but fourteen, and have never written for publication before.

I would say to those who have recently started on the road that leads to life,—let us be faithful; though we may meet with trials and difficulties in this present evil world, what are they compared with life everlasting?

Yours in hope of eternal life,

EMMA STEDWELL.

[We hope to hear again from our sister. May the Lord speed her on in her youthful pilgrimage to the city of our King. ED]

The Love Feast.

It was our privilege to attend a "love feast" with the colored brethren at "Ebenezer" on the afternoon of the 4th inst. We declined to commune with the masters at their popular church in the afternoon, because we would as soon commune with a man who robs a brother man of his gold, as with one who robs a brother man of himself; but we esteemed it a privilege, an honor, to come around the table of our Lord with these poor oppressed children of our heavenly Father. At the close of the communion services, an hour was allotted them for relating the dealing of the Lord with them. The scene that followed cannot be described. We will, however, give a few expressions taken down at the time from sixteen successive testimonies.

1. Very aged sister. "I rise first cause I least ob all. Jesus keep me poor old woman through dis hard winter—he take care of me good as anybody."

2. An old lady. "Forty-three years I been on dis journey. Glory be to God for de good fare on de way—de travel ob my soul am to cleave unto de Lord."

3. Aged woman. "I 's happy to-day, but what is dis to what I shall be—only as de dim starlight to de sun straight over head. We riding de storm now, but soon be in port. Glory to Massa Jesus."

4. A decrepit old woman. "I feels encouraged to-day. I's girded up my loins to run de race, and I'll habe de prize—yes, I habe de prize, if I have to crawl on my old hands and knees ober de hard places."

5. Aged lady. "Five months I been afflicted; but Jesus been with me, when I could not get to you. Now I come to lay my shoulder to de gospel wheel anew. I's been lifting forty-seven years. I'll see de old wheel roll yet, tank de Lord."

6. Little trembling sister. "Glory to Jesus. Glory, glory, glory! My tongue can't talk, but my heart can say glory to Jesus! Glory, glory, glory!"

7. Middle aged man. "I remember bery well when God for Christ sake forgib my sins. From dat day Jesus been my portion, my treasure, my all."

8. Young man. "I nothing to say 'bout reckon so, or may be so, I know dat my Redeemer lives. I know too he neber fed me on food that made me sick. I'll be round Massa Jesus' table till I get fatted for heaben. All up hill, but Jesus at de top. I want see how it look up dare."

9. Young woman. "I wont stop to tell you 'bout de road I come along, but I'm here—I'm on de rock. I's an old-fashioned noisy Methodist. I's going up to see de 'hundred and forty-four thousand,' and help um-shout Glory, glory, glory to de Lamb."

10. Man about fifty-five. "I seek de Lord when a little boy—fader a sinner, moder a sinner. First, I go into de garret and pray little easy. I know nothing—say almost nothing—sometimes wait an hour, like de Quaker, till de spirit set my tongue going. I kept close to Massa Jesus two or three years—he feed me well, and I get to be a big stout boy in ligious things. Den he help me pray down in de kitchen with de old folks, and when my own fader and moder turn children and ask me learn dem to pray, den I no Quaker, but roar it out quick and loud. Children, Jesus can make you pray like de bishop."

11. Old man. "I very poor man; my paper good for nothing here, 'cause I han't got myself—but my paper good in heaven, 'cause Massa Jesus 'dorse it for me. He good curety—his purse neber fail. Bless de Lord Jesus Christ."

12. Woman of sixty. "I's a poor old slave-woman when God turned my darkness into light; but when de dungeon open, when de chain fell off, I felt like a little gal, and dis old cripple mighty spry on de foot yet."

13. Man of forty. "When I left de debil's army I join Captain Jesus during de war. I'm on the march to-day. I neber surrenders. When de wind blow hard, I stick de closer to de old flag-staff. Keep de colors flying, bredren, keep de colors flying, ebery sojer hab a crown by-and-by. Glory, Hallelujah!"

14. Middle-aged man. "Eber since Jesus turn my night into day, I lobe de day best. I going to de land where dere is no night."

15. Little boy. "Moder told me Jesus died for sinners—little boy-sinners. Jest a little while ago I believe it. Now de boy here, but Jesus take de sinner away. I lobe Jesus, cause he make me feel like I'll fly."

16. The steward. "I's looking for de 'good old way de prophets went.' I see it. I in it. Firm footing here. I'll go to glory in dis path. Yes, I'll go through glory up to heaven, and rest with Jesus, where glory will go through me."

These are but a few crumbs from the colored love feast. We reckon there must be a powerful revival in any white church in the city before sixteen successive testimonies will be heard indicating so much true piety and clear perception of Christ revealed in the soul—a present Savior from sin.

Rev. Dr. Bellamy.

A young minister who had more zeal than knowledge, and who rendered himself very offensive by the severity of his preaching, was complaining to the Doctor that his ministrations seemed to produce so little effect, and wondering why so few were converted under his labors. "Why," said Dr. Bellamy, "the reason is obvious enough; and if you will correct your error, go and learn wisdom of the fisherman. He does not go boisterously to work, as if he expected to bring the fish to his hook by giving them a regular scourging beforehand; but he casts in his line silently and waits patiently for a bite; and, whenever a fish comes to his hook, he is watchful to take advantage of the right moment for drawing it up; and he is thankful if he gets a few, and perseveres in the hope of getting more. If you would adopt this course as a fisher of men, you would have less reason to complain of the want of success."—Dr. Sprague.

A STARTLING POSITION, BUT NOT SO FAR WRONG.—The English correspondent of Zion's Herald, speaking of a gentleman of note, whose life and character have recently been portrayed by an able hand, says:—"He was an inveterate consumer of tobacco—a practice inconsistent with thorough Christian devotedness." This is undoubtedly the true view of the subject; yet it is to be feared that but few are prepared to take it, any more than thousands of professed christians were prepared, in the early history of the temperance reform, to admit that moderate drinking was wrong. But we hope to see the day when this unchristian practice will be treated as it deserves by an enlightened christian sentiment, and the millions of Christ's money, now squandered upon Christian lusts, will be turned over to his treasury, when there will be no want of means for the world's conversion.

We visited the Insane Asylum a day or two since, where we found a well known minister of the Presbyterian Church, a sad spectacle of insanity and woe, the result of the excessive use of the pernicious weed! and heard of another who is rapidly going the same way. And yet men in this practice stand up in the pulpit, and preach self-denial to others, and denounce "fleshly lusts." "O tempora, O mores!"—Nashville Christian Advocate.

PLACING OF LARGE STONES BY THE ANCIENTS.—It is well known that the mode by which the ancients raised the immense blocks of stone composing their pyramids and other structures, was by short pieces of wood. This mode of operation has been thus explained by a gentleman named Perigal, before the British Association: Suppose a block was to be raised up along the pyramid, in order to be placed in one of the courses of the masonry. It is brought by rollers to the base of the building. There all the rollers are removed except one near the centre. One end of the stone being now depressed to the ground, a pile of slips of wood is placed under it close to the centre, this pile being rather higher than the roller, and terminating in one narrow piece at the top. The stone is now tilted so as to bring the other end to the ground. It is now possible to put a similar pile of pieces of wood underneath, close beside the first. On that pile the block is tilted back to its former position, and so on till it is raised a little above the level of the next course of masonry. By rollers it is moved on to that platform, with a low pile of blocks once more near the centre underneath. Then the process of tilting and raising is again gone through; and so on until it has been raised up to the level where it is to take its place in the masonry.—Zion's Herald.

ORIGIN OF DISEASE.—I tell you honestly what I think is the cause of the complicated maladies of the human frames. It is their gormandizing and stuffing, and stimulating those organs (the digestive) to excess, thereby producing nervous disorder and irritation. The state of their minds is another grand cause—the fidgeting and discontenting yourself about that which can't be helped; passions of all kinds malignant passions and worldly cares pressing upon the mind, disturb the cereoral action, and do a great deal of harm.—Zion's Herald.

BIBLES.—A Bible distributor in Kentucky reports that of thirty thousand families he visited, one-fourth had no Bible, and many had never heard of such a book at all! There were three regularly ordained ministers also, who had no copy of the scriptures.

For the Children.

Old Age.

A WORD TO YOUTH.

Young friends, how do you treat the aged? Respectfully, kindly, attentively? When you meet an aged man or woman, bending under the weight of years and infirmities, do you bow reverently, walk softly, give place, yield your seat in the family, in the cars, the house of God? Do you check every rising thought of disrespect, ridicule, levity, the idle jest or rude laughter? Do you?

"Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honor the face of the old man, and fear thy God. I am the Lord." Lev. 19: 32.

Behold yonder aged man, feeble, tottering on the grave's brink. See you not upon his temples the snows of many winters? See you not the sunken eye, the bowed form, the thin hand upon whose surface the blue veins stand out like cords? Gone are the beauty and strength of manhood; and in that faded eye but little light is left, save that of love and kindness. The voice has lost its music, save the soft undertone of affection.

Oh, you in whose bounding veins young life yet lingers; and you in the full beauty and vigor of manhood, respect the aged! Speak gently, hush the rude laugh, check the idle jest, listen to the wisdom which is the voice of experience. Cheer him with kindly words, encircle him with your strong arm, and lead him as he descends the western hill of life, the shadows deepening into night—the white hairs upon his temple already drifting in the cool breeze which comes up from the shadow of death.

Honor the aged, that he may leave you his blessing on the threshold of the unknown land. Honor him, and God will raise up for you friends to remove the thorns from the last league of your own life-journey; for the sake of the weary one of long ago, who never wept for your ingratitude; whose bowed form never struggled with a weight of care or grief which you might have carried, while you walked carelessly along, intent upon your own ease and pleasure. Honor the aged for His sake who was old before the world was—whose life is from everlasting to everlasting.

"Honor him that feebly walketh
With his staff, the white-haired sage,
God will curse the wretch that mocketh
Hoary hairs, with slighted age."

—Golden Rule.

STAND ERECT, walk erect, sit erect, inhale freely, fully, fill the lungs to the very bottom. Health demands this, especially of persons in sedentary life. Never allow yourself in a stooping posture.—Golden Rule.

FOPS.—Look at that young man, smoking his cigar, reading his newspaper, with his feet perched upon a desk, a window, or out of the window, puffing away. Is this gentlemanly?—Golden Rule.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

THIS IS NOT YOUR REST.

I am weary, I am weary,
  Fain would I rest,
Fain escape these scenes so dreary,
  Where none are blest.
But the world is full of sorrow,
  Shrouded in woe;
Smiles are changed for tears to-morrow—
  Where shall I go?

Here the brightest joys will perish,
  Ere scarce possessed;
Here the glowing hopes we cherish,
  Leave us unblest:
Thorns we grasp with every treasure,
  Our hearts to grieve,
Poison taste with every pleasure
  This earth can give.

Here the broken-hearted languish,
  Depressed by woe;
Here the tears of bitter anguish
  In secret flow.
Vain our hope of e'er securing
  A happy lot;
Vain our dreams of joys enduring,—
  Earth yields them not.

Quiet in the churchyard slumber
  Earth's fairest flowers;
Thousands daily swell their number,
  Culled from Life's bowers.
I will ask no home abiding
  In this dark land,
Where Death's arrows are dividing
  Each loving band.

Is there no bright home where sorrow
  Reigns not supreme?
Where the brow no more shall furrow,
  Nor eye grow dim?
Yes, a home untrod by mortal,
  The pure shall win;
Through its bright, resplendent portal,
  They'll enter in.

There the heart shall feel no sadness,
  No chilling fear;
There the hours bring nought but gladness,
  There falls no tear.
In that land, that clime celestial,
  Death cannot come;
There, when fled are things terrestrial,
  I'd have a home.

DOST THOU LOVE HIS APPEARING!

2 TIM. 4: 8.

Say, poor pilgrim, dost thou love Him?
Art thou daily sighing, come?
Would you dearly love to see Him?
Do you long to be at Home?
Are you weeping, watching, praying,
As you journey on the way?
And entreat Him, always saying,
Come, my Savior, come away?

Then rejoice, a crown's before you,
'Tis laid up at His right hand;
'Twill be given when He cometh,
Unto all the pilgrim band.
Bless the Lord! a crown of glory
Is laid up for me, above,
And I'll always tell the story,
'Till I see Him whom I love.

Short Sermon.

BY W. SHELDON.

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14.

The text presents three items for our contemplation:—

I. The "commandments" of Jesus.
II. "The tree of life."
III. "The city."

I. The commandments of Jesus claim our attention. What are his commandments? They are those which he has personally uttered, or authorized his apostles to utter, as his ambassadors. They are numerous.

First. Church ordinances are among his commandments. The ordinances of the church cannot be set aside, or neglected by those who strictly "do" the commandments of Jesus. Baptism and the Lord's supper are prominent ordinances. Great importance is attached to doing, as well as knowing, these commandments.

Second. Practical duties are enjoined by these commandments. Prayer is required, even though our heavenly Father knoweth what we have need of before we ask him. We must "pray in the Holy Ghost." We must pray in faith, for "without faith it is impossible to please God." We must "pray with the Spirit, and with the understanding also," or we may "ask amiss" and not be heard. Again; we are commanded to "follow after charity." Without this, our christianity is totally worthless. Unparalleled faith, unbounded benevolence, and unlimited knowledge in the mysteries of God, will not weigh one item in the scale, when we are "weighed in the balance, and found wanting" of charity—divine love! These, and kindred commandments, must be practically adhered to, as indispensable prerequisites to salvation.

II. The tree of life.

First. What is it? Some theologians understand it to symbolize Christ, and claim that we now partake of it in a spiritual sense. But the scriptures prove that it is connected with another dispensation, and to be enjoyed by overcomers, instead of present probationers. "To him that OVERCOMETH will I give to eat of the tree of life." Rev. 2: 7. In Eden lost, there was a literal tree of life; so in Eden restored will there also be a literal tree of life.

Second. Where is it? On the "new Earth," on the banks of the river of water of life. "On either side of the river was THERE the tree of life." Rev. 22: 2. This is Paradise restored, and "the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Rev. 2: 7.

Third. What is it for? "The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." Rev. 22: 2. What nations? The nations previously spoken of in the same connection—"the nations of them that are saved." But what healing will they need? They will not need to be healed in a moral point of view, nor of sickness, for "the inhabitants of that land will not say, I am sick." But they will need to be healed of various physical imperfections, from which the resurrection will not free them. This is evident from the Savior's own language: "If thy hand or thy foot offend thee, [or cause thee to offend,] cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed," &c. Matt. 18: 8. Also, Mark 9: 43–47. Thus it is clearly taught by the Savior that we may enter into life "halt," or "maimed," or "with one eye." Now we do not "enter into life" till we are resurrected; hence, the resurrection does not heal these physical imperfections. Indeed, the term resurrection does not suggest such a work. It brings up what went down. It brings the dead to life—an endless life. It brings them into reach of the "tree of life," and the "healing" properties which have been connected therewith by the skill and wisdom of God. Obviously this is the "healing of the nations" to which allusion is made.

III. "The city."

First. This city is called the "New Jerusalem," in contradistinction to old Jerusalem, which was a literal city; hence this city is a literal city.

Second. This city is now "reserved in heaven." "Jerusalem which is ABOVE, is free." Gal. 4: 26. Yet we are nowhere taught that we shall go to heaven to walk its streets of gold.

Third. It is "ready to be revealed in the last time." Says the Revelator;—"And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven." Rev. 21: 2.

Fourth. Abraham, "the friend of God," and "father of the faithful," looked for this same city, and distinctly understood that its builder and maker was God. He looked not for a city to which he must emigrate, but "for a city to come." Here is the home of all the saints. The abode of angels too.

Fifth. This city is not a symbol of the resurrected saints—the church—for they are to "enter through the gates INTO the city:" and they cannot enter through themselves into themselves!! No; it is a city; the measurement is given; the choice materials of which it is composed are named. Then let us DO Christ's commandments, that we may enter this city of repose and felicity.

LUKE 17: 21.

The ordinary explanation of this passage goes to show the reign of God in the heart. It is sufficient to point attention to the fact, that the Lord is not addressing his disciples, in whose hearts his gracious rule was acknowledged, but the caviling Pharisees; and in that sense it could not be said that the kingdom of God was within them.

He was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come. Their meaning must have been regarding the time of the establishment of Messiah's glorious and everlasting kingdom, when, in the language of Daniel, "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose Kingdom is an everlasting Kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." According to such interpretation, the Lord must be understood as saying to the Pharisees,—"you are altogether mistaken, in expecting any such kingdom; the kingdom of God has already come." But his disciples did not so understand him, for we find them on the very eve of his ascension, asking a question very similar to that of the Pharisees.

Such an answer is also inconsistent with his own subsequent teaching; for we find him, in the 21st chap., informing his disciples of the signs of the last days, down to the last hour, when the Son of Man shall be seen coming in a cloud, with power and great glory; and then he says, "when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." The kingdom of God so far from being already come when he spake to the Pharisees, is only to be known to be nigh at hand when the signs of the last days are come.

That the Lord, in his reply, did not evade the question, by speaking of a different event from that regarding which they were questioning him, is evident from the sequel; for he immediately turns to his disciples and speaks of his coming sufferings, his prolonged absence, and his ultimate return, and dwells chiefly on the manner in which the Son of man shall be revealed.

In illustration of his remark to the Pharisees—the kingdom of God cometh not with observation—it may be objected that if the Lord spoke of a visible and glorious kingdom, he could not have said, it "is not with observation;" that is, with outward show or manifestation. But, it should be noticed that he does not say the kingdom is without observation, but its coming; and the importance of this distinction we shall immediately see. He tells them that the coming of that kingdom will be of such a nature that no one will come to them with the tidings that it has come. Man shall not say,—"lo here!" or "lo there!" for behold, the kingdom of God is among you."

The coming of the kingdom of God will not be a matter of ordinary observation, so that some who have seen its opening acts shall hasten to publish the news, and call men to bestir themselves because it is among them. Those who are not meet for it shall have no knowledge of its coming. The reason of this he explains to his disciples, who might otherwise have been distressed at the thought that it might come, and they too be ignorant of it. He tells his disciples of the days of sorrow and separation, when his pining church should long for his coming; and then deceivers would arise with false tidings of his arrival. He warns them to turn a deaf ear to all such rumors. A man, says he, might as reasonably pretend to give you notice of the approach of lightning. When the Son of man comes, his true disciples will need no messenger to carry the tidings, for in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, they shall be all changed. The church of God shall be taken out from among the wicked, as Noah was taken out from among them in his day, and entered into the ark; or, as Lot was led out of Sodom and went into Zoar. And, as in both cases the ungodly went on with their business and folly, heedless of danger, until God's judgment overtook them, so, when the church is removed from the earth, the world will rush recklessly on until the Lord comes with all his saints to execute judgment.

He warns his disciples against any lingering on that day, and tells them that it will be a sudden and simultaneous rending of all earthly ties and relationships.

His disciples ask the question; (and few words suffice for so solemn a moment,) "where, Lord?" that is, where shall we be taken? He replies, as eagles seem to be gathered from all quarters by some irresistible attraction to the point where they find their prey, so shall you from every quarter, be guided with infallible precision to the point where you shall find me.

It is thus that the Lord warns the Pharisees that they ought to have been occupied with other questions than the time; for only those that are ready shall go in to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. None but the wise shall understand. The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; you shall not have warning that it is within sight, or already on the way; noiselessly, steathily, as a thief in the night it shall come, and all who are accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, will be removed before an ungodly world can have notice of it.

Shall not that be a strange thing, says one, in the day when it cometh to pass, when, from among the active members of society, many being visited with the power of an endless life, shall suddenly disappear? They shall be missed from the earth, and no one shall know whither they have journeyed. From the solitary dwelling a beloved one is gone. In the retired hamlet there is a stir and an inquiry after some humble person, whom, in past days, no one much heeded. And now they themselves are sought after, but are nowhere to be found. In the city, in the crowded hall, in the places of business, in the seat of judgment, in the house of council, from the throne itself they are taken away; they are taken away from all ranks, from all occupations, of all ages. As, when the sons of the prophets sought after Elijah, whom God had caught up into heaven, so, everywhere, shall men seek and wonder.

Did ye not know it would be thus? Wherefore, being forewarned, would ye not yield to the preparation? Ye also might have shared in that blessedness.

The time is at hand, when they that are filthy, shall be filthy still; and they that are holy shall be holy still. "Behold," says Jesus, "I come quickly, and my reward is with me." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." For the saints shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom even for ever and ever. Amen.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to write a few lines for the Crisis. I feel that I love the Lord and his people, and desire to be found among the redeemed of the Lord at the last day, when Christ shall come to give his children rest. I was thinking this morning what a glorious meeting there will be at the morning of the resurrection, when the tares shall be severed from the wheat, and the little flock shall all be gathered home, forever to sing the praises of their blessed Redeemer; when kind friends that have so long been separated by death's cruel power shall meet to part no more. How foolish to choose the vain things of this world, rather than such a glorious possession. I think we have not long to stay in this world. Soon we shall see the King in his beauty, and Oh! how much we ought to be concerned about our eternal welfare.

I take great pleasure in reading your excellent paper, and feel that is a gift from on high. I am thankful for it, but feel that I am not as thankful as I ought to be for the many privileges that I enjoy, and do not prize them at their true value. It is something of a task for me to write, as I am but fourteen, and have never written for publication before.

I would say to those who have recently started on the road that leads to life,—let us be faithful; though we may meet with trials and difficulties in this present evil world, what are they compared with life everlasting?

Yours in hope of eternal life,

EMMA STEDWELL.

[We hope to hear again from our sister. May the Lord speed her on in her youthful pilgrimage to the city of our King. ED]

The Love Feast.

It was our privilege to attend a "love feast" with the colored brethren at "Ebenezer" on the afternoon of the 4th inst. We declined to commune with the masters at their popular church in the afternoon, because we would as soon commune with a man who robs a brother man of his gold, as with one who robs a brother man of himself; but we esteemed it a privilege, an honor, to come around the table of our Lord with these poor oppressed children of our heavenly Father. At the close of the communion services, an hour was allotted them for relating the dealing of the Lord with them. The scene that followed cannot be described. We will, however, give a few expressions taken down at the time from sixteen successive testimonies.

1. Very aged sister. "I rise first cause I least ob all. Jesus keep me poor old woman through dis hard winter—he take care of the good as anybody."

2. An old lady. "Forty-three years I been on dis journey. Glory be to God for de good fare on de way—de travel ob my soul am to cleave unto de Lord."

3. Aged woman. "I's happy to-day, but what is dis to what I shall be—only as de dim starlight to de sun straight over head. We riding de storm now, but soon be in port. Glory to Massa Jesus."

4. A decrepit old woman. "I feels encouraged to-day. I's girded up my loins to run de race, and I'll habe de prize—yes, I habe de prize, if I have to crawl on my old hands and knees ober de hard places."

5. Aged lady. "Five months I been afflicted; but Jesus been with me, when I could not get to you. Now I come to lay my shoulder to de gospel wheel anew. I's been lifting forty-seven years. I'll see de old wheel roll yet, tank de Lord."

6. Little trembling sister. "Glory to Jesus. Glory, glory, glory! My tongue can't talk, but my heart can say glory to Jesus! Glory, glory, glory!"

7. Middle aged man. "I remember bery well when God for Christ sake forgib my sins. From dat day Jesus been my portion, my treasure, my all."

8. Young man. "I nothing to say 'bout reckon so, or may be so, I know dat my Redeemer lives. I know too he neber fed me on food that made me sick. I'll be round Massa Jesus' table till I get fatted for heaben. All up hill, but Jesus at de top. I want see how it look up dare."

9. Young woman. "I wont stop to tell you 'bout do road I come along, but I'm here—I'm on de rock. I's an old-fashioned noisy Methodist. I's going up to see de 'hundred and forty-four thousand,' and help um-shout Glory, glory, glory to de Lamb."

10. Man about fifty-five. "I seek de Lord when a little boy—fader a sinner, moder a sinner. First, I go into de garret and pray little easy. I know nothing—say almost nothing—sometimes wait an hour, like de Quaker, till de spirit set my tongue going. I kept close to Massa Jesus two or three years—he feed me well, and I get to be a big stout boy in ligious things. Den he help me pray down in de kitchen with de old folks, and when my own fader and moder turn children and ask me learn dem to pray, den I no Quaker, but roar it out quick and loud. Children, Jesus can make you pray like de bishop."

11. Old man. "I very poor man; my paper good for nothing here, 'cause I han't got myself—but my paper good in heaven, 'cause Massa Jesus 'dorse it for me. He good curety—his purse neber fail. Bless de Lord Jesus Christ."

12. Woman of sixty. "I's a poor old slave-woman when God turned my darkness into light; but when de dungeon open, when de chain fell off, I felt like a little gal, and dis old cripple mighty spry on de foot yet."

13. Man of forty. "When I left de debil's army I join Captain Jesus during de war. I'm on the march to-day. I neber surrenders. When de wind blow hard, I stick de closer to de old flag-staff. Keep de colors flying, bredren, keep de colors flying, ebery sojer hab a crown by-and-by. Glory, Hallelujah!"

14. Middle-aged man. "Eber since Jesus turn my night into day, I lobe de day best. I going to de land where dere is no night."

15. Little boy. "Moder told me Jesus died for sinners—little boy-sinners. Jest a little while ago I believe it. Now de boy here, but Jesus take de sinner away. I lobe Jesus, cause he make me feel like I'll fly."

16. The steward. "I's looking for de 'good old way de prophets went.' I see it. I in it. Firm footing here. I'll go to glory in dis path. Yes, I'll go through glory up to heaven, and rest with Jesus, where glory will go through me."

These are but a few crumbs from the colored love feast. We reckon there must be a powerful revival in any white church in the city before sixteen successive testimonies will be heard indicating so much true piety and clear perception of Christ revealed in the soul—a present Savior from sin.

Rev. Dr. Bellamy.

A young minister who had more zeal than knowledge, and who rendered himself very offensive by the severity of his preaching, was complaining to the Doctor that his ministrations seemed to produce so little effect, and wondering why so few were converted under his labors. "Why," said Dr. Bellamy, "the reason is obvious enough; and if you will correct your error, go and learn wisdom of the fisherman. He does not go boisterously to work, as if he expected to bring the fish to his hook by giving them a regular scourging beforehand; but he casts in his line silently and waits patiently for a bite; and, whenever a fish comes to his hook, he is watchful to take advantage of the right moment for drawing it up; and he is thankful if he gets a few, and perseveres in the hope of getting more. If you would adopt this course as a fisher of men, you would have less reason to complain of the want of success."—Dr. Sprague.

A STARTLING POSITION, BUT NOT SO FAR WRONG.—The English correspondent of Zion's Herald, speaking of a gentleman of note, whose life and character have recently been portrayed by an able hand, says:—"He was an inveterate consumer of tobacco—a practice inconsistent with thorough Christian devotedness." This is undoubtedly the true view of the subject; yet it is to be feared that but few are prepared to take it, any more than thousands of professed christians were prepared, in the early history of the temperance reform, to admit that moderate drinking was wrong. But we hope to see the day when this unchristian practice will be treated as it deserves by an enlightened christian sentiment, and the millions of Christ's money, now squandered upon Christian lusts, will be turned over to his treasury, when there will be no want of means for the world's conversion.

We visited the Insane Asylum a day or two since, where we found a well known minister of the Presbyterian Church, a sad spectacle of insanity and woe, the result of the excessive use of the pernicious weed! and heard of another who is rapidly going the same way. And yet men in this practice stand up in the pulpit, and preach self-denial to others, and denounce "fleshly lusts." "O tempora, O mores!"—Nashville Christian Advocate.

PLACING OF LARGE STONES BY THE ANCIENTS.—It is well known that the mode by which the ancients raised the immense blocks of stone composing their pyramids and other structures, was by short pieces of wood. This mode of operation has been thus explained by a gentleman named Perigal, before the British Association: Suppose a block was to be raised up along the pyramid, in order to be placed in one of the courses of the masonry. It is brought by rollers to the base of the building. There all the rollers are removed except one near the centre. One end of the stone being now depressed to the ground, a pile of slips of wood is placed under it close to the centre, this pile being rather higher than the roller, and terminating in one narrow piece at the top. The stone is now tilted so as to bring the other end to the ground. It is now possible to put a similar pile of pieces of wood underneath, close beside the first. On that pile the block is tilted back to its former position, and so on till it is raised a little above the level of the next course of masonry. By rollers it is moved on to that platform, with a low pile of blocks once more near the centre underneath. Then the process of tilting and raising is again gone through; and so on until it has been raised up to the level where it is to take its place in the masonry.—Zion's Herald.

ORIGIN OF DISEASE.—I tell you honestly what I think is the cause of the complicated maladies of the human frames. It is their gormandizing and stuffing, and stimulating those organs (the digestive) to excess, thereby producing nervous disorder and irritation. The state of their minds is another grand cause—the fidgeting and discontenting yourself about that which can't be helped; passions of all kinds malignant passions and worldly cares pressing upon the mind, disturb the cereoral action, and do a great deal of harm.—Zion's Herald.

BIBLES.—A Bible distributor in Kentucky reports that of thirty thousand families he visited, one-fourth had no Bible, and many had never heard of such a book at all! There were three regularly ordained ministers also, who had no copy of the scriptures.

For the Children.

Old Age.

A WORD TO YOUTH.

Young friends, how do you treat the aged? Respectfully, kindly, attentively? When you meet an aged man or woman, bending under the weight of years and infirmities, do you bow reverently, walk softly, give place, yield your seat in the family, in the cars, the house of God? Do you check every rising thought of disrespect, ridicule, levity, the idle jest or rude laughter? Do you?

"Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honor the face of the old man, and fear thy God. I am the Lord." Lev. 19: 32.

Behold yonder aged man, feeble, tottering on the grave's brink. See you not upon his temples the snows of many winters? See you not the sunken eye, the bowed form, the thin hand upon whose surface the blue veins stand out like cords? Gone are the beauty and strength of manhood; and in that faded eye but little light is left, save that of love and kindness. The voice has lost its music, save the soft undertone of affection.

Oh, you in whose bounding veins young life yet lingers; and you in the full beauty and vigor of manhood, respect the aged! Speak gently, hush the rude laugh, check the idle jest, listen to the wisdom which is the voice of experience. Cheer him with kindly words, encircle him with your strong arm, and lead him as he descends the western hill of life, the shadows deepening into night—the white hairs upon his temple already drifting in the cool breeze which comes up from the shadow of death.

Honor the aged, that he may leave you his blessing on the threshold of the unknown land. Honor him, and God will raise up for you friends to remove the thorns from the last league of your own life-journey; for the sake of the weary one of long ago, who never wept for your ingratitude; whose bowed form never struggled with a weight of care or grief which you might have carried, while you walked carelessly along, intent upon your own ease and pleasure. Honor the aged for His sake who was old before the world was—whose life is from everlasting to everlasting.

"Honor him that feebly walketh
  With his staff, the white-haired sage,
God will curse the wretch that mocketh
  Hoary hairs, with slighted age."

—Golden Rule.

STAND ERECT, walk erect, sit erect, inhale freely, fully, fill the lungs to the very bottom. Health demands this, especially of persons in sedentary life. Never allow yourself in a stooping posture.—Golden Rule.

FOPS.—Look at that young man, smoking his cigar, reading his newspaper, with his feet perched upon a desk, a window, or out of the window, puffing away. Is this gentlemanly?—Golden Rule.

REST IN THE LORD.

WRITTEN FOR MY AFFLICTED FRIEND N. A——.

Rest in the Lord, my weary heart,
Enclasped in arms of tenderest love;
Hence never more shalt thou depart,
Nor far from this sweet refuge rove.

Rest in the Lord, nor strive to gain
A righteousness that is thine own;
Seek not to clothe thyself again,—
Be found in Christ, in him alone.

Rest in the Lord, my troubled soul,
Bid every fear and care depart;
Though floods of sorrow roud thee roll,
In Him they cannot reach thy heart.

Rest in the Lord, and when the woe
And toil of mortal strife is o'er,
Then, where life's placid waters flow,
Rest in the Lord, and weep no more.

Pouring out of the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Ghost was poured out on the day of Pentecost agreeably to promise, and all the disciples were filled with it, and began to speak as the Spirit gave them utterance. Christ had previously said to them, "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." "He will guide you into all truth." "But tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." When this endowment came, the disciples were fully qualified to preach the whole counsel of God to a perishing world; they were then made able ministers of the New Testament by the will or commandment of God.

God has set in his church, "first, apostles; secondarily, prophets; thirdly, teachers." These did not all enjoy the same gifts, for, says the Apostle, "to one is given, by the Spirit, the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge, by the same Spirit; to another faith, by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing, by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kind of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues: but all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit." Will any one have the presumption to say that this body of Christ, or temple of God filled with the Holy Ghost, did not teach the whole counsel of God?

The Holy Ghost, on the day of Pentecost, and subsequently, wrote out upon the fleshly tables of the Apostles' hearts the whole truth for this dispensation necessary to their salvation; consequently the world is under the administration of the Spirit and has been ever since it was poured out. The Apostle says, "shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious?" This ministration of the Spirit or righteousness so far exceeds in glory the one in the former dispensation, that it had no glory when compared with the one that excelleth. It was like the sun when compared with the stars of heaven; for when the sun appears to our view, all the stars disappear, and why? because the greater and more majestic light totally eclipses all the others. Precisely so with the two administrations.

If, then, the church and world are under the Holy Spirit's administration, should not all meekly bow and listen to what the Spirit saith to the churches? Whenever the Spirit of God speaks, it always says something worthy of our serious consideration; something intelligible, instructive, and beneficial to mankind; something that comes from God, even the word of God, which is the sword of the Spirit; and if we would wield the sword successfully, and divide the word correctly, so as to give to all a portion of meat in due season, we must apply ourselves in studying the oracles of God, given by the Holy Ghost, since the ascension of Christ and the outpouring of the Spirit. Our whole duty to God and man is found this side of that point of time, for He, (the Spirit,) says Jesus "shall guide you into all truth." Now then, whatever the Spirit of God imposes upon his dear people as a rule of christian obligation, that should be strictly adhered to and obeyed by every believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. But, should any man, or woman, for the sake of a selfish interest, force upon the church of Christ any obligation which God by the agency of the Holy Ghost has not, it should be rejected at once by every law-abiding citizen of the household of faith. The tendency of real truth is to unite and cement the affections of the family of Christ: error seeks to accomplish the reverse.

May God enable each dear Brother and Sister to clearly discriminate between the two Dispensations, Jewish and Gentile; the two Prophets, Moses and Christ, and their teachings; the two Wills or Testaments, Old and New, and the two laws—law of the Spirit, and the law of sin and death. Rom. 8: 2.

"Behold, I Come Quickly."

Pilgrim to the celestial city, traveler to the Kingdom, does your heart feel sad? do you sigh for that land "where all is fair?" where parted friends shall meet? where the loved of earth, who are now laid 'neath the clods of the valley, smitten by the cruel hand of death, shall join in one glad anthem round the throne of God and the Lamb? Do the trials of this life thicken your pathway, and temptations remind you that the perilous times mentioned by the beloved apostle of the Gentiles have indeed come? do you sigh for the coming of Jesus, and like the Seer of Patmos, say, from a weary heart, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly?" Lift up your head! for the long-loved, absent One says, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me!" This is cheering, is it not? Soon, very soon the conflict will be over, and thy weary heart find peace, never-ending peace, with Jesus.

Signs on every hand bespeak his coming near. The nations are angry; the voice of war and tumult is on every hand, from the polar region of Russia to the sunny land of Spain; from the north, south, east and west, signs there's no mistaking proclaim "that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Men are going after evil spirits and doctrines of devils with all the haste which the spirit of evil in their hearts can entice them to make, and around us on every hand is peril, evil, and commotion. But God has said, "my grace is sufficient for thee," and He has promised to direct our steps. Then prove faithful, pilgrim; hold fast that which thou hast, that none take thy crown. True, the way is through perils and dangers, but God is the God of the faithful.

Backslider! "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." He has said, "Behold I come quickly." Do you not see your danger? do you not see that soon hope will end, and your doom will be sealed? then will you in view of this still continue away from your Father's house? the prodigal may now return, soon it will be too late. Then now, while the door is open, repent; for the Lord of Hosts hath said, "return unto me, and I will return unto you."

Sinner! Jesus hath said, "Behold I come quickly." Will you not heed the warning and come to Jesus ere 'tis too late? now you may have mercy, and eternal life is within your reach. Will you not heed the warning and come? is it not better to suffer affliction with the people of God, and have eternal life at last, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, and then die?

Haste! sinner, haste! while there's mercy
for thee,
The Bridegroom is coming! flee, ling'rer, flee.

The Third Heaven.

What, and where is the "third heaven?" Some of our friends seem to think that it is the heaven to come—the "new heaven." I do not think so. The reason why I do not think so is, there is no Bible for it. The heavens of old, which Peter speaks of, cannot be the first heaven, for he says, HEAVENS—plural—that proves too much. The heavens that are now, which he speaks of, cannot be the second heaven, for "HEAVENS"—plural—is not heaven which are now! That is not good grammar, or good sense. Look at the 3rd chap. of 2nd Pet. again. The heaven which is now is the "FIRST HEAVEN"—so says the Book—Rev. 21: 1. "The first heaven," we are told there, "passed away." That is, this state of the heavens now existing.

What then is the "third heaven?" It is written that Christ "ascended far above all heavens." He must then have gone above two heavens, at least, for He ascended above a plural heavens. God is said to "ride on (dwell in) the heaven of heavens." This must be the "third;" for "heavens" is plural, and "heaven of heavens must be as many as three. The Bible tells us of three heavens; 1. "The open firmament," where the fowls fly. 2. The place or region of the sun, moon, and stars. 3. Where God and angels are—where the Lord Jesus ascended. Paul in vision was "caught" there—"away there"—I apprehend. But he was caught to Paradise! Yes; where is Paradise? Where "the tree of life" is. See Rev. 2: 7. Where is the "tree of life?" In the New Jerusalem. See Rev. 22: 2. Where is the New Jerusalem? It will come down "from God out of heaven." Of course it must be up there, where God is, in the "third heaven." Let us be simple!

Resurrection.

"If a man die, shall he live again?"—Job.

The Bible presents to the eye of the saint a "world to come," in contradistinction to "the present world,"—and future "eternal life," in contradistinction to our present brief life. Were our hopes confined to this world, this life, truly we should be "of all men most miserable." We are "of few days," and though few, they are, nevertheless, "full of trouble." Soon we are "cut down" by death. But does this end our existence forever? Or shall we "live again?" Ah! this question has inspired thousands of hearts with burning rapture. The gloom of the cold grave is destroyed, when we pause to think we shall "live again." The dread of death vanishes away, when we think we shall "live again." We follow fellow pilgrims to the silent tomb, and weep as we deposit them there, but we wipe away our tears when we think they will "live again." Our hearts are made sad by the intelligence that our affectionate, devoted friends are in the embrace of death, but we rejoice when we think they shall "live again." Yes, the righteous will "live again," and live forever. Short life will be exchanged for eternal life. Mortality will be exchanged for immortality. Sorrow will be exchanged for songs of immortal melody. O! for the resurrection life!

Perversion of the Scriptures an Avoidable Ignorance.

BRO. GRANT:—In one of my recent tours into your State, I listened to a discourse from an approved preacher of one of the large organizations of the day, founded upon the 68th Psalm and the 18th verse. "Thou hast ascended on high; thou hast led captivity captive; thou hast received gifts for men," &c.

The Rev. Preacher, in the course of his exposition, arrived at his third head; viz., the gifts purchased by the death, resurrection, and ascension of our Divine Master. This head he divided into four parts:

1. He purchased the Holy Spirit.
2. The Holy Scriptures.
3. The Holy Ministry.
4. Heaven.

Upon each of the first three of these subdivisions, he animadverted very briefly, and having arrived to the fourth, he remarked to the audience,—"of this we know but little or nothing." And then, to substantiate this statement as true, he quoted, as he supposed, the scriptures to prove his correctness. Cor. 2: 9,—"But as it is written, eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man"—TO CONCEIVE—"the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." His emphasis was now confined to the term conceive, observing that while we could conceive of many things earthly, such as fine landscapes, fine countries and fine country seats, &c., yet we could form no right conceptions of the Heaven which God would give to his people. Now, had he not intended to pervert the true teachings of the Bible, or were he not avoidably ignorant of the text he quoted to prove his 4th head true, he certainly would not have contradicted the plain word of the Lord.

Putting, however, the most favorable construction upon the sermon, I can but think the man meant to teach what he thought were the true teachings of the Bible, on the subject upon which he thus erroneously animadverted.

Had this authoritative teacher read his Bible with more care, he would have seen the errors into which people often fall, by quoting scripture from hearing others, rather than from the text as it stands in the revealed Word. Every observer of the quotations often given of the Bible know, that the above passage has, most generally, been quoted as did the above noticed preacher; but had he studied his Bible more to know its true teachings, he would not have dared to contradict the great Apostle of the Gentiles, who adds, in the next verse,—"But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit."

How important, in these last days of peril, that we obey the Lord Jesus, and "SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES."

Truly yours, seeking for truth, and in hope of eternal life through Jesus, the great Life-giver, at His coming.

An Amiable Woman.

What is sweeter than an amiable woman? See how interestingly she moves in the midst of loving and loved friends! Father, mother, brothers, sisters, husband, children, neighbors, and all connected with the circle of her life are attracted with the loveliness of her spirit, and benefited by the purity of her example. She is surrounded with a halo of constant sunshine. Her countenance wears a continual smile, even in the midst of circumstances of grief and affliction. Her words, so fitly chosen and so well adapted, fall with enchanting power into the hearts of those with whom she converses, and create an affection almost angelic. She makes a paradise of her husband's home, and her children find no society so delightful as hers. Her company is ever acceptable to those around her, and her coming footsteps are always welcomed with real pleasure. Where the poor and needy are, there she is with words of pity and acts of benevolence. Where sickness and death intrude, her hand smoothes the pillow, administers the cordial, and her sympathizing heart seeks to assuage the grief of the mourners. She is but little lower than an angel, and is a bright, redeeming star in the horizon of this fallen world!

My Tour and its Lesson.

BRO. GRANT:—I have returned from R. I., and the east part of Mass. Preached in Providence Sunday, March 15. The Brethren at the Pearl Street Chapel appear to be in a good condition. They love preaching—love the word—the prophetic word. There is an especial interest in the prophecies of the book of Revelation. Perhaps this may at times secure one unfavorable result; the want of attention to, not the want of love for, the practical use and application of the word. They need steady preaching, and if they could sustain it, I have no doubt would prosper much more. There are good, strong, old-fashioned, veteran brethren in that meeting—men who "have borne the burden and heat of the day," and you know where to find them.

I went, on Monday, to Peace Dale. Just got a glimpse of Bro. H. L. H., in the stage, as I passed upon a load of cotton—a man who knew Eld. C., he said, giving me that mode of conveyance, instead of my trudging over from K. on foot in the mud. Here I preached three evenings to good and solemn congregations, though the weather was bad, and the mud deep. I think good was done. Here too, I could see the results of an attempt, at least, to preserve order and system in the operations of the church, and the effect of that variety of manifestation in presenting the word, which I deem essential to the promotion of the church in her growth in grace and permanent prosperity. There is a good interest in the doctrine of the Bible, and a love for the appearing and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Next came to Providence, where I was taken sick with a billious attack, which well nigh stopped all farther progress. But owing to the blessing of God, and the ready and powerful application of medicine, I left, Saturday P. M., notwithstanding the persistent opposition of Dr. Towne, for New Bedford. Here I preached two Sundays. The first was in great weakness, and was sick during the week. There are many old and tried friends of the cause here. They gave me a hearty welcome, and I felt happy to speak the words of life to them again. I have spoken to that congregation a great many times since 1843. Having preached to one of the Methodist churches in the city before that time, I was acquainted with quite a number when they came into the belief of the Lord's immediate coming. It is always refreshing to meet with the old pilgrim brethren. But many others have come in since, and a number have died. Others are feeble in health. Oh! how they wish for deliverance! It was here that I first heard Father Miller. What changes have come since then! The Lord has not come. He will come! Will we hold on? "Salvation is nearer than when we believed."

During my stay I preached two evenings at Mattapoisett, where Bro. Benj. Batchelor labors. This Brother seems to be instant in season and out of season. His preaching is a model. The church is built up over there, and blessed with a good revival. This has been the object of the effort. Blessings will attend the administration of the word "rightly divided."

I also visited the Head of the River and preached once. Called upon Father White, found him and his family strong in faith. This ancient disciple still waits in faith and hope of the revelation of Messiah's glory. At the Head of the River they need labor, and brethren in the ministry ought to go there more.

Sabbath, April 5, was an interesting meeting with the brethren in Fairhaven. They always love preaching, practical or doctrinal, and seem to be in a good condition, "looking for the mercy of our Lord, unto eternal life." The meeting was full. Bro. Brewer will locate among them, which will be profitable.

The instruction is this: The gospel will secure adherents, and churches will prosper if there is attention and order in the work. If there is division and strife, carelessness, selfishness, riding doctrinal hobbies all the time, preachers dictating what people shall hear, to preserve their identity, or people or persons dictating to preachers what they shall preach, most likely there will be "confusion and every evil work." I observe, there should be more plain, practical, general exposition of the gospel, in many places. In some they need doctrinal sermons or lectures. In all, steady preaching; in most, where they have them not, they need pastors. I know of some good congregations, where they, I should presume, could support a pastor as well as to have the labors of evangelists only. Why not? Cannot agree! or cannot find the man. They must agree, or must find the minister! or they will suffer still more.

I learn that the want of harmony and wisdom, perhaps a little policy, not to rob other churches, but to keep them from robbing us, is the cause of much drawback; not the want of love for the truth. And the preachers want a little more of Paul's "guile." God has a long-tried, waiting, watching people, who love Christ and his coming.

W. S. CAMPBELL.

For the Crisis.

Watch and Pray.

It is very noticeable how often this duty is enjoined in the word of God. How careful our Savior was to impress it upon his followers, to urge them again and again to watch and pray. This is significant and decisive of corresponding danger and peril. Christ knew it. He felt it, for He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. He has given us the most solemn warnings in respect to our danger, and the most instructive example as to the way of safety. Although He was himself pure and holy, he watched and prayed, continuing even all night in prayer to God. Let us think of this example in the time of our severe trial, and lift our hearts to Him in confidence and hope. He who has struggled all night in prayer, and sweat as it were great drops of blood, will easily sympathize with us in our struggles; yea more, He will through these very conflicts and sufferings develop in us a quiet greatness, a calm reliance and sweet repose in His goodness and love which we should not otherwise experience. The great Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering; and it is by participation in His sufferings that we enter into His rest.

It is not the pleasure of God to remove us from temptation and trial in this world, but to give us strength to resist and overcome them. This is the plan of infinite wisdom and goodness. Let us accept it with submission and gratitude, counting it all joy, even when we fall into divers temptations, knowing that the trial of our faith worketh patience.

But we are to remember that our own strength is weakness and our wisdom folly. We are to rely on Divine strength, and seek deliverance and salvation in the way of God's appointment, by watching and praying; and in no other way can we hope for safety. These are the two great defences in the christian warfare. We enter upon the conflict with them, and never lay them aside till the victory is won and the enemy is entirely vanquished. They are the defences with which our Savior warded off the fiery darts of the Devil, and he has left them for the protection of his followers. They must be united against the temptations by which we are surrounded. They are of little service when separated, and avail nothing against our spiritual foes.

Watchfulness without prayer is presumption. It is but half the command, and of itself cannot secure the tempted soul. So prayer without watchfulness is solemn mockery of God, and brings not the Divine blessing to sustain and comfort the heart. In the great christian warfare, in the protracted struggle for mastery in all things over the world, flesh and the Devil, the two must go together. This is absolutely necessary for our success. It is God's appointed method. It is the way in which he will shield us and defend us. We must accept it or perish. There is no alternative. It is a law in his moral kingdom, and must be obeyed. Food and drink are necessary for animal life. Take away one, and the other is of little account; the body soon dies. So, watching and praying are necessary for spiritual life. Take away one and the other fails to sustain the soul. We repeat it again, the two must be united.

The christian must all along through this life, watch and pray. He must watch in the first place against inward foes. The heart of man, in its natural state, is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked.

The Holy Spirit in regeneration breaks the reigning power of sin, but sanctifies the heart gradually, and develops the christian character through struggle and conflict. Evil thoughts and desires are springing up in his unsanctified heart, and these, unless carefully watched and restrained, lead to evil purposes and forbid action. There is within the christian a strong garrison of mighty warriors, making every opportunity to regain what is lost, and entrench themselves more strongly.

In the second place he must watch against outward foes. He must learn their character and strength, and not be ignorant of their devices. The world, with its riches, and honors, and pleasures; the Devil wily and malignant, going about seeking whom he may devour, are ever ready and seeking to destroy the spiritual life in the christian to regain their former place and dominion. They have great advantage from former occupancy and intimate alliance with his inward foes. His old sinful associations, and habits too, are all against the life of godliness in his soul.

Now can any christian, after learning the strength, the character and plans of his adversaries, feel that there is no need of the greatest care and watchfulness? Indeed, can he fail to feel that, in addition to all his own efforts, he must have Divine aid, or perish? Let him consider the weakness and treachery of his own heart. How often has it deceived and failed him! Let him consider the circumstances in which he has fallen, and be more circumspect and cautious in regard to them in the future.

But this is not all. It is only the first part of his duty. He must, then, in addition, knowing his adversaries, seeing his danger and feeling his weakness, seek Divine support and deliverance with the greatest importunity and perseverance. He must pray, and if it need be, continue all night in prayer, as his Savior did. Prayer must be ardent and constant, the very habit and life of the soul. Indeed, he must, on the one hand, watch with the same care and vigilance as if every thing depended on himself; and on the other hand, pray with the same constancy and importunity as if every thing depended on God.

This is christian watchfulness and prayer. This is in accordance with the precept and example of the Divine Master. It is safe for the soul and pleasing to God; but all inattention to our danger, or remissness in guarding against it, or indifference in prayer, is sinful and perilous. It violates the command and rejects the example of our Lord. If it were necessary for Him, who was always pure and holy, thus to watch and pray, much more is it for us his sinful disciples. We cannot otherwise be saved. We must use the means if we would secure the end—the salvation of our souls. Our only hope and safety in this struggle for immortality is in Jesus Christ. Through him we shall be more than conquerors. His grace is sufficient for us. But we must use that grace, we must work out our salvation, we must co-operate with the Holy Spirit in the way of his appointment. Herein is our deliverance. Oh, let us thus live and labor! Thus let us draw nigh unto Christ, cherishing his Spirit in our hearts, and no more grieving his infinite tenderness and love.

BRO. GRANT:—The Crisis, so filled with the soul-cheering pennings of those of like precious faith, is to us, like sweet spring showers, giving new life to our world-chilled faith, which the Sun of righteousness, with its healing beams, has supplied with vitality during our long winter of deferred hope, and it must be sustained. We moved from Meriden to this place last winter, and have found a loving little church here, who are faithfully fulfilling the Apostolic injunction,—"Forget not the assembling of yourselves together," and they are thereby growing in grace, and becoming better prepared for the great meeting of the church of the first-born, whose names stand registered in the heavenly archives.

Bro. Mathewson preaches to us once in four weeks. He was with us the last Sabbath in March, and we had a most blessed communion season, that will not soon be forgotten by me. We intend to observe this holy ordinance whenever he is with us. It is too much neglected by us as a people, is it not? "As oft as ye do this, ye (not simply show that you are professors of religion—nay! but ye) do show forth the Lord's death till he come." I am still very deeply in love with the "blessed hope," and through Christ I expect to greet the saints of God in the pearly-gated city! Your waiting, watching, striving sister,

M. L. DURAND.

P. S. I know the Crisis is not an advertising medium, but being in the Millinery and Dressmaking business, and needing more help, may I not ask if there are not among my Advent sisters some one or two of each trade who would like to work for me the coming summer. Home comforts and good meetings, as well as good wages, guarantied. References, Bro. and Sister Mathewson, Bro. Munger, &c.

Spiritualism.

No. IV.

SPIRITUALISM AT TREMONT TEMPLE.—Last Sunday, at the Tremont Temple, Rev. Mr. Kalloch alluded to Spiritualism in his morning discourse.

He said, substantially, that among the cloud of witnesses viewing the christian race are our departed friends, those who have been with us upon earth. And here I am aware that I take ground different from the church. I speak my own views only, for which I only am responsible. I believe that our departed friends are constantly with us; that death does not prevent their ministering to our wants. Can death obliterate memory and impair the mental faculties of immortal beings? Of what avail is the argument that our friends would be made unhappy by witnessing our sins and the degradation of earth's sons. If this is true, then we can with truth say that the angels are unhappy. We all believe that Jesus sees us, but do not feel that he is made unhappy by contact with human wo.

"Yes, I believe that beneath Spiritualism, spiritualism so called, there is a fundamental truth. Although I believe it to be a delusion when considered as a religion, yet I repeat it, that beneath the askings and questionings, the frivolities of the hour, its contradictions, the follies and mistakes of its advocates, and its erroneous doctrines, there is a grand truth.

"Men are sick of dried up and musty creeds, and are forced to seek in Spiritualism a solution of the mystery of death.

"Yes, our departed friends are witnesses to the christian race." SPECTATOR.

We clipped the above from the Boston Daily Herald of April 21st. We do not doubt that "immortal beings" continue to remember and retain their faculties, but where is the proof that man in his present state is included among them? If we look into the Bible, we find it not there; but very plain testimony to the contrary.—"Shall mortal man be more just than God?" Job. 4: 17. When speaking of man in a state of death, Job says,—"His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, and he perceiveth it not of them." Job 14: 21. David in speaking of his child, says, "he is dead . . . he shall not return to me." 2 Sam. 12: 23.

In what state are people when dead? "The dead know not any thing." Eccl. 9: 5. If they do not know any thing, how can they communicate any intelligence? In answer to the question,—"Can death obliterate memory and impair the mental faculties?"—we answer, yes. Hear David in the 146th Ps. 4th ver. He says of man,—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Hear the wise man,—"There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave (sheol—state of the dead) whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10.

These scriptures teach most plainly, that death "impairs the mental faculties." We have to learn that the Bible in a single instance teaches that man will be immortal before the resurrection, at the coming of Christ. We believe, instead of there being "a fundamental truth beneath Spiritualism," that there is a fundamental error, which is the doctrine taught by Satan to our first parents in Eden, and re-echoed by Spiritualists, which is couched in the language—"Ye shall not surely DIE." This is the foundation on which is built the doctrine of the Catholic's purgatory, prayers to saints, eternal misery, and modern Spiritualism; and by means of which, the literal resurrection of the dead is ignored, the personal coming of Christ rejected, and the saint's inheritance upon the earth denied.

We do not doubt that "men are sick of dried up and musty creeds;" and we would exhort them to return to the "old paths" of the Bible, instead of rejecting it and seeking unto "familiar spirits," or demons, who are trying to demonstrate that their great leader, Satan, told the truth in Eden, when he declared that man is immortal.

A Spiritualist, of long standing and high repute among them, and of considerable learning and science, said, when speaking of the reputed spirits of our friends,—"I have at length found them all to be liars. Their goodness and religion were all a pretense." All Spiritualists will find at last, that they have been following a "refuge of lies," forged by Satan, and taught by demons, for the purpose of overthrowing christianity. We have no feelings of bitterness or unkindness towards those who believe in Spiritualism, but we are satisfied the time has come to speak plainly, and call things by their right names, lest we be found guilty at last for not sounding a warning note, when we saw our neighbor in danger of destruction.

We are well satisfied that Spiritualism is now in its childhood, but will soon grow to be a man of sin.

Tracts! Tracts! Tracts!

A fresh lot—new and old. Bro. Hastings has just issued more than three hundred thousand pages of tracts for the summer campaign, and from him we have received a generous supply including all the old standard tracts on his list, some of which we have long been out of, and an abundance of new tracts among which may be mentioned,

1. "PLAIN TRUTHS." One of the most valuable tracts extant,—perhaps the most valuable, taking up eleven distinct points of scripture doctrine, carrying the reader from the creation to the new creation. First,—the proposition to be proved is distinctly stated. Second,—a number of plain, positive texts are quoted on the point without note or comment. Third,—the position is then fortified by numerous extracts from the most noted writers in the christian church, making a most invincible array of argument upon the points named. It is very convenient for reference, and might well be stored up in the mind. We trust it will be scattered by TEN THOUSANDS, for it will undoubtedly do immense good. Get a lot of them and let your neighbors see some of the plain truths. It is 28 pages 12mo. Price $3 per 100—5 cts. single.

2. Then here we have the "KEY OF TRUTH," by W. Sheldon, which is already known and valued,—price $1. per 100—2 cts. single. This, too, is worthy of a wide circulation. Let us scatter it.

3. Then here is an eight page tract,—"THE DAY OF JUDGMENT," by St. Cyril of Jerusalem, A. D. 350. A warning that comes from one, who, being dead, yet speaketh, whose words have had in them enough of life to keep them alive for fifteen hundred years. Read the words of the good old father in Israel, and be warned and strengthened by them. Price 1 per 100, 2 cts. single.

4. Next we have "ANCIENT LANDMARKS;" Let us look over the sett.—No. 1. The coming and kingdom of Christ by 20,000, Baptists—taken from the old Baptist confession of faith—that's worth a dollar to give to your Baptist neighbors, if we could't get it cheaper. No. 2. The Duration of the earth, by Dr. ADAM CLARKE, arguing that the world endures six thousand years, that we are so near the end of it, that there is no hope of a millennium this side of it. This is a good tract for our Methodist brethren. No. 3. The Hope and Duty of the church by good old Mathew Henry, showing that we ought always to be watching for our Savior's appearing. —These three numbers we have had before; but here is No. 4.—"The Restitution," by St. Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem, fifteen hundred years ago, teaching the doctrine of the restored world, and backed up by two or three other noted fathers. After this comes No. 5. A Warning Voice, by Dr. Cotton Mather, who, a hundred and fifty years ago, lifted up his voice to foretell the dissolution, renewal, and purification of the world by fire. It is full of powerful truth, earnestly spoken. So much for the Landmarks; and then, folded up with them are the "Forty Questions on Immortality," with pretty plain answers from the word of God. This makes six four-page tracts all folded together in a sett,—all of them can be taken apart and distributed separately, and the price of the whole sett is simply 5 cts. single, or $3 per 100 setts. Scatter them.

Besides these, the questions and the "Warning Voice" are made up into another sett, and furnished together at 2 cts. single, or $1.00 per 100.

5. Finally, we have the "OLIVE LEAVES," a neat little series of 4 page tracts, full of practical warmth—just the things to scatter broadcast. No. 1, is—Little children, love one another,—affectionately addressed to all the children of God scattered abroad. We could hardly wish a greater blessing on our friends, than that all of them should read and practice the teachings of this little tract and love one another. God speed this Olive Leaf. It has been brought by some dove across the Atlantic, we are glad to see it here—may it prove a token of the speedy assuaging of the waters of strife which have deluged us so long. No. 2, is—"The One Resting Place,"—a sweet tract. Give it to your heavy-laden friend. Read it yourself and learn how to rest in Christ. Part of this is from the pen of Brother H. Bonar, of Scotland; part from an unknown writer, and the rest from the publisher's pen. No. 3, is—"My Friend," by H. L. H. It speaks of the surpassing excellence of the Friend that sticketh closer than a brother, and presents him for the acceptance of a friendless race. These three form the sett—price 3 cts. single sett, $1.50 per 100 setts.

Now Brn., send in your orders for these tracts and scatter them like seed in the furrows—water them with prayers and tears, and see if they do not bring forth fruit in the day of Jesus Christ. God speed the tract enterprise—it has already been productive of great good.

Now send your orders to this office or to H. L. Hastings, Rochester, N. Y. The poor can have them free, as usual, for Bro. Hastings scatters tracts as he does preaching, with or without price.

The law requires that all tracts should be pre-paid. Persons sending for tracts should order at least, eight ounces, for then the postage is only half a cent per ounce, while if less are ordered, the price is one cent each, which in some cases would cost four or five cents an ounce. About thirty or forty cents worth of tracts at the wholesale price, will weigh eight ounces. Persons should, if possible, order as many as that.

Let these tracts be widely scattered. Preaching Brn. in the East can get them at this office, and those at the West can be supplied by Bro. Hastings, at Rochester, on liberal terms. His office is 49 Arcade Gallery, in the Post Office building.

Golden Rule.

This is the name of one of our exchanges, published in New York, monthly, at 50 cts, per annum, edited by David F. Newton. We are delighted with its visits.

1. Because it advocates real practical christianity, that renovates the whole man.

2. It takes a bold stand against sin in all its forms, regardless of the frowns of the scorner.

3. Because its articles are short, well written, and have a heart in them.

We wish our Bro. much success. The Golden Rule should be in every family. Direct to "Golden Rule," Box 1212, New York.

A Valuable Work.

The following prospectus will give some idea of it.

"The Emphatic Diaglott; containing the original Greek text of the New Testament with an interlineary translation, in which every Greek word is literally and grammatically construed as it stands in the book; a new emphatic version, based on the literal translation and the labors of the most eminent Biblical critics and translators, with philological and exegetical foot notes; to which is affixed, an alphabetical index, containing all the geographical and proper names, occurring in the New Testament, with difficult Greek words and phrases critically examined. The whole forming a complete guide to the correct reading and study of the books of the New Covenant."

Published by Wilson and Cockroft, Halifax, (Eng.) John Wilson, bookseller.

The work is to be published by subscription, "in numbers containing 32 pages each, at $2.00 for 12 Nos. Individuals who may wish to subscribe will please send their names and address to the publishers without delay, and when the requisite number of copies (500) are ordered, No. 1 will be issued, on receiving which, each subscriber will please remit his subscription. Address, Wilson and Cockroft, Geneva, Kane Co., Ill."

One great advantage of this work is expressed in the following language of the publisher: "The left hand column will contain the Greek Text according to DR. J. J. GRIESBACH'S Recension, and interlined with it, a literal word-for-word translation, wherein the corresponding English word is placed directly under its counterpart."

This work should be in the hands of every one who reads the Bible in English; and we hope that we may soon have, not only the New Testament, but, the whole Bible arranged in the same manner. We have seen a specimen of the work, and are delighted with it. We have reason to believe that it will be the most faithful translation on the subject of life and death, that has ever been given in the English language. Send your orders addressed as above, to Wilson and Cockroft. We will forward any orders sent to us.

Books! Books!

The Voice of the Church on the Reign of Christ—a fresh lot received. We hope none of our readers will be without this book which, to use the language of E. Burnham, is "the best book in the Advent Library." Certainly we know of no work which rolls in such an avalanche of testimony against the popular notions on this subject. A preacher, who does not agree with the position taken by the author, said, he would not take $5 for the book if he could not get another like it. Price $1, postage 18 cts. $9 per dozen. Send in your orders.

2. SPIRITUALISM A SATANIC DELUSION AND A SIGN OF THE TIMES, by Wm. Ramsey, D. D. We regret to learn that Bro. Ramsey is in feeble health and has gone South to seek, if possible, relief from consumption, that deadly foe. We are glad that there are hopes of his recovery, and meanwhile, he may have the pleasure of knowing that he still speaks through the press. This work on spiritualism, which is by far the best that we have seen, is still called for. The second edition is now issued, and we have a good supply. The price is also reduced so that we furnish it in cloth gilt binding, for 40 cents, postage 8 cts.; and in elegant enameled stiff paper covers, much neater than the first edition, 30 cts., postage 5 cts. We hope our friends will spread this book as an antidote to the soul-destroying delusion that is entangling so many thousands in the meshes of Satan's net.

3. THE INFIDEL'S FATE—a neat little volume, written by a converted infidel, and giving an account of a large number of infidels, with a record of their blasphemous lives, and untimely and awful deaths. No candid person can read these well-attested facts without seeing clearly, that infidelity from beginning to end is a curse to its votaries, giving them misery here and no hope hereafter. Some of these accounts are awful and thrilling in the extreme, but they are fully certified by numerous affidavits, and the author gives them as a warning of the dangers which through God's mercy he escaped. This work is an admirable antidote for this half-grown infidelity, which we see so prevalent in these days. Let the fruits be seen and men will shudder at the thought of warring against God and his word. Neatly bound in cloth gilt. We have a few copies of this work which we will send, postage paid, for twenty-five cents. Four copies for a dollar.

4. CHURCH DEBTS, by Wm. Ramsey, D. D. Well worth reading as a warning against the wicked and foolish pride that shows itself in many of the churches of the present day. The price of this is reduced, so that we will send it postage paid, for 38 cts. When the churches of Philadelphia read it, they were so shamed and stirred that they went to work and paid up two hundred thousand dollars of church debts. The book has pith in it as those who have read it can testify.

5. DOBNEY ON FUTURE PUNISHMENT. A few copies left and there will be no more published at present. A very calm, candid, able argument proving that the destruction of the wicked is the teaching of the Bible. This edition contains as an appendix, the state of the dead by John Milton.

We will send the work post paid on receipt of the price 75 cts.

All these books can be had here, or at Rochester, of H. L. Hastings, or of Moses Cummings, Irvington, N. J., at the office of the Christian Messenger, also of J. T. Howland, 229 Broadway, N. Y.

Send in orders to the publisher, H. L. Hastings, 49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

Henry Ward Beecher.

This celebrated clergyman has directly or otherwise, interposed the 58th Psalm, versified by Watts, against the decision of the United States court, in the Dred Scott case. He read this Psalm, in his religious service in his church, Brooklyn, N. Y., and thence, it has got out through the papers with the impetus of his earnest and active will—in the form following:

At a prayer-meeting held in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, the pastor, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in view of the recent decision of the "unjust Judges" of the Supreme Court of the United States—disfranchising a citizen of the United States because his skin is black—read to the meeting the following pertinent hymn, by Dr. Watts; a hymn which has been sung by our forefathers, on both sides of the ocean, in a thousand christian congregations, and which may need to be sung a thousand times again, before there shall be an end of rebuking those "who have fellowship with integrity, and who frame mischief by a law."

A Hymn for the Supreme Court of the United States.

Judges, who rule the world by laws,
Will ye despise the righteous cause,
When the oppressed before you stands?
Dare ye condemn the righteous poor,
And let rich sinners go secure,
While gold and greatness bribe your hands?

Have ye forgot, or never knew,
That God will judge the Judges too?
High in the heavens His justice reigns:
Yet you invade the rights of God,
And send your bold decrees abroad,
To bind the conscience in your chains!

Th' Almighty thunders from the sky—
Their grandeur melts, their titles die—
They perish like dissolving frost;
As empty chaff, when whirlwinds rise,
Before the sweeping tempest flies,
So shall their hopes and names be lost.

Thus shall the vengeance of the Lord
Safety and joy to saints afford;
And all that hear shall join and say—
"Sure there's a God that rules on high—
A God that hears His children cry,
And will their sufferings well repay."

—Evening Post.

This is very well so far as it goes,—but the circumstances compel us to think that Mr. Beecher has yet to learn that this is the scriptural character of all and every earthly government as a whole, our own not excepted.

The unerring, and divinely chosen symbols of all Gentile dominions are beasts. These beasts are monstrous, ferocious and devilish! And in every instance, the most monstrous, and most Satanic, exist ON TO "the Judgment." Dan. 7: 8; Rev. 17: 19, 20. Our government, as an off-shoot from the Roman earth, partakes of all Rome's earthly, beastly, and infernal characteristics, though not fully developed.

But the grand point lies here. Mr. B. preaches down, and drives off all thought of the Lord's coming "the second time to salvation," as asserted in scripture.

But these beastly and "unjust Judges" must judge and rule till God shall cause Christ "to sit on His Holy Hill of Zion." Ps. 2: 45; 46; 72; Luke 1: 33; Isa. 9: 6-8; Rev. 14: 1.

Therefore, to him there is no rational, no religious ground of hope, that the down-trodden and crushed population of earth will ever be emancipated, or the earth ever be filled with holiness and peace.

So it seems to me. But if he can escape from this dilemma without denying all the positive declarations of the Holy Ghost, as to the symbols of earthly empire, and their inspired explanation, we shall be happy to see how.

The Casket of Truth.

The fact of Christ's death is God's great moral nucleus, around which is clustered every christian sympathy, in which is the most perfect memorial of divine benevolence, and of individual disinterested affection, the brightest evidence of truth's inspiration, faith's repository, and the thrice blessed consequences of which will be forever.

The hope of the gospel, is the moral safe-guard of the church. For 1 A just perception of its foundation, imparts courage.

2. A just recognition of its principles, preserves from error.

3. A just appreciation of its objects, produces Christ-like simplicity and purity, and bestows a power of endurance adequate to successfully compete with the manifold trials of life.

Our religious activities please God, when from their origin, history and consequence, self is excluded and God is acknowledged.

Friendship established upon the assimilation of the subjects of it to Christ, and sustained by perfect christian integrity, is fraught with heavenly sweetness and antedates the associations of the redeemed.

Sing unto the Lord.

"I do not know how to sing." Learn then. "I have got no voice." Are you certain of it? Did you ever cultivate what you have got? Perhaps you have taken it for granted that you have got no voice without trying to know positively whether you have or not. Can you make any kind of a noise? "O yes, but it sounds so!" But perhaps it does not sound so bad in the ears of your Maker as it does to you; and certainly it does not if you have "melody in your heart." I do not mean, that you should take the lead in public, unless you properly understand how to lead correctly, but "sing unto the Lord" at home, by yourself, in your family, with others when you will not be likely to break the tune, about your work, and wherever you can do it consistently. "But I cannot learn many tunes." Learn a few then—learn one, and sing it over and over when proper. That is the way the robins and sparrows do! Learn to sing, if possible, and then sing—sing away doubts, fears, gloom and temptation.

Sing! it will keep you from talking about your brethren while you are doing it. Sing! it will keep you from rash words while you are doing it. Sing! it will make you good-natured—you cannot be cross while you are singing, very well. Sing! it will keep you from murmuring against God. Sing, and be happy. Satan does not love singing—sing, and drive him away. Angels sing—sing and be like them. Singing will be part of the employment of the world to come. Sing unto the Lord! sing praises with understanding!

EDWIN BURNHAM.

For the Crisis.

On the Coming of our Blessed Lord.

From the prophecy of Zechariah, chapter 14, it is evident that Zion's Deliverer will not come to the earth and "his feet stand upon the Mount of Olives," (whence he ascended after his first advent,) until God has gathered his numerous hosts and come "like a cloud to cover the land" of Judea, to fight against Jerusalem and obtain a temporary victory, to be followed by his total destruction.

From the prophecy of Ezekiel, chapter 38, it is evident that God will not gather his great army, until he knows that the descendants of Israel have been "brought back" and "gathered out of many people," to dwell safely in "the land of unwalled villages;" an event certainly yet in the future.

The cleansing of the Sanctuary, I humbly apprehend, will not be accomplished until Jerusalem shall no longer be "trodden down by the Gentiles," consequently, not until the above events transpire.

As the saints come with their Lord, when he descends to the Mount of Olives, Zech. 14: 4, 5, their resurrection and change must necessarily be antecedent, to meet the Lord in the air and come with him to the earth. It is then a very interesting question, have we any clear revelation concerning the intervening period of our rising to meet the Lord in the air, and his descent with us to the earth? As the gracious invitation (Isa. 26: 19-21,) of the Lord to his people to "enter" into "chambers" stands connected both with our resurrection and the Lord coming "out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth," it may refer to this period. As this period, however, is denominated "a little moment," and the return of exiled Israel to the land of their fathers, must, according to Ezek. 20, occupy a considerable period in which the Lord will plead with them as he pleaded with their "fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt," (ver. 36,) I humbly apprehend that we are not to look for the coming of our dear Savior in the air, and our gathering to him there, until, "with a mighty hand and a stretched-out arm, he brings his people (the Israelites) out of the countries wherein they are scattered." Ezek. 20: 33, 34.

Far be it from me, however, to write or speak with that positiveness on the precise time of our Lord's appearing, which I have deeply regretted in others as tending to disparage this whole subject of Christ's personal reign on the earth in the minds of many christians, and encourage unbelievers to continue their infidel cry, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

Dear brethren in the Lord, let our chief concern and most fervent prayer be, that we may be found doing his will, and "not be ashamed before him at his coming."

For the Crisis.

What I Have Experienced.

I have experienced the love of God in my soul. I have felt the Holy Spirit striving with me. For not taking up my cross, I have grown cold. I have felt as if I wished to say something for Jesus, but I could not make any advancement; something held me back and seemed to say, you are well off as you are. I know I have got to grow in grace, by taking up my cross at all times. The evil one was at work and I have been sorely tempted, doing things that I ought not to have done; worshiping myself and not God; feeling as if I could never become a christian; that my heart was hardened against salvation. I have striven to do better, but feel a great want of faith. Why doth the Holy Spirit still strive with me? God knows I am weak and He is ever merciful. I often think of this passage of Scripture—"Oh! ye of little faith!" I ask for your prayers that I may continue on, and at last meet you all in heaven. Amen.

Notice.

The Church of Christ in Springfield have removed their place of worship from the Hall in Spring Street to Central Hall in Rockwood's Block, corner of Maine and Court Streets. Preaching every Sabbath day and evening.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I do rejoice with all my heart to see so much spirituality, real christian love and good feeling exhibited in the columns of your paper. It really does me good to sit down each week and take a survey of the sanctifying thoughts, feelings, and principles flowing so purely, gently, harmoniously, and freely from the hearts of our well beloved brethren and sisters, of like precious faith, scattered over hills and vales, villages and cities, towns and States of our American land. Although they are thus separated by the common occurrences and concerns of this changing life; yet, a medium we have through which we can all heartily express our faith and hope, joys and sorrows, temptations and disappointments, desires and expectations, while waiting for Zion's now absent, but soon coming Savior to consummate the redemption of the things spoken of by all the holy prophets, who prophesied of the favor which he should bring unto them. And would we keep up this heavenly state of mind, this heaven on earth begun, this holy, happy, heaven-exalted, God-honoring, man-elevating and sanctifying influence, we must be holy in body and mind, in affections and desires; our faith and hope must be unwavering, our diligence and perseverance constantly increasing, our love and affection pure, elevating, strong and cementing; our works corresponding and progressing, our prayers mingled with tears, heartfelt, prevailing, powerful, and constantly flowing; our standing permanent, undeviating, uncompromising and devoted; our labors abundant at home and abroad, in and out of the family of Christ, among our neighbors and friends, with the penitent and impenitent, rich and poor, noble and ignoble; yes, bless the Lord, diligent in business, fervent in Spirit, serving the Lord wherever he, in his providence, may call us to go. May each dear reader of the Crisis compose a portion of that body spoken of by the Apostle Peter,—"Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ," being chosen from the "beginning through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth," to be a "chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." Thus living, praying, crying, groaning, sighing, dying, toiling, longing, waiting and expecting the unutterable glories of the kingdom of God, which is to fill the whole earth ultimately, we shall in God's name roll back upon the almost God-forsaken world, a tide of influence, which will paralyze Spiritualism, Mysticism, Sectarianism, Creedism, Skepticism, Immortalsoulism, (the whole of which amounts to Devilism,) and every other God-dishonoring dogma, now prevalent among the children of men, to a very great extent. Awake! AWAKE!! Gird on thy armor, thou blessed of the Lord.

A. N. SEYMOUR.

For the Children.

Innocent Birds.

Boys, do you see them, hear them sing sweetly, joyfully, melodiously? tune their little harps from morn 'till night in springtime? Do you not love them, protect them, delight to hear them sing? Some boys injure them, torment them, destroy their nests and their little ones. Is not this cruel, wicked, shameful? They have a right to live. God made them to enjoy life, and minister happiness to others. What a sad spring and summer without these cheerful, merry songsters to warble their sweet notes in our gardens, groves, orchards and forests. By their gay plumage, their elegant forms, their graceful flights, their sociable chirpings, and their sweet songs, they fill the woods and fields with gladness, and make the solitary places rejoice. What would summer be were there no birds?

They are entitled to protection, on the score of their usefulness. They kill thousands of noxious insects. It is estimated that one swallow will destroy nine hundred insects in one day. The alarming insect plagues, of late years, call loudly for the protection of the birds.

The shooting of harmless little birds is a cruel, hardening and despicable amusement. It is doubly mean, when followed early in the summer, before or during the breeding season.

It is a dangerous amusement. It has been said, by one who has paid much attention to the subject, that "more persons fall by their own hands, and by the hands of their sporting companions, while engaged in this wicked and cruel sport, than are executed for murder, or that fall beneath the bolts of the lightning of the thunder.

Beware, boys, beware how you lift a finger in this wicked business. God will not hold you guiltless. To shoot innocent birds is a direct and open violation of statute law. In Massachusetts, especially, the laws are positive, imposing heavy fines on those who trample on good nature, and sin, as with a cart rope.

Bows that have been properly reared, are men in point of usefulness, at sixteen, while those that have been reared in idleness, are a nuisance at twenty-one, and may be for life.—[Golden Rule.

Foreign News.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMERS CITY OF WASHINGTON AND FULTON.

NEW YORK, April 21.

Steamers City of Washington, from Liverpool April 8, and Fulton, from Southampton same day, arrived at this port this morning.

The political news by these arrivals is meagre.

The Neufchatel Conference has adjourned, it is said, on account of the impracticable demands of Prussia.

The diplomatic rupture between Austria and Sardinia is not likely to be adjusted, but neither power contemplates hostilities.

The latest advices from China indicate that the closing of the Chinese ports to European commerce, was quite imminent.

The Grand Duke of Tuscany has declined to conclude with the Papal Chair a Concordat like the Austrian.

The Emperor of Russia has definitely given up his intention of visiting Western Europe.

A telegraphic report from Paris fixes the Emperor's coronation for the 4th of May.

A letter from Genoa, of the 3d inst., states that discord has reached the highest pitch between the two branches of the house of Bourbon, and all attempts to accomplish a fusion have completely failed.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMERICA.

HALIFAX, April 24.

Steamship America, from Liverpool at 10 A. M., Saturday, April 11th, arrived at this port at 5 P. M. 23d.

Politically, the news presents no feature of special importance.

RUSSIA.—A letter from St. Petersburgh, in the Nord, Brussells says:

The operation of raising the vessels sunk in the port of Sebastopol has commenced. There are upwards of eighty of them, and sixteen have already been recovered, viz., the Chersonese, steamer, 260 horse-power; four transports, one brig, two schooners, two tenders, and six smaller craft. The four transports are already afloat, and are engaged in conveying provisions and equipments.

The Chersonese is under repairs at Nicolaieff, and will be launched again in the Spring.

Besides these vessels, the Government has six sailing transports, and some steamers of from 60 to 100 horse power, and has lately bought five screw schooners, which are to cruise along the eastern coasts of the Black Sea.

FRANCE.—It is rumored that the Emperor Napoleon intends to be crowned before the summer. The Paris correspondent of the London News wrote on April 7, that it was reported that the day fixed for the ceremony was May 4, and adds:—

"In that case, it will take place while the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia is here; but I think the news is very doubtful. At all events, it may be safely predicted that if the ceremony should come off so soon, the Emperor must have renounced his long cherished project of being crowned by the Pope."

Domestic Summary.

THE INDIANS RISING IN MINNESOTA.—Chicago, April 23. Runners, who have returned from our troops in pursuit of the marauding Indians in Minnesota, confirm the rumored massacres in Blue Earth County. Forty settlers were murdered at Big Bend, and several women taken prisoners. The excitement is increasing, as all the Indians beyond the Minnesota have assumed a hostile attitude. Rumors are also rife, of an alliance between the Sioux and Chippewa tribes.

CHRISTIANITY AND CHIVALRY IN KENTUCKY.—The Kentucky News says "a number of ladies went from Newport to Cincinnati on Friday last, to unite with the anti-slavery sewing circle there, in preparing clothing for the fugitive slaves, who, on all favorable occasions, flee from bondage, naked or clothed, to a land of liberty.

FREE-LOVERS CONVERTED TO ROMANISM.—We learn from the Catholic Telegraph and Advocate of the 4th inst., that Dr. T. L. Nichols and Mrs. Mary Gove Nichols, of "free-love" notoriety, were baptized on last Sunday afternoon, in St. Xavier church, Sycamore street, Cincinnati, by Rev. Father Oakley, Rector of the College, having been duly converted to the Catholic faith. With them were also baptized a daughter of Mrs. Nichols by a former husband, and a Miss Hopkins, of the Free Love Yellow Springs Institution. Dr. Nichols, in the name of himself and wife, has written a retraction of his free love and infidel teachings, in a letter to Archbishop Purcell, which is printed. The pith of the document is in the paragraph following:

"In the infinite mercy of Almighty God, we have been led, by what has seemed to us the direct and miraculous interposition of the Holy Spirit, and, by the blessed teachings of St. Ignatius Loyola and St. Francis Xavier, to the renunciation of infidelity, and to the humble acceptance of the faith and guidance of the church. In deep humility and contrition we submit ourselves to her divine order; we accept what she teaches; and we repudiate and condemn what she condemns. Whatever, in our writings and teachings, and in our lives, has been contrary to the doctrines, morality, and discipline of the holy Catholic church, we wish to retract and repudiate, and, were it possible, to atone for."

JEWS CHANGING THE SABBATH.—The Baltimore True Union says:

"Lord's day services have of late been held by the Israeltes of our city. A call is now made for a decision, as to the permanent continuance of the arrangement. This will prove an important step to the Jews, should the arrangement prove permanent."

SUICIDE.—Mrs. Elizabeth Ford, wife of Theodore H. Ford, of this city, committed suicide on Saturday last. At about half-past eleven o'clock in the forenoon, she requested a sister-in-law, living in the same house, to prepare for her some potatoes for dinner, as she wished to go out upon the street on an errand. The request was complied with, and nothing more was seen or heard of her until between two and three o'clock in the afternoon. It was supposed that she was, for some reason, detained upon her errand. She was finally discovered by a girl living in the family, and who, having occasion to go to a closet up stairs, found the corpse there suspended by a rope thrown over a board extending across the top of the closet, and used for a shelf. By means of a chest and cricket, Mrs. F. had placed her neck within the noose, and then swung herself off. The noose did not fit the neck tightly so as to produce strangulation.

We learn that Mrs. F. had, for a long time, been subject to deep mental depression, so as, at times, she esteemed life but a burden. We are informed that there is no foundation in truth for the report that Millerism induced this state of mind. She was a very estimable lady. She was about 34 years of age, and has left two young children.—Independent Democrat, Concord, N. H.

A REMARKABLE DISCOVERY.—We notice in the New York Tribune an advertisement of some four or five columns, signed Benjamin Hardinge, in which that gentleman claims that he has discovered the secret of dissolving quartz and other rocks in water, and holding them in solution at pleasure. By this process he claims that all the gold in quartz rocks can be easily separated at a comparatively trifling expense. With a single steam engine of fifteen horse power, he can dissolve fifteen tons a day.

But this is but a small part of his discovery. He says the solution may be molded into any required shape for building purposes, and converted into highly polished rock at cheaper rates than the cost of common brick. The mortar in which they are laid is of the same material as the blocks of rock themselves, and so the building becomes one solid block of stone—floors and all.

But this is not all. He can, by mixing his solution, produce the chalcedony, the onyx, porphyry, blood-stone, &c., all of which may be worked into buildings at cheap rates, thus forming a village resembling the New Jerusalem described in the Revelation. And what is more remarkable than all, his discovery, which he says he has patented in Europe and the United States is certified to by respectable chemists and metallurgists, among whom we notice the name of John L. Moffat, who is well known in the United States as an assayer of ores, gold and silver, &c.

A SUBTERRANEAN TREE AT BALLARAT GOLD-DIGGINS.—A party of diggers, sinking a hole on the Gravel-pits line, came upon a whole tree, at the depth of 175 feet. In sinking the hole, the strata gone through were 38 feet of clay, 30 feet of bluestone rock, and 107 feet of clay and "floating reef," or false bottom. The hole was only moderately rich, and the tree was encountered after driving 26 feet. The tree is not petrified, but the strength of the fibre is gone, and it crumbles readily under pressure.—Melbourne paper.

TWO COMETS.—Besides D'Arrest's comet, now visible through the telescope, a second comet, visible through the same instrument, has been seen by M. Bruhn of Berlin. It is situated in the Western sky, and is nearly as bright as D'Arrest's. If these comets are belligerently inclined, we would suggest the propriety of their hitting each other, instead of their striking this mundane sphere. A pitched battle on such a celestial field, and between such fiery combatants, would be something novel and exciting.

The population of Venice appears to give considerable uneasiness to the civil and military authorities, by recent manifestations of popular feeling on public occasions. The ladies appear at the opera with boquets in which the popular colors predominate, and liberal sentiments are so enthusiastically applauded, that instructions have been given to suppress such sentiments. These manifestations are similar to those which preceded the revolution of 1848.—B. Herald.

GIVE LIGHT!

BY J. H. T.

"Light! more light still!"—Goethe.

Rise! O men of might!
Ye in knowledge grown—
Educate with light
People clad in gloom!
Darkness all around
Threateneth the host;
Blackness most profound
Haunts them as a ghost.

Thunder, dread, roll out—
Shake heav'n doors ajar!
Lightnings may gleam out,
Brightning earth afar,
Giving light to men
Toiling in the mire;
Light to student-men
And to lordly sire!

Curtain of the sky,
Hide not thy glory!
Veil of blue on high,
O rend before me!
Let the purest light
Come like floods of rain,
Driving Error's night
Far o'er earth amain.

For the Crisis.

THY PEOPLE SHALL BE ALL RIGHTEOUS.

"All righteous" there, who people that blest world,
Ascend its heights—go down its pleasant glade—
"Dwell safely" 'mid its green and shady bowers,—
Here nought can harm, and none make thee afraid.

"All righteous" there; walk through the crowded streets,—
Look in each face and clasp a brother's hand;
Take to thy bosom all that call thee friend,—
Pour out the full soul—'tis a holy land.

"All righteous" there; no deeds of blood and crime,
No dread of lurking for a traitor's wile;
No scorn, or hate, or wrong, no sland'rer's tongue,
No smile-wreathed lip above a heart of guile.

"All righteous" there; no trembling, fettered form
Bowed 'neath the scourging of the oppressor's rod;
No beggared poor, no injured innocence,
Raising their heart-cries to the throne of God!

"All righteous" there; from its eternal depths
The fount of Love pours in o'erflowing streams;
They drink forever, and a holy light
Kindles all hearts—from every glad eye beams.

"All righteous" there, all just, and good, and true.
Oh! I am sighing for that holier clime!
Let me be pure and with the pure ones dwell,—
O let me leave these sin-stained shores of Time!

The Vision of the 2300 Days.

(Concluded.)

Josephus, in the 18th book of Antiquities, in the third chapter, speaks of Jesus with a good deal of candor, though in few words: of his appearance as the Christ, of the rulers condemning him to the cross, and in his next chapter of the removal of Pontius Pilate from office; also of Caiaphus' removal, and appointment of Jonathan, at the time of that festival, which is called the passover. And this, I think, must be that same feast of unleavened bread which followed the crucifixion Passover. Pilate had before incurred the displeasure of the Galilean Jews, when he mingled their blood with their sacrifices. He had also murdered some of the Samaritans, who complained of him. He was ordered to Rome for trial before the emperor—"made haste to Rome," but before he could get there, "Tiberius was dead." If he started for Rome before the midst of that feast, which commenced with his condemning Christ, as I think very probable he did, his punishment was on his heels when he delivered him, after scourging, to be crucified. Neither the dreams or entreaties of his wife could deter him from delivering the innocent to the cross.

In the fifth chapter, he speaks of Herod Antipas; of his contract with an infamous woman; the flight of the Arabian princess, his wife, to her father; of his ill success in war with her father; of his murder of John the Baptist; of Vitellius' coming to Jerusalem, on his way with an army, against the Arabian king; of his going up to offer sacrifices, at a feast, with Herod and his friends; of his staying there three days, and removing Jonathan from the priesthood, and there receiving news of the death of Tiberius. There was probably time enough for the news of his death to arrive from Rome, (if he died the 24th of May,) at the Pentecost, which would not occur till fifty days after the 6th of May; so that this feast was probably the Pente[illegible], when three thousand were converted. [illegible] news from Rome, in that season, [illegible] arrive in two or three weeks, I [illegible] suppose. This view of what Josephus says on the subject, seems to be confirmed to have taken place, very nearly so, by the death of Tiberius, and also by Herod's being at Jerusalem at the time of the crucifixion, "with his men of war."

In the past we have supposed that when Jesus began to preach, and announced, "the time is fulfilled," that he had particular reference to the period of the sixty-nine weeks. But he sometimes mentions time as "my time," as he did to his brethren, relative to the feast of tabernacles; (John 7: 6, 8,) so that he had times which he had not revealed to mortals, to fulfill. He knew what he had to do before he should show himself as "the Prince;" and even at the age of twelve years, the time had come that he "must be about his Father's business."

Various opinions have been expressed about the first part of the 3d chapter of Luke, especially the fifteenth year of Tiberius. But one thing is certain; if the 20th year of Tiberius witnessed the death of Philip, the Son of Herod the Great, after a reign of thirty-seven years, then Tiberius' twentieth year was A. D. 38: and if the 20th was A. D. 38, then his fifteenth was A. D. 33. It is the opinion of some of the most approved writers on the scriptures, that John lived four or five years after he began to preach, and was unquestionably beheaded not far from the time of Philip's death. The Savior preached a number of years after John was dead, so that the events recorded in the first twenty-two verses of Luke 3rd, must have occupied several years. As to the whole time of Tiberius' reign, Josephus must be mistaken; for he does not agree with other historians, nor with himself. In his Antiquities he calls it twenty-five years, five months and three days; and in his Jewish Wars, twenty-two years, six months and three days. Augustus was at the head of the Roman government from Julius Cæsar's death, March 15, A. U. C. 710, B. C. 41, and held it fifty-seven years, six months and two days, and died, Aug. 11th, A. U. C. 768, A. D. 18. It will be seen that if Tiberius' years are counted from Augustus' death, twenty-two years six months and three days will reach only to Feb. 22nd, and there would be no emperor for more than three months; for it is very certain that Caligula did not begin to reign until the 24th of May, and after a reign of three years and eight months was slain, Jan. 24th. (Sir Walter Raleigh.) Clemens Alexandrinus gives Tiberius twenty-six years six months and nineteen days, which includes the time of his adoption; and it is affirmed by Cornelius Tacitus, that Jesus suffered in the reign of Tiberius. I have been thus particular, that all may see the authorities, which they may rely on, for the truth of these statements.

The number of years in the era are not at all affected by being antedated; they are only nominal; there are neither too many years, nor too few; they are all here: the only trouble is the antedating of the birth of Christ, four years; and so by following suit, other events must be antedated likewise, that there may be at least the appearance of harmony. But it is now easy to see why so many great writers have been led into error; that it is for no other purpose but to fasten the event of the crucifixion in A. D. 33. That theory must be sustained, even at the expense of true dates. We do not want any addition nor diminution to the number of years, of the present era, but we want the dates made right. Only place the accession of Caligula A. D. 41, and then bring Tiberius' death up to meet it; and by bringing the era into its true place, the four years B. C. vanish at once, without any additional year. Then remove the Paschal from A. D. 33 to A. D. 41, and all will be harmonious.

As to the Roman governors of Judea, Raleigh says,—"Valerius Gratus was appointed governor of Judea in the second year of the empire of Tiberius," which must have been in A. D. 20. By Josephus we are informed that he governed Judea eleven years; and one of the last acts of his administration was the appointment of Caiphas to the high-priesthood, He says, "When Gratus had done these things, he went back to Rome, after he had tarried in Judea eleven years, (to A. D. 31,) when Pontius Pilate came as his successor." (Ant. B. 18, Chap. 2, Sec. 2.) Pilate's administration continued ten years, which terminated A. D. 41.

I have now produced the foregoing historical scraps, in as candid and truthful a manner as I am capable; and now especially devote them to all who love the appearing of Christ, for whom they were particularly intended, not for the purpose of shutting your mouth against them; for if anything can be produced to disprove them, or any of them, I ask any one to produce it. They are from sources of high respectability and authority, and to me, the evidence is irresistible that this view is not far from right. Now I do not say, unqualifiedly, that the world will end this coming year, for I cannot know for certainty that the "seventy weeks" were a part of this vision; but I believe it; they were not a vision of themselves, but were cut off, or marked off, and bounded by certain monuments which, at their occurrence, were to "seal the vision." I am pinned to this view of the crucifixion, whether the seventy weeks were a part of the vision or not; but as sure as they are a part of the vision, so sure they will terminate before the ninth month of next year. But the greatest weight of evidence centres in the present year, 1857.

Now, my dear Brethren and Sisters, are we almost home? Are we all ready? Paul says, "The day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night." Peter says, "The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night." And is it necessary to write to you who "are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief?" Is there no danger of your being "overcharged with cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares?" Alas! I fear there are some, who did run well once, in whom the Son of Man, when He cometh, will find no faith. Is there no evil servant smiting his fellow? None eating and drinking "with the drunken?" Alas! for all such; "for as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." "Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." Say not, "My Lord delayeth his coming;" for "the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder." "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord." "Take heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is." He has given to every one "his work, and commanded the porter to watch. "Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning, lest coming suddenly He find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, watch." Amen.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. B. P. MANNING writes from Goffstown, N. H.:—"I can truly say, I never felt more like a pilgrim than I do at this time. While I see such a state of things going on as there is at the present day, I am led to cry out, 'come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!'

I have been very unwell for some three months, so that I have not had the privilege of meeting with the dear children but a few times; but my heath, I think, is improving. To God be all the glory.

I saw a letter in the Crisis from a brother on the 2300 days. I hope he is correct. I want the Rest, that is brought to view in the word of God. I believe that God has led out a people here to be ready for translation. We have been disappointed a number of times, yet the word of God stands sure. Jesus is coming soon. Brethren, pray for me, that God will make me whole."

—:o:—

BRO. F. TIBBALS writes from Norfolk, Ct.:—I feel that my hope is founded on the rock, Christ Jesus. My hope grows brighter. I have never felt the special blessing of the Lord from day to day as I have for five months past. But when I look around me, my heart is sad to see so many that I love, sinning away their day of grace, and trampling upon the mercies of the Lord. When I open the word of the Lord, I read,—'In the last days perilous times shall come,' but I feel to praise the name of the Lord for the promise recorded,—'fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.' I will try by the help of the Lord to be found among that little flock.

The Crisis is a welcome messenger to my dwelling. I love to hear from the brethren and sisters scattered abroad."

—:o:—

BRO. P. S. W. DEYO writes from Strawberry Pt., Iowa:—"I commenced a protracted meeting here the 11th of Jan., which held on two weeks. The Lord blessed the work, and some backsliders were reclaimed. Six happy converts were baptized in the likeness of his death, and resurrection, expecting soon to share in His eternal salvation, when the mortal shall put on immortality. The work still moves on.

I commenced a meeting in another place, where I staid three weeks, and the Lord was pleased to bless the preaching of the word. A number of backsliders were reclaimed. Seven obeyed the Lord in baptism. At this place we expect to organize a church—perhaps will number over twenty.

I might write of my trials, but knowing we are all subject to them, and that the Lord will deliver us if we will trust in Him, I forbear. I hope the church will pray for the cause here in the West. We need a missionary who is able to devote all of his time to the work. May God bless us and save us, is my prayer."

—:o:—

BRO. O. BLANCHARD writes from No. Adams, Mass.:—"It is a great and solemn truth, revealed in the book of God, that the end is just before us and an ungodly world. If we believe this, what shall we do in the little time that the long-suffering of God awaits us? shall we grow more cold, more dull and stupid, more worldly-minded, and have less feeling for sinners and backsliders? No; let us pray the more that they may repent of their sins by turning to God, and believe on our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, unto salvation.

Is it not one of the devices of Satan, to make us believe that time is so short that we cannot do much more in the cause of Christ? I believe it is. And if we had more faith in God, more of the spirit of Christ, more love and true charity for one another, we should see the work of God prosper in our midst to a much greater degree than we have for some time in the past. 'Lord, increase our faith!' Now—the question is, how shall we obtain faith in God? Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God; then we must search the scriptures, obey their precepts, deny ourselves of all that is wrong, and thus obtain faith in God."

—:o:—

SR. A. MUSSEY writes from Lake Village, N. H.:—"Perhaps some may have thought ere this, that I was sunken down through overmuch sorrow, but this is not the cause of my so long silence. I have ever borne in mind the promise, 'that everything shall work together for good to them that love God,' and the inquiry has often arisen in my mind, do I love the Lord? I could answer, 'thou knowest that I love thee.'

Was there ever a God like our God? nay, verily; he listens to our cries, bottles up our tears, yea, is a present help in time of trouble. Although our loved ones have been lying under the cold snows of this dreary winter, there is a rainbow of hope suspended o'er the tomb. 'Thy brother shall rise again.' My husband shall rise again; he'll live to die no more. Then we that mourn are comforted with the promise of the resurrection out from among the dead, and the nearness of the event makes us patient in all our trials and tribulations.

O! ye who weep, God hears your cries, and soon he will deliver you from all your sorrows; his own soft hand shall wipe the tear from every weeping eye. 'I will come again,' has music in it, and my faith is the same as in times past, that we shall soon see him whom we love.

After the death of my companion, I removed to this place to spend the winter, and although I am deprived of the society of old companions in tribulation, yet I find many warm-hearted friends, both to me and to my Savior; for which I feel very grateful. Have enjoyed some precious seasons, could almost wish I had a permanent home with them till the Lord comes. But wherever I am, wherever I roam, the God of Jacob shall be my defence, and under his kindly wing will I hide me until all these calamities be past."

MORALS OF POPERY.—From a careful digest and comparison of the criminal statistics of several European countries for several years, it appears that while the average criminal committals for murder in Protestant England were four to every million of the population, in Roman-catholic Belgium it is 18, in Ireland 19, in Sardinia 20, in France 31, in Austria 36, in Lombardy 45, in Tuscany 56, in Bavaria 68, in Sicily 90, in the Papal States 113, and in Naples 174 to the same number. The proportion of illegitimate births in London is four per cent., in Roman Catholic Paris 33 per cent., in Brussels 35 per cent., in Munich 48 per cent., in Vienna 51 per cent. In Rome, out of 4,542 births, 3,160 were foundlings, three-fourths of whom die in the Romish asylum!

LINES.

Written on the death of Louisa Palmer, who died suddenly May, 31, '56

A light is from our household gone,
A voice we love is stilled;
A place is vacant by our side.
Which never can be filled.

A gentle heart that throbbed but now
With tenderness and love,
Hath ceased its weary beating here,
To wait for bliss above.

We miss her in the fireside group,
Her cheerful voice is hushed;
We cannot see her pleasant smile—
Our earthly hopes are crushed.

Cease, my sad heart, thy mourning now,
Let tears no longer flow;
Look with an eye of faith above,
Look not on things below.

Soon our dear child we hope to greet,
On that eternal shore,
Where we will join the happy throng,
And meet to part no more.

Duties of Christian Females.

The finishing stroke which Christianity gives in elevating the condition of women is by inviting and employing their energies and influence in promoting the spread of religion in the world, and thus carrying out through them, also, the great purpose of God in the redemption of the world by the mission of his Son. To them, in common with others, the Apostle says, "That ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." The honor so liberally bestowed upon the pious women of antiquity, in ministering to the personal wants of the Savior, and in being so constantly about his person, was the least of those distinctions designed for them by our holy religion. They bear an exalted place in those acts and offices which were carried on for the setting up of Christ's kingdom in the world. How instructive and impressive it is to hear an Apostle say,—"Help these women which labored with me in the gospel!" What a register of names and offices of illustrious females do we find in Romans 16:—Priscilla, Paul's helper; "Mary, who bestowed much labor upon us;" "Phebe, the servant of the church in Cenchrea," who was sent to the Church at Rome, and entrusted with so momentous a commission as to bear to that community of Christians the epistle to the Romans; and "Tryphena and Tryphosa, who labored in the Lord." In addition to all this there can be but little doubt that in the primitive Church not only were women occasionally endowed by the Spirit with the miraculous gift of prophesying, but were also employed in the office of deaconesses. The Christian Church in modern times has gone backwards in the honor put on the female character. The primitive age of Christianity was in advance of ours in the respect thus paid to the female sex, by officially employing them in the service of the Church, and in the wisdom which made use of such available and valuable resources. It has been said that the usages of society have somewhat changed since that time, so as to render the services of women less necessary now than they were then. The friendly and social intercourse of the sexes was more limited and females were kept in greater seclusion. Some truth, no doubt, there is in these assertions, but perhaps not so much as by some imagined. Both general and sacred history, present them to us mingling in the society and sharing in the occupations of the other sex.—Female Piety by John A. James, D. D.

The Starless Crown.

"It was after a lingering and painful illness that we were at length called to stand by the dying bed of one who, though in the morning of life, had given her heart to Christ, before the stern necessities of a dying hour drove her to him. Calmly did she look forward to the hour of her dissolution, sustained by that hope which is an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast. As we bent over her to catch the last whispers of love, these words fell on our ear; 'I love my Savior, and have confidence that through faith in him I shall be saved; but Oh, it seems to me that mine will be a starless crown. I do not think I have been instrumental in saving one soul.'

We tried to comfort her by reminding her, that often we do not see the results of our labor in this world; that it might be, her consistent walk as a Christian had been the means of inducing some soul to follow Christ, who would hereafter 'rise up and call her blessed.' But she continued repeating to herself the words,—'a starless crown! a starless crown!' and then most earnestly did she plead with all about her, to do something for him every day, so that at last we should have no occasion to regret that we had won no soul to Jesus, but rejoice that, under God, we had been the means of leading many to his feet.

'A starless crown;' what does it mean? What, but that we have passed through this world surrounded by those who love not that Savior who is our all in all—have seen them unmindful of his claims to their love and service, and have not the means of rescuing one of them from 'eternal death.' Full well we know that no man can come to Christ, except the Father draw him; but as well do we know that, in due season we shall reap, if we faint not;' and 'he that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.'

Our own salvation is not the only design for which we were called from darkness, and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son. No; this is a narrow, ungenerous view to take of the noble and ennobling scheme of redemption. When we have ourselves experienced the preciousness of Jesus' love, and feel that by his grace we are delivered from the thraldom of sin, as well as saved from everlasting death, what can we do but endeavor with all the energies which God has given us to bring others to the same Savior who is as ready to save them as us?

Oh, fellow-christians, let us be up and doing. 'The night is far spent; the day is at hand;' what we do for our Savior, and for souls perishing around us, must be done quickly. The emissaries of Satan are busy on every side, fulfilling his errands, determined to chase to their prison of despair, as many souls as will be 'led captive at his will.' And shall we be less jealous of our Master's honor, less active in his cause? Remember, every soul saved adds one more to that innumerable throng who will cast their crowns at Jesus' feet, and ascribe to him the praise of their salvation.

Every day we may do something for Him who has done to much, aye, who has done everything for us. Then, when the golden gates are opened to receive us, and we behold Him whom not having seen we have loved; as we join in those anthems of praise which ever swell through the new Jerusalem; as we bow in adoring gratitude, wonder, and love before Him, and cast our crowns at His feet, we shall find that they are not 'starless crowns,' but richly bestsudded with stars which shall shine forever in the firmament of God."

L. C. S.

SPIRITUAL ROBBERY.—Fifteen minutes in prayer, and fifteen minutes in exhortation in a prayer or social meeting, what time left for others to speak and pray? Besides this same prayer and exhortation were cold, formal, heartless, chilly as an ice-berg—repetition on repetition. Good brother, what do you mean? Kill folks, tire them out by inches, patience and all? Why not pray and speak, pour out your soul, then stop awhile, take breath, and let others take your place? Why not be generous, benevolent, thoughtful, charitable? There are others present that have just as good a right to occupy the floor as your own dear self, and may be to better purpose. The time you occupied was sufficient for some four, six, eight or ten prayers and exhortations, soul-kindling, life-giving.

Short, pithy, pointed, heart-felt, pungent, faithful prayer and testimony are the life of a meeting, whereas, long, cold, prosy, heartless, round about ebullitions are death in the pot like cold water upon the flame—freezing the whole community. Besides this self engrossment of time is robbery, the very worst kind—it's spiritual robbery!" Golden Rule.

For the Crisis.

BRO. GRANT:—Here is the testimony of Reinher, a Roman Catholic writer, of former times, concerning the people who were converted under the labors of Wickliff. Do they not seem like our brethren and sisters?

EDWIN BURNHAM.

"The disciples of Wickliff are men of a serious, modest deportment, avoiding all ostentation in dress, mixing little with the busy world, and complaining of the debauchery of mankind. They maintain themselves wholly by their own labor, and utterly despise wealth, being fully content with bare necessities. They follow no traffic, because it is attended with so much lying, swearing, and cheating. They are chaste and temperate; are never seen in taverns, or amused by the trifling gaieties of life. You find them always employed, either learning or teaching. They are concise and devout in their prayers, blaming an animated prolixity. They never swear, speak little, and in their public preaching lay their chief stress on charity (love.) They never mind canonical hours, because they say that a pater-noster or two, repeated with devotion, is better than tedious hours spent without devotion. They explain the scriptures in a different way from the holy doctors and church of Rome. They speak little, and humble, and are well behaved in appearance."

The Past belongs to God; the Present only is ours. And short as it is, there is more in it and of it, than we can well manage. That man who can grapple it, and measure it, and fill it with his purpose is doing a man's work; none can do more; but there are thousands who do less.—D. H. Mitchel.

When we trust in frames and feelings, as soon as they are gone, the soul is discouraged and dejected; but when we trust in God's promises, which are always the same, then it is we are right; and a sense of God's unchangeable love towards us, proceeding from such trust, fires our soul with a continued love towards him.—Romaine.

QUESTION.—Which is the greater sin, to preach what we do not believe, or believe what we do not preach?

REMEMBER LOT'S WIFE.

Never look back, though the world is alluring thee,
  Pleasures and charms may be strewn in thy track,
Satan exert all his wiles for securing thee,
  Onward, excelsior, never look back!

Never look back, though thine ears be saluted with Voices most winsome, loud calling thee back,
Promising riches and honors seducingly,
  Heed them not, hear them not, never look back!

Never look back, though the ground may enchanted be,
  Causing thine eyes to be heavy with sleep;
Friends growing weary, like cowards deserting thee,
  Leaving thee lonely, in sorrow to weep.

Though thy faith falter, the word seem obscure to thee,
  Shedding but dimly its rays on thy track;
Rouse from thy lethargy, gird up thy loins anew:
  Ho! for the prize beyond! never look back!

Onward, still on, though thy guide be invisible,
  He's the Almighty One, nought canst thou lack;
Nought that shall make thee to Satan invincible;
  Fear thee not! feeble one, never look back!

Onward, still on, there is glory in store for thee,
  Jesus thy captain is, follow his track;
Falter not, feeble one, He'll lead thee safely on,
  On, on to victory! never look back!

SAMUEL MASON.

No. I.

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming?" 2 Pet. 3 : 3, 4.

There are few ages of the world, but what have produced various instances of persons who have treated the divine dispensations of Jehovah either with neglect or scorn. Of these, some have persisted in their folly to the latest period of their existence, while others have discovered their mistake in time, and both sought and found forgiveness of God, of whom I AM ONE, who denied and scorned the revelations of high heaven, who neglected the Sacred Writings, and treated the first and second advent of Jesus, the Messiah, with sneering and contempt.

The skeptics of old did not fall into darkness by looking at the heavens, but by stumbling over the systems of dogmatists and sophists. These systems they found to be erroneous and contradictory, and therefore they drew the conclusion, that there is no certainty.

Modern skeptics seem to attain to their disbelief in the same way. They do not set out in a natural and free mode of inquiry for themselves, but rather condemn the dogmas of false theology, the discords of sectarian creeds, or the practices of corrupt churches. Hence, I find it has ever been the custom of unbelievers to attack the corruptions of religion, and not the Bible as a whole.

But the skeptics, or scoffers of these last days, are those who are saying, "where is the promise of his coming?" "All things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." In the first place it will be well to consider those passages which relate to our Savior's first advent, before we attempt to prove the second. Once, I rejected the theory of Christ's first advent. But I thank God that I was ever persuaded to examine the subject for myself. And I am convinced, if any one, let him be ever so skeptical, will consider the predictions and fulfillment of the prophecies pertaining to the Messiah, he cannot but be impressed with the conviction that Jesus is the Christ.

I propose considering at some length the predictions relating to the Messiah, deeming that it will not be an unprofitable investigation to the believer, and at the same time praying, that the Lord may direct these few thoughts to the homes and hearts of those who are saying, "where is the promise of his coming?"

Firstly, it was predicted, some hundreds of years before it came to pass, that Christ should come into the world for the redemption of the human family. According to promise, Messiah did come into the world, four thousand years after the first prediction was uttered. Let us take Bible in hand, and compare Gen. 3 : 15, with Isa. 9 : 6, 7, and Matt. 1 : 18–25.

Christ is frequently spoken of under the character of him that was to come. Jesus Christ is several times described in this form by the writers of the Old and New Testament. Compare Hab. 2 : 34; Ps. 118 : 26; Dan 9 : 26; Zech. 9 : 9: Mal. 3 : 1; Matt. 11 : 3; John 1 : 30, 4 : 25, 11 : 27; Acts 19 : 4.

By reading ancient history I find there have been four universal monarchies, or kingdoms, in the world, one succeeding the other, more famous than all the rest. It was foretold that Messiah should appear under the last of them. Christ was born after the destruction of the three first, and while the fourth was in all its glory. Compare Dan. chaps. 2 and 7, with Luke, chap. 2 and 3.

And this same Jesus was to come before the destruction of the second temple, —Jesus Christ preached in that temple, and it was totally destroyed within forty years afterwards. Compare Haggai 2 : 7, with Matt. 21 : 23.

This Messiah was likewise to come before the dominion of the Jews was taken away,—Christ was born the very year Augustus Cæsar imposed a tax upon the Jewish nation, as a token of their subjection to the Roman government. Compare Gen. 49 : 10, with Luke 2 : 1–7.

When the Messiah should make his appearance among mankind, it was to be at a time of general peace, after dreadful wars and convulsions. When Jesus Christ came into the world, the Roman wars were just terminated, the temple of Janus was shut, and universal peace reigned throughout the empire. Compare Haggai, 2 : 6, 7, 9, with the Roman History of this period.

Our Lord was to make his appearance among men, at a time when there should be a general expectation of him. When Jesus Christ came into the world, all nations were looking for the advent of some extraordinary person. Compare Haggai 2 : 7, 9, with Matt. 2 : 1–10, and John 1 : 19–45. By referring to ancient history we find that the heathen, as well as the Jews, had a firm persuasion that some extraordinary person should arise in the world about the time our Savior was born. Suetonius says,—"There was an old, fixed opinion all over the East, that it was decreed by heaven, that about that time some person from Judea should obtain the dominion over all." Tacitus, a Latin historian, mentions the same prophecy, and almost in the same words;—"Most of the Jews had a persuasion that it was contained in the ancient books of their priests, that at that very time the East should grow powerful, and some person from Judea should gain the dominion." I might quote other historians to the same effect, but these suffice for the present.

Jesus Christ was to have existed with God before the foundations of the world were laid. Jesus Christ was in the beginning with God, and by him the worlds were made. Compare Prov. 8 : 22, 23, with John 1 : 1–3; Col. 1 : 16, 17.

The Messiah was to be one who had been the fellow, the equal, and the companion of the Almighty. Jesus Christ thought it not robbery to be equal with God, and was with him from the beginning. Compare Zech. 13 : 7, with Phil. 2 : 6, and John 1 : 1.

Messiah was to be the Son of God.—Jesus Christ was confessedly the only begotten Son of God. Compare Ps. 2 : 7; Prov. 30 : 4; Hosea 11 : 1; Matt. 3 : 17.

Messiah was to have had an eternal, and ineffable generation. Jesus Christ was the Son of God prior to his being born of the virgin Mary, in a way not to be explained by mortal man. Compare Micah 5 : 2, with John 1 : 1.

A Few Thoughts for the Brethren and Sisters.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS. :—I am still among the dying, but earnestly looking for the King to come and destroy the enemy, and give unto us eternal life. I often look back to the good times I had in '54, when I expected in a few days to see Jesus and be made like him. How good it was to feel all ready to see him. I often wonder at any one's feeling indifferent to the time of Jesus' coming. But so it is. I cannot say, with a good conscience, that God hath not led us, but I feel like looking for further light; and, as sure as God hath led us, so sure God will lead us on, (if we trust in him,) until we gain the victory.

The first thing I do when I get the Crisis is to see if any of the Brethren have received farther light on the time of Jesus' coming; and whenever I see anything pertaining to the time, it makes my heart rejoice, and I pray with more earnestness,—help me, O Lord, to watch and pray. I think perhaps there are brethren and sisters who feel some as I do, and would delight to look at the subject; therefore I write the following.

1. I believe the brethren in '43 considered that the commandment went forth in the 7th of Artaxerxes, and that it was established beyond controversy that the 7th of Artaxerxes was B. C. 457; therefore, the 2300 days would end in '44, for it takes the whole of 457 and 1843 to make the 2300. Therefore, at whatever time in 457 the commandment went forth, at the same time in '44 the 2300 days would end.

2. If the 7th of Artaxerxes was B. C. 457, the 20th of Artaxerxes would come thirteen years later, or B. C. 444. Now I think, from the increase of light since '43, all will admit that the commandment went forth in the 20th of Artaxerxes.

3. If the 70 weeks and 2300 days commence together, at the going forth of the commandment in the 20th of Artaxerxes, B. C. 444, then the 2300 days will end the present year.

4. According to Furgerson's Astronomy, the 20th of Artaxerxes occurred in the 4269th year of the Julian Period; to this add 2300, and we have 6569; but, inasmuch as the 20th of Artaxerxes commenced somewhere in the 4269th year of the Julian Period, the 2300 days would end at the same point in the 6570th year of the Julian Period, which is the present year, 1857.

These few ideas concerning the time of deliverance to the waiting church, I wish the brethren to look at, and let us all bring in our mites and see if we are not just entering into the bay that leads us to the harbor of rest. If the days are to end the present year, let us examine ourselves whether we be in the faith; let us prove our own selves, for none but the pure and holy will enter the city of God. Awake! my Brn. and Srs., awake!

Dear reader, let me ask you a few solemn questions, in view of our near approach to the great judgment day, when we must all stand before God to give an account of the time we have spent in this world, as allotted us by God to prepare for eternity.

1. Have you given all for Christ, to be his forever, and feel that it is your meat and drink to do your Master's will? If not, flee to Christ this moment, and become reconciled to God; obey his word and do his will.

2. Are you a professed christian? and do you love the appearing of Christ? would you delight to see the King come in his beauty? If you would not delight to see him, repent, before it is too late! Remember, Paul says there is a crown laid up for all that love His appearing. Again, he says Christ will appear the second time without sin unto salvation to them that look for him. Do you look for him? Have we not signs that uphold us in looking for him? Yea, verily, all the signs bespeak his coming near, and the saints can with joyful hope look up expecting their redemption is nigh.

May the God of all grace lead our minds into a patient waiting for Jesus, and preserve us blameless unto the glorious redemption of the purchased possession, is the prayer of your Bro. in Christ,

Short Sermons.

"Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to those that love him?" James 2 : 5.

Reader, art thou "poor" in this world? If so, art thou "rich in faith?" Then thou art "heir" to endless riches. But—

I. What is "faith?"
II. What is an "heir?"
III. What is "that kingdom?"

I. What is "faith?" Says Paul,—"Faith is the substance (or "confidence," margin,) of things hoped for." Heb. 11 : 1. Theoretical "faith cometh by hearing," (Rom. 10 : 17,) while practical "faith worketh by love," (Gal. 5 : 6,) and without this "faith it is impossible to please" God. A "dead" faith will not enrich us. Belief, energized by divine love which "is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost," constitutes faith in the highest sense of the term; while belief, devoid of this element is only theoretical faith, and cannot work by love. Such faith will never make us "rich." Let us have the practical, as well as the theoretical part of faith.

II. What is an "heir?" Says Paul,—"The heir as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant," (Gal. 4 : 1,) therefore an "heir" is not a real possessor, though he is destined to become one. We are not yet possessors, but ultimately we shall be. Now we are heirs, then we shall be possessors. Now we are poor, then we shall be rich. Now we are down-trodden, then we shall be exalted. Now we weep, then all tears shall be wiped away. Now we sorrow, then we shall rejoice. Now we suffer pain, then there shall be no more pain. Now we are disowned by men, then we are owned by the "King of saints." Now we are frowned upon by the wicked, then we are approbated of God. Now we are mortal, then we are immortal. Are we true "heirs?"

III. What is "that kingdom?" The "kingdom of God"—the "kingdom of heaven"—the "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," which the saints will come in possession of "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him. Matt. 25 : 31–34. Then the saints will realize that their trials, and afflictions, and deprivations, and persecutions, and sacrifices, have not been in vain. For trials, they have unbounded joy. For afflictions, they have angelic felicity. For deprivations, they have unmeasured glory. For persecutions, they have divine honors. For sacrifices, they have exhaustless riches. Then let us love him who has prepared untold joys, and endless felicity for the obedient and faithful. All this is prepared for those, and those only, "who love him." Do we truly love him? Do our actions show it? Are we lukewarm? Oh! for holy zeal! Even "hot" zeal, according to knoweledge, in the Master's cause.

For the Crisis.

Their Aim is not Our Aim.

What strange developments I see and hear, as I go from place to place, of the thoughts, feelings, and desires of my fellow beings! One coming from some other world, unacquainted with human nature and the relations of human beings to their God, would, should he be introduced to scenes which daily pass under my eyes and ears, at once conclude that the whole duty of men and women is to eat, drink, dress, get money, and seek for selfish ends generally. From morning to night, with the mass of people, I hear nothing about God, heaven, eternity, or holy things. The live-long day, and part of the live-long night it is, "what shall we eat?" "what shall we drink?" "how shall we dress?" "where shall we go for pleasure?" "how shall we get the most money?"

Never were words fulfilled more faithfully than are those of our Savior, that "as in the days of Noah so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of man; they eat, they drank, they bought they sold, ... till the flood came and took them all away." We are living in the hours when that saying is being fulfilled. It seems to me that the very condition of society, morally, socially, generally, and particularly, ought to convince every candid mind that we must immediately have an important change on earth—and it does convince every simple, candid, literal Bible student thus.

The aim of the entire masses of community is becoming more and more earthly and corrupt every day. As I move among them I can continually think of the language of Watts,—

"Fools never raise their thoughts so high—
Like brutes they live, like brutes they die;
Like grass they flourish, till thy breath
Blasts them in everlasting death!"

O poor fallen, sinful human nature! Poor sickly, wretched creatures! But, thanks be unto God, I find here and there a few who aim at immortality and the kingdom of God. Earth to them has lost its charm. With them my soul is bound, in a bundle of life, with the Lord!

EDWIN BURNHAM.

Abstract of a Sermon

PREACHED BY PRES. FINNEY, AT PARK ST. CHURCH, FRIDAY, APRIL 17, '57.

Text.—Rom. 6 : 11. "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The secret of holy living is here announced. What is it to be dead to sin? It must be understood, to be without sin. What is it to be alive unto God? It must be an opposite. Being dead to God, is not having respect to God in all his endeavors, in his plans to redeem man from iniquity, having no fellowship for such plans, being dead to them.

What is it to reckon yourselves? It is generally considered summing up, regarding, accounting the one side or the other. We are not to expect to sin, but expect not to sin. This conclusion cannot be avoided. This is therefore to be reckoned through Jesus Christ, not by virtue of any efforts of our own. The preceding verse teaches this doctrine,—"For in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." The meaning is, he died to redeem us from sin, to make us free from it. Now, in the natural state we are in bondage to sin, are under the curse of the law. We are as truly to expect him to save us from sin as to expect to be forgiven at all. There is not one word in the Bible that justifies any other conclusion.

Again, Christ liveth unto God, and in looking to him we are to expect him to save us from small sins as from large, outbreaking sins. You are to reckon yourself dead to sin in all its shapes, fashionable or unfashionable. This must be received and be believed in fact. The husband and wife do not run round to see if they are married, that fact is settled. Suppose that they entered that relation for experiment, then their actions are not binding on each other. But here, the whole thing is foreclosed; they do not expect to sin, it is far from the relation they enter into; they have an abhorrence of anything of the kind. So those who enter into the covenant with Christ, are to be regarded as sacred persons, holy ones, they are in fact saints, not to pretend they are, but to be so in reality. Their mind is to be settled in this matter, and the door shut. We are to live to Him every day, as well as on Sunday. You cannot expect to do what you do not reckon you may do. And truly in life, at all times, cannot you expect Christ to keep you free from sin? (not that you must die and expect death to perfect that work, the Bible does not teach that doctrine,) the whole means to be used are Christ and not death. You may say, "death may relieve from the power of temptation," but temptation is not sin. The fact is, the Holy Ghost does the work. Suppose the sinner to go to heaven; would that make him holy? What! cannot bear the Holy ones now? the husband constantlp opposed to the wife because she loves Christ and loves to obey him? What! to be angry for that? heaven would not make him any better. The fact is this; it is a great mistake that death does any thing of this kind. God represents death to be a state of great darkness as darkness itself.

This reckoning then is what is here enjoined. This believing is nothing more nor less than appropriating Christ to ourselves, that this reckoning is the faith needed. Now if this is so, who can find any fault? shall we admit the thing, and discourage the faith in it? On the other hand, the Bible encourages faith. What is this reckoning but to be dead? You cannot sin unless you consent to it. To understand this, go to the Bible. Now if this position is not preached, the gospel is not preached; this is the great fulminating power. Suppose you say to your child that you are not instructing him to live here without sin; it discourages all attempts to free himself from it. But I am sometimes met with the question, "does any body live without sin?" My answer is, if they do not, it is because they cease to reckon, cease to exercise faith. Unbelief is at the end of it all. What! expect the end without the means? Why, in the ministry this is applicable. He who gave the commission, gave also the pledge; lay down the one, the other is useless. And here is the secret of the success of preachers of the gospel. If we are to expect him to save from one sin, then are we not to expect him to save us from all? mark what I say; if we are not to expect him to save from all, why expect him to save from any? Now mark this, that if the church will come on to this ground, the world will soon see that they are not, "wretched man that I am," living in the 7th of Romans, but in the 8th,—"now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus. . . . . For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God, sending his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin (margin, by a sacrifice for sin,) condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Now mark what I say,—for mercy's sake, for the truth's sake, for self's sake, for shame's sake, do not discourage faith, reading that the thing is to be done, and with the next breath say it cannot be done, cannot be obtained. The idea that men have, that death will accomplish anything in this matter is all a mistake, and that sanctification cannot take place in this world. Why, those who take that ground make void many scriptures. What! look to death to do this work? it is an awful mistake!

Said a celebrated Unitarian minister who had looked at this subject, on [illegible]

ting the premises, did not see why they had objections to these conclusions. Said an Infidel, a Judge in one of the high courts in the United States, whose wife was a pious person, after he had examined this subject,—"what can they object to in this?"

What if some say, that they never saw any one without sin? I dare not say it. This thing was so with the Jews. They would not have it that Christ was not a sinner. In a discussion on this subject, the course pursued by a student, on the attainability to such a state, said, "it must be admitted, if there was evidence to prove it; his life must be the test that settles it, why should I hesitate to admit the evidence?" Now if a person is conscious of sin, it is because his faith is defective. If he is not conscious of abiding in Christ, it is because his faith is sinfully affected. If I am asked, do you live without sinning? my answer is, if I do not it is because I do not exercise faith

We are to assume the fact that Christ is always present. Now if we sin it is because we do not appropriate Christ as our own. Many take a course that is constantly making a disgrace of Christ. What! to save from all sin now? shall any say that he never did do this? what a disgrace to Christ to hear this! What! afraid of Christ, to trust him for all? Oh! this zeal for the cause of religion, to say that everybody is to live in sin. It makes me think of Judas' great zeal for the poor, who afterwards disgraced the cause of his Master. Oh! the great cost of the ointment!

But we find that Christ has often delivered persons from besetting sins. Take the case of Dr. Hopkins who, in his ministry, fell into a great passion with one about some matter. Now this was his besetment. He went to Christ and afterwards was not troubled in that way. He had an appropriating Christ. Here sin is put out of the heart by faith in Christ. Now suppose we take the text in 1 Thess. 5: 23, "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly," &c. "Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it." Suppose that he had added that you need not expect him to do it. Again, 2 Cor. 6: 17,—"Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." Now add, you don't expect to be separate.

This is the teaching of the day. See the children of Israel. They came up almost to the promised land, but entered not in because of unbelief. Just so in the gospel; many will fail, by disbelieving God in this matter. Now if after being enlightened, some one should say, that it is dangerous to preach it; yes, and suppose that I should say, that it is dangerous to say you are converted, reasoning from appearances; so everything is uncertain; it is all disobedience and unbelief. To expect to be sanctified by death! What a delusion! awful in the extreme! a great mistake! Whenever I have failed it has been because I did not look to Christ. Now in this matter, don't go away and call it heresy, but encourage it; honor Christ, honor his word. What an awful thing to make calculation to sin, after professing to be dead to it. What! say, "Lord, I dont't expect to live without sin;" this practically ignores what Christ came to do.

For the Crisis.

Shall I be There?

When this earth is renewed and brought back to its Eden state and all God's children gathered together no more to be separated forever, no more to suffer pain or sorrow, no more to be saddened with tales of violence, of man's shedding his brother's blood; when reports of wrong and cruelty shall never more be heard; where there shall be no strife, nor deceit, nothing to hurt nor destroy in God's holy kingdom; but where the good and the blest of all ages shall enjoy each other's society, and be ever with their Redeemer, who poured out his soul unto death that sinners might live; who rose from the dead and ascended to his Father; who is soon to return and gather his children, take the throne of his Father David and reign on it forever; when every creature which is in heaven and earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, are heard saying, "Blessing and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever,"—shall I be there? or, shall I be among those to whom it shall be said, Depart? The thought is dreadful!

I hope, through the long-suffering and mercy of God, to be a partaker of the saint's everlasting rest. I used to think, when we expected the Lord in a few months, that I should be willing to sleep in the grave awhile, if the Lord willed, but now, I wish to live until He comes. It does seem as though death had reigned a great while, as though the time must be near. Sometimes I am afraid it is farther in the future than we are aware of. Lord, let thy grace be sufficient, that we may endure unto the end.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 6, 1856.

Follow Christ.

Not the flesh—not the world—not the professed church,—but Christ. He is the great Exemplar set before us in the Gospel, to imitate, and not only to imitate but have formed within, which affords peace here, making us a blessing to all within the circle of our influence, and insuring eternal glory at the resurrection of the just.

The blessed Savior once said to his disciples,—"if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." "And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." And again,—"he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me." By these declarations, which fell from the lips of One who "spake as never man spake," it is clearly to be seen that a close communion with Jesus, and a strict conformity to the peculiarities of his life and doctrine is indispensable to acceptance with him; which doctrine, when heartily adopted and practically carried out, forms a truthful basis for a christian life of obedience and faith, to be manifested in all the various avenues and departments which that life embraces.

It is not enough that we follow Christ into the Temple, and on the Sabbath discourse words of life and love; but our feet should often find the path—so often trod by Him—which leads to the abode of some poor, suffering child, or wanderer from the flock, to whom our words of comfort and deeds of love shall be like the dew of heaven, distilling the sweetness of peace and hope. Our garments must not refuse to brush the thorny way our Leader passed before us, though they be much soiled and torn, that is, if we would follow him. Otherwise, we are found unworthy of him; in him we may have no part; in us he may find no likeness, no similitude, no impress of himself, which only attaches the true, loving disciple to his Lord.

We must follow him in temptation—it may not be in the fast of the wilderness, and with the devil in person attempting our discomfiture and final ruin,—but temptation, as much as we can bear, with the grace of God, must be endured, and with confidence that deliverance will appear in our behalf, as in the case of Christ, that we be not overcome thereby. It is a blessed source of consolation that, in every conflict and infirmity, trial and temptation, Christ, whom we follow in all these things, is a sympathizer, and ever appears for our relief, to assuage the billows if they too heavily roll across the soul—to say, "Peace! be still!" if the elements too harshly sweep the strings attuned to faith and love.

We are to follow Christ in his submission to the will of his Father—"our Father which art in heaven." He says, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." And, "ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." The obedience of love, is the only true, acceptable submission. This sacrifice is like fragrant incense before God. "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." The more the christian is submitted to the mind of Christ here, the more loved and honored is he at the court of heaven, for Jesus, the Pattern, himself forms the nucleus there, around which its shining myriads gather, before whom they cast their fadeless crowns, and worship, and adore; and for those who, like him, submit to self-mortification, self-denying, self-renunciation, self-sacrifice, thoroughly, perfectly, and all for God,—they—the angels of the heavenly world—have an especial care, and in their hands the little ones shall be upborne lest they dash their foot against a stone. For such, all heaven and the good of earth are interested. Then who would not be a submissive christian?

We must be willing to endure the experiences of affliction, poverty, want, desertion of friends, contumely, persecution; perils in the world, and among false brethren; watchings and weariness, pain fulness and fastings; the battle of life in all its phases, waiting for deliverance only, and salvation complete, when the Rest which remains for the chosen shall be given, and earth be transformed into Eden again. Then, the overcomers shall be clad in white raiment; shall be pillars in the eternal Temple; upon them shall be written the name of God, and the name of the city of their God—the peaceful city,—and to them shall be granted to sit with Jesus in his Throne, for he overcame, and is now set down on his Father's throne.

It is blessed to follow Christ. Those only who tread in his steps receive and impart the hallowed influence of that pure spirit which breathed continually the atmosphere of love. If we would do good and communicate, we must learn of him. If we would well fulfill our life-mission, we must be taught at the foot of the cross. Disciplined thus, our way will be onward, our guiding star, the Star of Bethlehem, our goal the hill of Zion, beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth.

Then let us follow Christ. Let us cling to him through all the devious paths of this weary life,—it is our only safety,—and never be content without the assurance in the soul, that in all the road we are traveling, we can trace the blessed footprints of Him who passed that way before, tasting the bitter cup, that we through his humiliation might pass from suffering to felicity, from degradation to glory, from mortality to immortality. Thanks be unto God for the unspeakable gift of Jesus Christ! And let it be the earnest, ardent, all-absorbing effort of our lives, to imitate, follow, and exemplify Christ, from henceforth, until, according to his promise, he returns to claim his own.

Millerism.

We have been asked to give our opinion of the morale of this theory, and we would briefly say.

1. It is not simple faith in the second advent of our Lord. This is only the ostensible showing, the hobby, if you please, of the party. Millerism, as it is commonly called, and as we have been brought into contact with it, is a mixture of truth and fanaticism, semi-infidelity and anti-Churchism.

It professes the highest regard for the doctrine of the second advent of Christ, denouncing those who do not believe in any definite time of the advent, while at the same time many of these same persons are living without habits of practical religion. It is never found to be an element of order and subordination to Church authority, but just the contrary. The doctrine of the unconscious sleep of the soul in the grave till the resurrection morning, belongs to the materialistic philosophy, which always has, as by necessary consequence it always must, belong to the lowest type of infidelity. The doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked is but another fragment of the same system. It is Universalism a little brushed up and adjusted to the advancing light and moral consciousness of the age.

2. It is, however, a fact that many individuals have unhappily identified themselves more or less with this system, who do not penetrate its logical and moral results. It leads legitimately, and in the end, inevitably, to open infidelity. But some do not see this, and we would not charge upon each one connected with the system, all the logical and moral responsibilities of that connection. The great Judge alone can tell how far the mind of a man may drink in error or its results. Yet, every man must give account of himself to God, and his works must be tried so as by fire.

3. It is entirely inconsistent and injurious for the churches to admit such lecturers or preachers into their pulpits. Never persecute error, but never give countenance to it, or bid the errorist "God speed."

—Northern Christian Advocate.

We clipped the above from an editorial in the Northern Christian Advocate. We are thankful, that for the truth's sake we are associated with those of whom it may be said,—"as concerning this sect it is everywhere spoken against." Perhaps when our Bro. Editor reads his article again, he may think he ought to have been a little more kind, and forbearing towards his erring neighbor. If he were better acquainted with us, we think he would be more merciful. We love the same Jesus that he adores; we also love his second coming, and Paul says "there is laid up . . . . a crown of righteousness" for all those "that love his appearing." We may not be so "logical" as our Bro., but we do say, in all candor, that after more than fourteen years' experience in this way, we do not feel the least approach towards either secret or "open infidelity;" but on the contrary, we grow more and more attached to the Holy Bible. We believe, as the Bible says, that "the dead know not anything;" but we were not aware that we deserved to be ranked, with "the lowest type of infidelity," for believing this; for we find Satan declaring the opposite of this to our first parents, and the Bible affirms that he is the infidel. We have examined every verse in the Bible several times, but have not been able to find a single passage that teaches the immortality of the soul, excepting what Satan said to Eve, in Gen. 3: 4.

Our Bro. thinks our belief in the destruction of the wicked, "is Universalism a little brushed up." We think it brushes it all away. Does not the Bible say that God will destroy all the wicked? Does destroy mean to save? Does not the Lord say that they shall be burnt up "root and branch?" Is this "Universalism a little brushed up?"

Canada Subscribers.

Our Canada and Nova Scotia subscribers will recollect that we have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year; hence they should send $2.26 cents for a year's subscription. We have just paid a postage bill of over $6.

Pauline Theology.

We fully concur with the following statement, from Dr. Thomas Smith.

"I think the Pauline Theology is the best work extant on the subject of immortality."

General Conference.

BRO. GRANT:—Having consulted with many of the Brn. composing the different churches in this section, I find an interest, with many earnest requests, for a General Conference. We have therefore, after due deliberation, decided to hold a Conference at Carmel, Me., commencing Thursday, June 10th, at 5 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

We hope, pray, and believe that this means of grace will prove a savor of life unto life. We invite all, whosoever will, to come and partake with us; and shall expect as many of the household of faith as consistently can, to come in the name of the Lord, and such as can will feel it a privilege and duty, with open heart and hand, to help forward the cause of truth.

Those coming by railroad, will stop at Carmel Depot, near the village, where the meeting is held.

In behalf of the Brn.,

Renewal of my Mission West.

DEAR BRETHREN:—There seems to be a stern and continuous individualism, with all the accredited and abiding laborers in the field of effort presented to the preachers and ministers of the gospel, who are called to urge the doctrine of Christ's immediate coming—the true nature of his kingdom—the scriptural and only ground of immortality. The work is a great mission-field. It has been so from the beginning. While, therefore, there may be, with perfect propriety, and according to apostolic usage, distinct congregations or churches of believers, with pastors, there must be a missionary effort continued in every direction; and this labor is left in the hands of authorized and faithful ministers of the word, following the same apostolic example, for Paul continued a traveling preacher, with only occasional interruptions of his journeyings, till his last great effort in Rome. But his labors, in all places, seem to have been governed by the necessity of the case—stayed longer or shorter, as the work demanded, and having ordained elders, he went far off from previous fields. I know of nothing more like his efforts than the efforts of some of the brethren who preach the coming kingdom of God now! They have no episcopal bondage to move them like chess men, in their positions; no obligations to abide in one place, by previous settlement; no promised salary to induce a residence in any given city, but are free to speak and act like the great Legate of the Gentiles, who declared, "And now having no more place in these parts, whenever I take my journey into Spain," etc. In those days, Spain was a vast distance from some portions of Asia minor, where Paul had previously devoted so much time and energy to the cause of Christ. Whether he was decidedly unpopular in the East, I have not learned, but he was determined to "go West." He was assured that, while his labors were not demanded in Asia, they were in Western Europe. He hoped to be brought on his way by brethren with whom at the same time he should be blest.

We have said that there was an individual position occupied by such preachers. This is strikingly manifest. They go alone even—go without fear—without the influences of Conferences, Associations, Presbytery, Bishop, Missionary Society, or any other human authority,—for, while they have a good standing, and the fellowship of the church, and of ministers at home, they go, not depending upon any such recommendation, but because Christ has given them a commission to preach the gospel of the kingdom, and opened a "great door and effectual," for its reception.

We must act individually, and yet we must act harmoniously, too. I propose to preach in the West this summer, and expect my work will be that of a missionary. It is possible I may not get away at present, but I hope to within a month, and shall in the next paper have appointments published. All who can aid in such an effort, by sending me information of most proper points, or by means, will, I hope, thus aid the cause of truth. There are many calls for my labors now, in the great West, some of them pressing, and I only delay, to arrange to leave the East, personally, to renew the proclamation, with others, of the kingdom's glad tidings. I do not abandon the idea of a removal to the West, if God continues time.

Greeting.

Chronological View

OF THE ARTICLE ON THE VISION OF THE TWO THOUSAND AND THREE HUNDRED DAYS.

As the diagram, which was designed to accompany the above article, cannot conveniently be given, it will be necessary to present some extracts, to show that its chronology is a matter of history, and abundantly sustained by different authors. And the best way to show these facts accurately, is to adjust the Era of Rome, from about seven to eight hundred with the Common Era, before and after the birth of Christ, for the same number of years.

It is perfectly well known that many modern writers and chronologers hold that Rome was built, A. M. 3251, i. e., B. C. 753. Such are Doddridge, Scott, Butler, Clark, and many others. On the other hand, however, according to the most approved ancient historians and chronologers, Rome was built, A. M. 3253, i. e., B. C. 751. Prince, in the beginning of his "Chronological History of New England," gives the names of Tallents, Swan, Helvicus, and Isaacson, all chronologers, or historians, or both, who held that Rome was built, B. C. 751; and Rollin, p. 566, Vol. 2, asserts that Cato, a Roman senator, also held that Rome was built, A. M. 3253, i. e., B. C. 751, and Rollin also adopts the same view, which he declares on the same page. Such a class of ancient writers would be as likely, at least, to adopt true dates as the moderns; though I hold the latter class in great esteem, while I am constrained to differ from them, and date the building of Rome, A. M. 3253, B. C. 751.

As the Roman year began March 25th, and the Jewish year about the same time, it will be convenient to date in the same way here. Goldsmith gives the date of the first Triumvirate between Julius Cæsar, Pompey and Crassus, A. U. C. 694, i. e., a little over 56 years before the birth of Christ. He says; "A combination was thus formed, by which they three agreed that nothing should be done in the commonwealth, but what received their mutual concurrence and approbation." "This was called the first Triumvirate, by which the constitution was weakened by a new interest, A. U. C. 694, (when) Cæsar began his schemes for empire." Hist. of Rome, Vol. 1, pp. 152–3,—small edition. And Sir W. Raleigh, in his History of the World, states that the first Triumvirate began in the 180th Olympiad, i. e., the 720th year of the Olympiads: and this is the same time that Goldsmith gives, a little over 56 years before the birth of Christ. "In the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word may be established."

Rome then became enslaved by military despots, who undermined her constitution, chained her nobles, and reduced her to a state of bondage, from which she never regained her liberty. Crassus afterwards perished with his army, in an expedition against the Parthians. Jos. Ant., B. 14 chap. 7. Jealousy and rivalry soon sprung up between Cæsar and Pompey, which resulted in civil war, in which Pompey was defeated, fled, and was treacherously murdered by the Egyptians. Julius became sole monarch of Rome, and held the imperial dignity three years and six months, (Ant. B. 14, chap. 11,) and was slain in the Senate house, Feb. 18th, called, "the Ides of March," A. U. C. 710, (p. 31, Anal. Sac. Chron.,) B. C. 41, and Augustus succeeded his uncle at his death. Herod Antipater is made king of Judea by Anthony, (Ant. B. 14, chap. 13, Sec. 5,) A. U. C. 715, B. C. 37. Antigonus is slain by Anthony, and Herod is confirmed king by the Romans, (Anal. Sac. Chron., p. 30,) A. U. C. 717, B. C. 34. Battle of Actium, A. U. C. 724, B. C. 27. Butler's Univ. Hist., p. 382. Herod repairs the temple, A. U. C. 734, B. C. 17. Anal. Sac. Chron., p. 165. He builds Cæsarea, in the 20th year of his reign, A. U. C. 742, B. C. 9; slaughters his sons, Alexander and Aristobulus, A. U. C. 747, B. C. 4. An eclipse of the moon occurred March 13, A. U. C. 750, (during Herod's last sickness.) Anal. Sac. Chron., p. 29.

B. C. 1, Jesus is born; presented in the temple; (Luke 2: 22,) visited by the wise men; carried into Egypt; the infants are slain, and Herod dies, A. D. 1, A. U. C. 751. Augustus confirms Herod's will, and his sons Archelaus, Philip, and Herod Antipas are settled in their tetrarchies soon after. Archelaus removed and banished, 37 years after the Battle of Actium, (Ant. B. 18, Chap. 2, Sec. 1.) A. U. C. 760, A. D. 10. Ant. B. 17, Chap. 13. Jesus goes up to Jerusalem, A. U. C. 762, A. D. 12. Luke 2: 42. Tiberius adopted, A. D. 14, A. U. C 764. Anal. Sac. Chron. p. 32. Augustus dies, A. U. C. 768, A. D. 18.

I am aware that some believe that 767 was the date of Augustus' death; but, commencing the Roman year March 25th, I cannot find fifty-seven years, six months and two days (the time assigned to Augustus,) until I reach Aug. 19, A. U. C. 768, which, reckoned back, must begin as soon as Feb. 18th, A. U. C. 710; and we have authority sufficient to show that Augustus died Aug. 19th, from various historians. "Valerius Gratus is appointed governor of Judea, in the second year of the empire of Tiberius." Raleigh, Hist. of World.

The second year of the empire of Tiberius could not end until Aug. 19, A. D. 20, and consequently he must have been appointed previous to that date, i. e., Aug. 19, A. D. 20, A. U. C. 770. He held his office eleven years, to A. U. C. 781, A. D. 31. And one of his last official acts was, to appoint Joseph Caiaphas to the high-priesthood; and Pontius Pilate succeeded him, A. D. 31, A. U. C. 781, and held office ten years, (Ant. B. 18, chap. 2, sec. 2; and chap. 4, sec. 2,) to A. D. 41. Caiaphas "continued in office during the whole administration of Pilate," (Anal. Sac. Chron. p. 168,) to A. D. 41. The fifteenth year of Tiberius from his adoption was A. D. 29, A. U. C. 779. Tiberius' fifteenth year from the death of Augustus was A. D. 33, A. U. C. 783. "Now in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Iturea and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lysanias the tetrarch of Abilene, Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests, the word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness. And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance, for the remission of sins." Luke 3: 1–3. A. D. 33, A. U. C. 783.

Jesus is baptized, A. D. 37, A. U. C. 787. Philip, son of Herod the Great, dies (having reigned thirty-seven years,) in the twentieth year of Tiberius, (Ant. B. 18, chap. 4, Sec. 6,) A. D. 38, A. U. C. 788. Transfiguration of Christ, on Mount Tabor, in which He appears to His three chosen disciples as "the Prince" of Daniel's vision, and four hundred and eighty-three years of the vision end, A. D. 40, A. U. C. 790; and "the sixty-nine weeks" are past at that date. Six days before the next passover He makes a triumphant entry into Jerusalem, when the children and the multitude spread their garments in the way, and cry, "Hosanna, blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord." Jesus is arraigned, condemned, and crucified on Friday, May 4th, A. D. 41, A. U. C. 791. Pilate accused of murdering the Samaritans, and deposed by Vitellius, (during the feast of unleavened bread, which immediately followed the crucifixion Passover,) and sent to Rome for trial, before the emperor; and Vitellius went up to Jerusalem, to the same feast, and deprived Joseph Caiaphas of the high-priesthood, and appointed Jonathan, the son of Annas, to succeed him. "Pilate made haste to Rome, but before he could get there, Tiberius was dead."

All this may be gathered from Ant. B. 18, chap. 4. Tiberius dies, May 24th following; and is succeeded by Caius Caligula, who reigns three years and eight months, and is murdered in the forum or theatre, by a band of conspirators, Jan. 24th, A. D. 44, Roman year. This view is sustained by Josephus, who gives us the speech of Saturninus, in the senate of Rome, (for the senators were determined to restore the democracy when Caius Caligula was dead,) who says, "Cherea demanded of the consuls the watchword, who gave him this word—Liberty. These facts were the subjects of admiration to themselves, * * * for it was a hundred years since the democracy had been laid aside, and this giving the watchword returned to the consuls; for, before the city was subject to tyrants." Ant. B. 19, chap. 2, sec. 3. At the foot of the same page Whiston states,—"Hence we learn that, in the opinion of Saturninus, the sovereign authority of the consuls and senate had been taken away just one hundred years before the death of Caius, * * * when the first Triumvirate began under Cæsar, Pompey, and Crassus." Note.

We have seen that the first Triumvirate began A. U. C. 694, i. e., a little more than fifty-six years before the birth of Christ; and since his birth, we find nearly forty-four years to the death of Caius, which is just one hundred years. Here is indubitable proof, that the first forty-four years of the christian Era have been violently thrown back nearly four years; and I see no cause for all this, only to fix the Passover of the crucifixion April 3, A. D. 33. "In the thirteenth century, Roger Bacon found by computation, that the paschal full moon, A. D. 33, fell on Friday; and this circumstance led him, and several others, Scaliger, Usher, Pearson, &c., to conclude that this was the year of the crucifixion." Anal. Sac. Chron. p. 171–8. Such authority as this is dubious; and it is surprising that so many of our great men should endorse it. We cannot impute it to ignorance, for they were learned men; nor to presumption, for many of them were pious: and it must have been a mistaken impression that He could not have suffered at any other time; and hence, the Era is forced back and falsely dated.

Another evidence, to the same effect, may be had from Josephus, who states that "Anthony had Antigonus (the last regular high priest of the Jews in succession,) brought to Antioch, and slain there. that Herod was thus made king by the Romans, B. C. 34; and from the days of Herod until the day when Titus took the temple and city, and burnt them, Herod and his successors had appointed twenty-eight high priests, and their time was one hundred and seven years. B. C. 34 added to A. D. 73 = 107 years. Ant. B. 20, chap. 10.

Thus it will be seen that all the entanglement of dates about the beginning of the Era, has been forced back three or four years; and the years of Jesus' life and death were made in consequence ot forcing the date of his death into A. D. 33. But date it A. D. 41, and all is harmonious.

B. P. HILDRETH.

For the Crisis.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to give you some report of a lecture delivered in the town of Gerry, Chateaugay Co., N. Y., by our aged brother, Jonathan Wilson, on the 12th day of April, the day he was eighty years old. His text was found in Pet. 3: 15. "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear."

He first gave a brief sketch of his life to the time of his conversion at the age of thirty, and of his early education according to the Presbyterian order.

Secondly, his conversion, and call of God to preach the gospel, which he has been laboring to do for fifty years; also his change of views in regard to the teachings of the Bible, as for instance, yielding his former sentiments relative to the nature of man, and accepting the truth that man has no immortal soul. He stated that he had argued in favor of the Devil's assertion, in the garden of Eden, that man should "not surely die," when God condemned him for it; and he was speechless. Also, that the vindicators of that assertion are now plenteous and strong, and that the Spiritualism of the day grows out of it. Christ says that the Devil was a murderer, and a liar from the beginning. John 8: 44, refers to this first lie we have on record

Bro. Wilson was converted in 1807, and ordained in the Baptist church in 1812. He continued with them preaching thirty-seven years, in which time he baptized thirteen hundred, who joined the Baptist churches. At this time he became convinced that he was preaching doctrine not found in the Bible, and commenced an investigation. By thus doing, he found that salvation and redemption, in its completeness, was for mortals only; so, if man had an immortal soul, and it had fallen with the body, it was eternally lost, for there was no salvation ever prepared for immortality.

Sectarian discipline takes away the right of sentiment that God had given man, independment of man, or any body of men. Therefore he left the church, taking a letter, but never united with any other.

The salvation of the mortal sons and daughters of Adam, through faith in the second Adam, have a promise from God in his holy word, which reaches from the first of Genesis to the end of Revelation. One commenced at the fall of man, the other in the time of Socrates, a heathen philosopher and idolater, at Athens. Acts 17. The systems are no more alike than their authors were.

He then gave us the following items of his fifty years' labor in the ministry. He stated he had traveled by land to preach, miles enough to go three times around the globe—75000. He preached as many as eight thousand times. Eight Baptist churches arose under his labors, and eight Baptist meeting-houses, under his special efforts. He baptized thirteen hundred, who united with the Baptist churches, and ninety since, making in all, thirteen hundred and ninety-two. He had belonged to twenty-four different Baptist churches, taking letters of fellowship from one to the other. He left the last in as good union as he joined the first. He had preached in ten different States, lived with his family in five. He had preached in more than four hundred towns, and had never averaged, for ministerial labor, the amount of fifty dollars per year. His support was gained through close economy, and working by the day, never setting any price on his labors in the ministry.

My earnest prayer is, that God will teach me the measure of my days,—He who is the maker of my frame, whose care has been over me these twenty-nine thousand, two hundred days, or four thousand one hundred and sixty weeks, or nine hundred and sixty months; which is just eighty years. Strange! that a mortal "harp of thousand strings" should keep in tune so long. As Paul says,—"having obtained help of God, I continue unto this day," witnessing in these latter years none other things than those pertaining to Jesus. God be praised, I have not lost, by reason of sickness, ten Sundays in forty-nine years, and am in good health now.

Bro. W. remained one hour after preaching, heard another sermon, walked home the same day, two and a half miles, and closed up his public ministry with a peaceful Amen.

A Pilgrim to Canaan,

JOHN S. GARDNER.

Forthe Crisis.

"Ye shall not surely Die."

From this declaration of the old serpent, death entered our world, and all our woes. This great lie was believed by our first parents in Eden, in preference to the word of God, which said,—'Ye shall surely die," and 'tis even so now. Men choose darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. It would seem as though the experience of six thousand years, in seeing our fellow-mortals constantly returning back to dust as God hath said, ought to convince the sons of Adam of their own mortality; but it does not. The great mass of mankind think themselves just as immortal as God himself, notwithstanding he has told them plainly to the contrary, by his servants, who were moved by his Holy Spirit.

The devil told Adam and Eve they should not die, but would become as Gods—become wise. This seems to me to be the same doctrine now taught and generally believed by the world, and the great mass of professing christians. They teach that man does not, and cannot die, but leaves the body as the locust leaves his shell behind, and flies away singing to heaven or some other place, and knows much more. Some of them are wise enough to tell all about the deep things of God, and rap, and tip tables at the request of some agent of the old serpent.

I cannot believe that Satan brought life and immortality to light, because Paul said Christ brought it to light, through the gospel; and furthermore, the Savior said the devil "was a murderer from the beginning; and abode not in the truth." John 8: 44.

I thank the Lord for the light he has given the little flock in these perilous times from the law and the testimony, which says, "man dieth," and lieth down and sleeps till the "heavens be no more." I believe this, though it set the devil and all his followers against me, I can say with the Psalmist, "O let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end." Let the earth be filled with thy glory! Let everything that lives praise the Lord! Gather thy waiting children home! Bring back life's healing tree!

J. B. D.

From Bro. Z. York.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel this morning that I would spend a few moments in writing for the Crisis. I do rejoice to know that some are not ashamed of the hope of the gospel, but are earnestly contending "for the faith once delivered to the saints," and are willing to confess that "they are pilgrims and strangers on the earth," "looking for a better country," and "for a city which hath foundations," and one that will stand forever.

O, who does not wish to have a shelter in the day of God, when He will say to those who have waited for Him, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers?" Then will the anger of the Lord be poured out upon His enemies.

The earth renewed is what we want. If we ever gain that, it will more than repay us for all our sufferings for Jesus' sake. The way may be dark and gloomy at times, and our hearts may be "grieved with trials sore," yet with the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus, we may welcome trials, knowing all things will work together for our good. O let the surging billows roll, and the swelling tide of opposition beat against us, we have the blessed assurance that our Father is at the helm; therefore, we will face the storm knowing that soon, if faithful, we shall enter into the haven of eternal rest.

"Yes, He will come, no longer fear,
Though earth and hell assail;
His word attests the moment near,
And that can never fail."

Yours in hope of immortality,

Z. YORK.

Yarmouth, Me., April 1857.

From sister Elmina Grant.

BRO. GRANT:—

"How cheering is the Christian's hope,
While toiling here below!"

The question arises, What is the Christian's hope? Is it the hope of going to heaven at death? Is it the hope of hovering round, and watching over our friends after we have left the body, as some teach? Methinks not. It is the hope of seeing Jesus and being made like him; of being free from sin and the power of the tempter; free from the cares and anxieties of this mortal life; free from sickness, and sorrow, pain and death; the hope of a resurrection if we should be laid in the grave. The word of God declares that the dead saints shall arise, clad in immortality and eternal life. Jesus said, "this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." John 6: 40. "How the dead will be raised we know not, but we know that they will rise, and we may rest assured that he who has revealed the fact, has both power and wisdom to accomplish it." "The resur rection body of every saint will resemble the glorified body of Jesus, which is now at the right hand of God, for we know, 'that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is.'" Yes, and we shall see our friends that have slept in Jesus, for them also will God bring with him. Praise his name forever. And shall we not know them? Those whom we have loved, who have loved the Lord, those whom we have had sweet fellowship with in serving our Master here; shall we not know them in a world of perfection? I believe we shall. The poet has it,—

"If our fellowship below,
In Jesus be so sweet,
What heights of rapture shall we know
When round his throne we meet."

Some will say that a knowledge of our friends at the left hand in the day of judgment, will destroy our happiness, and fill us with grief; but we shall doubtless have such views of the equity of the Judge that nothing will distress us that is done by him. All his works and ways will appear fit and proper, and we shall be ready to say, "It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good."

"Oh! who in such a world as this,
Could bear his lot of pain,
Did not one radiant hope of bliss
Unclouded, yet remain?
That hope the sovereign Lord has given,
Who reigns above the skies;
Hope, that unites the soul to heaven,
By faith's endearing ties."

May we all possess that hope which maketh not ashamed, which is an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, entering into that within the vail, whither our forerunner has for us entered.

Yours in the hope of the gospel,

E. GRANT.

MOURN NOT.

Mourning pilgrim, bound for Zion,
Sad, and lonely, and opprest,
Mourn not,—He whom ye rely on,
Soon will bring the promised rest.
Though the night be dark and dreary,
Every shade must soon recede;
Pilgrim, mourn not, land is near thee,
Morning dawns—the morn decreed.

Does the "din of war" alarm thee?
Have thy friends to battle hied?
Pilgrim, mourn not, what shall harm thee,
If by TRUTH thou dost abide?
Art thou bound for realms all glorious?
Do malicious foes pursue?
Rise on wings of faith victorious!
Christ will bring thee conqueror through.

O! decreased is thy number?
Are thy cherished ones laid low?
Do thy friends unconscious slumber?
Hath death claimed them?—is it so?
Hark! methinks some father's bending
O'er a form to him once dear;
See! the tears and smiles are blending,
As he views his sable bier.

Father, whence thy seeming pleasure?
Why do smiles adorn thy brow?
'Tis thy last, thine only treasure,
And the tomb awaits him now!
Hark! he speaketh: "Thou hast left me,
Yet I smile amid the gloom;
For 'tis God who hath bereft me,—
I'll submit to this my doom.

Well I know on that blest morning,
When adown the opening skies
Christ shall come, with bliss adorning
All around, He'll bid thee rise."
Prompted by such pure emotion,
E'en in grief will praises swell;
Bear me onward, restless ocean,
To those joys no tongue can tell.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE AFRICA.

SANDY HOOK, May 1—2.30 P. M.

The R. M. Steamship Africa, from Liverpool on the afternoon of Saturday, the 18th April, has just passed this Point.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Queen Victoria has safely given birth to another girl.

In the political world there was quite a lull.

A report prevailed that Napoleon intended to visit Algiers shortly.

Extravagant rumors of conspiracies in France still prevailed.

It was rumored that the four powers, wearied of the Neufchatel trifling, were about to impose terms on Turkey and Switzerland.

It is reaffirmed that France and England are mediating in the Spanish Mexican quarrel.

The Russian Government has sent extensive orders to the north-east ports this spring for iron screw steamers to be built for the Black Sea.

The income derived in Great Britain from the consumption of tobacco was, last year, upwards of £32,192,943, the duty on which was more than £5,220,000. This return is independent of cigars, which was about £150,000.

A FRENCH GUNPOWDER PLOT.—It is confidently stated that there really was ground for the rumor, that dangerous plots against the life nf Louis Napoleon were discovered recently, only at the last moment before the time appointed for their execution.—

"The Paris correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says—A plan did exist, not only for putting an end to the Emperor's life, but for committing murder wholesale, after the fashion of the gunpowder plot. The details have been confined, with comparatively wonderful secrecy to the people about the Tuileries and prefecture of police. The affair would seem to have been organized for some tolerably long while, and the moment of action was fixed for the first night that the court should visit the Theater Francais.—This theatre, situated at the end of the Rue Richelue, and annexed to the Palais Royal, is, for a greater part, built over a ground floor of shops. Most of these are occupied by tradesmen well known to the authorities; but in the narrow and somewhat dark passage, which runs from one entrance door of the theatre into the Palais Royal, there is a collection of small shops, one of which is unoccupied, and had escaped the notice of the police.

This line of shops lies immediately under the imperial box at the Theatre Francais, and this shop was accordingly hired by the individuals who meditated the attack I am going to relate. Little by little, and, as they hoped, unperceived, they had introduced combustibles of all sorts into this closed shop, which was thus representing Guy Fox's cellar. The day before the Emperor's visit, however, to the theatre, to witness the performance of "Fiamina," the locality being minutely examined, this shop excited attention, and the very day of the State visit it was opened, entered into, and the whole of what it contained was discovered, there was not a sufficient quantity of combustibles amassed to render the execution possible."

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

QUEBEC, May 4.

Steam propeller Indian, from Liverpool at 9 A. M., 23d ult., arrived at this port at thirty minutes past one this afternoon.

FRANCE.—The Grand Duke Constantine has arrived at Toulon, where he was received with the usual honors.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA AND THE PACIFIC.

WALKER IN A DESPERATE CONDITION.

NEW YORK, April 29.

Steamer Illinois, from Aspinwall on the evening of the 20th, arrived here this afternoon.

WSLKER'S AFFAIRS IN NICARAGUA.

The 20th of April was the day set by the Costa Ricans for the finishing attack upon Walker. The Costa Rican papers give a different version of the battle of the 5th of March, at Rivas. Walker, they say, at the head of 300 men was routed, with great loss of men, arms, and ammunition.

In the battle of the 16th, near San Jorge, 100 Fillibusters were killed, as stated by deserters from Walker's camp. The allies lost :5 killed, and 60 wounded.

At the last accounts, in the same papers, Gen. Mora held a position on the north and south sides of Rivas for four days, without much impression on either side.

A correspondence had taken place between the Costa Rican General Xatruch, and Capt. Davis, of the American sloop-of-war St. Mary's, in which the latter refused to interfere between the belligerents.

Costa Rican papers of April 8 contain letters from Gen. Morea to the Minister of War. He says Gen. Walker is shut up in the Plaza at Rivas, the Allies being entrenched within 400 yards of the lines. Walker and his men are subsisting on mule and dog flesh.

AN AMERICAN SLAVER TAKEN—DREADFUL REPORT.—Kingston, Ja., April.—An English man-of-war has carried into St. Anns an American schooner, from Africa for Cuba, with 378 slaves; 137 had died on the passage, and the remainder were in a starving condition. It was rumored that another slaver was off the coast, and a British steamer has started in pursuit.
